The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment he offered was rejected be reconsidered. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania objects.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the Senate voted 44 to 46 yesterday and rejected the amendment by which I proposed to add 10 percent to the income taxes for 1934 be reconsidered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BULOW (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BACHMAN], and in his absence withhold my vote.

Mr. CUTTING (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]. I am informed that on this question he would vote as I intend to vote, and, therefore, I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS (when Mr. DIETERICH's name was called). I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. DIETERICH] for the reason heretofore given, and say that I am authorized also to state that were he present he would vote "nay."

Mr. GORE (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea", and if the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] were present and voting he would vote "nay."

Mr. MURPHY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN], who is absent from the Chamber on important business. If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea", and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN], if present and voting, would vote "nay."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (when Mr. WHEELER's name was called). The senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is unavoidably absent on account of illness. He is paired with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] were present, he would vote "yea", and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] would vote "nay."

Mr. WHITE. On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FESS (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I understand, however, that if present he would vote as I have already voted. Therefore, I allow my vote to stand.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I wish to announce the following special pairs:

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK];

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]; and

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

If present and voting, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] would vote "nay", and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] would vote "yea."

Mr. WHITE. I do not know whether or not an announcement has been made, but I should like to have it appear in the RECORD that my colleague the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is necessarily absent.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. MCKELLAR. My colleague the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BACHMAN] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. Were he present, he would vote "nay" on this question.

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 35, as follows:

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS].

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I do not desire to consume much of the time of the Senate, because I think all Senators are familiar with the pending question. In view of the fact that there were 90 votes cast on yesterday, I think there is no Senator here who is not familiar with the question; but, in order to make sure, I will read the amendment so that there can be no misunderstanding. It provides for an increase of the tax for 1934 only. The amendment is as follows:

SEC. 14. Increase of tax for 1934: In the case of an individual the amount of tax payable for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1933, and prior to January 1, 1935, shall be 10 percent greater than the amount of tax which would be payable if computed without regard to this section, but after the application of the credit for foreign taxes provided in section 131, and the credit for taxes withheld at the source provided in section 32.

Mr. President, it is estimated by the Treasury officials that the tax proposed by my amendment will bring in $55,000,000 additional revenue. As I pointed out yesterday, we appropriated $950,000,000 for C.W.A. and welfare work, and the whole revenue bill, with my amendment added thereto, will not bring into the Treasury more than half the amount required for that purpose.

The tax provided for in the amendment ranges from 80 cents additional tax on the man with an income of $3,000 a year up to $57,000 on the man who has an income of a million dollars a year.

Mr. President, this additional tax cannot be construed as a hardship upon any taxpayer, and it will last for only 1 year; that limitation being made in order that we may see what the evolution of the recovery will be.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BULOW (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous roll call, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CUTTING (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]. I am informed that on this question he would vote in the same way that I shall vote. Therefore, I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. FESS. Making the same announcement that I made on the previous roll call with reference to my pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], I will say that I am advised that were he present he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore, I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GORE. I am paired with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF]. If he were present he would vote "nay." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea." I withhold my vote.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (when Mr. NORBECK's name was called). The senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. I understand from the announcement already made that I may transfer that pair to the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK]. I do so, and vote "yea."

I should also like to have the fact appear in the RECORD that my colleague the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is necessarily absent.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MURPHY. I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I make the same announcement as before concerning the pair of the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I wish to add that if the senior Senator from Montana were present he would vote "yea", and if the senior Senator from Maine were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. MCKELLAR. I make the same announcement that I have already made in regard to my colleague [Mr. BACHMAN]. If he were present he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I regret to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

I also wish to announce the following special pairs:

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], and

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

I also wish to state that if the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] were present they would vote "yea", and that if the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] were present they would vote "nay."

So the amendment of Mr. COUZENS was agreed to.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the pending bill beginning on page 221, line 12, to strike out all of section 603.

This amendment simply proposes to strike out the emergency Federal tax of 1 cent a gallon on gasoline. I propose the amendment at the request of the three national farm organizations, the National Grange, American Farm Bureau, and Farmers Union, all of whom have gone on record in favor of my amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CAPPER. I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the amendment of the Senator from Kansas is an amendment to a committee amendment which has heretofore been agreed to. In order that the Senator may be in order in offering his amendment it would be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to may be reconsidered for the purpose of enabling the Senator from Kansas to offer his amendment, because the Senator served notice some days ago that he wanted to offer the amendment.

Mr. CAPPER. I thank the Senator from Mississippi.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi? The Chair hears none, and the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to is reconsidered. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator a question so as to make plain the purpose of his amendment? As I understand, what he is trying to do is to strike out the 1 cent a gallon tax on gasoline?

Mr. CAPPER. That is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. In other words, the purpose is to strike out $151,000,000 of revenue?

Mr. CAPPER. It will amount to about $120,000,000, the Congress having already repealed half a cent of the tax.

Mr. HARRISON. A half cent of the tax has already been repealed, and that has gone into effect, but the experts say that this amendment, if adopted, will cost the Treasury $151,000,000. The provision as to the tax on gasoline, I may say to the Senator, in any event, will cease to be in effect on the 30th of June of next year, and, after that time, there will be no tax on gasoline, if the law shall remain as it is.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment and rid us of what I consider a discriminatory, unjust, and outrageous tax.

This tax was imposed as a temporary tax in the Revenue Act of 1932. It invades a field already too well occupied by the States. It lays an excessive tax on an already overtaxed source of State and local revenue. It is one of the worst examples of double taxation which we have.

It is my thought—and I believe it also is the belief of most Members of the Senate—that the gasoline tax should be reserved for State and local taxing units and should be devoted to highway construction and maintenance purposes. A fairly heavy tax, when used on the highways, can be justified.

But here we have this situation: Every State and the District of Columbia levies a gasoline tax. The tax ranges from 2 to 7 cents a gallon. That surely is a sufficiently heavy burden.

And consider, Mr. President, the tax plight of the motor-car owner and operator today. He is paying more than a billion dollars a year in Federal, State, and local taxes. The owners of motor vehicles are taxed annually somewhere around 25 percent of the total value of their property. Here is what they paid in taxes last year:

State gasoline taxes	$519,000,000
State license fees	300,000,000
Federal gasoline tax	181,000,000
Federal lubricants tax	22,000,000
Federal tax on cars and motor cycles	22,000,000
Federal tax on tires	28,000,000
Federal tax on parts	4,000,000
Federal tax on trucks	3,000,000

And in addition, of course, to these taxes on purchasing and operating motor vehicles, in most States they also are taxed as personal property.

More than a billion dollars a year special taxes on motor-car and truck owners and operators seems to me to be entirely too heavy a share of the tax burden, heavy as that is, and must of necessity be upon all our people.

Mr. President, it is my contention that the gasoline tax should be left to the States, and the States should use the proceeds from gasoline taxes for the construction and maintenance of highways. Carrying out that policy justifies gasoline taxes so high that they would be, and are, unjustifiable for any other purpose.

There is a limit to what the traffic will bear, Mr. President, and it seems to me we have passed that limit in the levying of taxes on gasoline. The average gasoline tax now amounts to a 30-percent sales tax. I repeat, it has become an outrageous tax, and I earnestly hope the amendment will be adopted, and the motorists of this country saved the $180,000,000 a year.

I submit, Mr. President, a statement from the National Grange through its Washington representative, Mr. Fred Brenckman, dated April 4, 1934, in which he says:

THE NATIONAL GRANGE,
Washington, D.C., April 4, 1934.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: At our last annual convention, held at Boise, Idaho, in November 1933, the National Grange adopted resolutions in opposition to Federal taxation of automobiles and gasoline. My personal contacts convince me that the position assumed by the Grange in this connection reflects the attitude of the rank and file of our 800,000 members in 34 States, who, as farmers, are already heavily overtaxed.

A number of States are now collecting a tax on gasoline amounting to 6 and 7 cents a gallon. High taxes on gasoline tend to increase the production costs of farmers and make prohibitive the use of automobiles and trucks in agricultural production.

Farmers are particularly concerned in this matter of a Federal gasoline tax, because they not only operate trucks and automobiles but stationary engines and tractors. Some States exempt from taxation gasoline that is used for stationary engines and tractors, while others do not.

When the first Federal tax on gasoline was enacted in 1932, we were given to understand that this was an emergency tax and would not be retained indefinitely. One of the arguments we used against the enactment of a general Federal sales tax (which also applies to the gasoline tax) was that because of its comparatively painless nature, once this type of taxation is resorted to, it is very difficult to replace it with more just taxation. This argument is being proven sound now by the reluctance of the Federal Government to terminate the Federal gas tax as it tacitly promised to do when it first adopted the gasoline tax as a method of raising revenue. The fact that a date for the termination of this tax was written into the 1932 act is clear evidence that it was looked upon as a temporary and emergency means of providing revenue for the Federal Government.

We, therefore, believe that the reenactment of a Federal gasoline tax is unjustified and uncalled for and that this field of taxation should be left to the States. The savings to the farmer which would accrue at the termination of the Federal gasoline tax would be an important item in the farmer's economic recovery.

Yours sincerely,

FRED BRENCKMAN,
Washington Representative.

I submit, Mr. President, and ask that it may be printed in the RECORD, a statement from the American Farm Bureau Federation. I will quote briefly from it as follows:

For 5 years the American Farm Bureau Federation has opposed at every opportunity the entrance of the Federal Government into the field of gasoline taxation. This tax is, comparatively speaking, a new source of revenue, and owing to the necessities in States in regard to securing more revenue the gas tax has been exploited beyond reasonable bounds. In addition to the State gasoline taxes many municipalities have added an additional but usually smaller tax so that the point of diminishing returns has almost been reached.

There was an argument 2 years ago which was used then by the advocates of the Federal tax on gasoline. That argument was the one which started the gasoline tax in the States and among our cities, namely, the Government needed the money. No doubt that was true, but one commodity in general use by most of our citizens should not be made to bear more than its just portion of taxes levied by various units of government. Consequently, the American Farm Bureau Federation took a position several years ago that the Federal Government should keep out of the gasoline-tax field. Now that the Government has entered this field the American Farm Bureau Federation maintains that it should retire from it wholly, should get this revenue from other sources, and should leave the gasoline tax mostly for State uses.

Then, Mr. President, I present a statement by the American Motorist Association, of Washington, D.C., being "A brief review of the arguments for repeal of the Federal gasoline tax collected from the records of Congress itself." I ask that, together with the statement from the Farm Bureau Federation, it may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the matters referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF THE AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION IN RE CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF THE REVENUE BILL, H.R. 7835

By Chester H. Gray, Washington representative, Mar. 17, 1934

I. TAX ON GASOLINE

For 5 years the American Farm Bureau Federation has opposed, at every opportunity, the entrance of the Federal Government into the field of gasoline taxation. This tax is, comparatively speaking, a new source of revenue and owing to the necessities in States in regard to securing more revenue the gas tax has been exploited beyond reasonable bounds. In addition to the State gasoline taxes many municipalities have added an additional but usually smaller tax so that the point of diminishing returns has almost been reached.

There was an argument 2 years ago which was used then by the advocates of the Federal tax on gasoline. That argument was the one which started the gasoline tax in the States and among our cities, namely, the Government needed the money. No doubt that was true; but one commodity in general use by most of our citizens should not be made to bear more than its just portion of taxes levied by various units of government. Consequently, the American Farm Bureau Federation took a position several years ago that the Federal Government should keep out of the gasoline tax field. Now that the Government has entered this field the American Farm Bureau Federation maintains that it should retire from it wholly, should get this revenue from other sources, and should leave the gasoline tax mostly for State uses.

One cannot consider the effects of a gasoline tax, heavy as that tax has come to be in most States, without realizing its correlated effects on the general use of the motor vehicle, whether for pleasure or profit. The cost of gasoline is naturally the biggest single factor making up the detail costs in the operation of a motor vehicle. The people of our Nation have built highways for use. The automobile industry is supplying us more vehicles of various kinds. The Federal Government should not now interfere with the joint use of motor vehicles and highways by adding to the cost of gasoline through the continued collection of a Federal tax thereon. Accordingly it is recommended that section 617 of H.R. 7835 be stricken from the measure, and as a result of such action by the Senate Committee on Finance the Federal Government will have retired from the gas-tax field.

II. TAX ON LUBRICATIONG OILS

For reasons which are similar to those presented by the American Farm Bureau Federation in favor of the Federal Government withdrawing from its imposition of taxes on gasoline, the federation also recommends that the tax on lubricating oils be discontinued in their operation under the present revenue act. Some who oppose this action state that the Government must have the money. A more sensible point of view, however, is to permit our citizens using greater quantities of lubricating oils, as well as of gasoline, so that in their daily transactions of business they may have a bigger turn-over and at least an increased prospective profit upon which to pay taxes.

The tax on lubricating oils has a tendency to curtail business development since the motor vehicle became permanent, and with such curtailment of business comes a general slowing down in the tax income of the Federal Government.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I offer a brief review of arguments for repeal of the Federal gasoline tax collected from the records of Congress itself by the American Motorists Association, of Washington, D.C.

I. The Federal gasoline tax originated in the Senate Finance Committee as a temporary measure, a budget-balancing expedient under the Revenue Act of 1932.

"This tax of 1 cent a gallon was imposed by the last Congress as emergency legislation to balance the Budget. I do not think it was the intention to make it permanent."—Chairman DOUGHTON, of House Ways and Means Committee.

"The Federal gasoline tax is a temporary measure."—House Subcommittee on Double Taxation.

"Your committee is of the opinion that the gasoline tax should be reserved for the States after June 30, 1934."—Senate Finance Committee, May 10, 1933.

II. The Federal gasoline tax invades a State tax field, diverting income from a source which supplies the States with nearly 40 percent of their tax revenue.

Memorials adopted by these State legislatures demand that the Federal Government withdraw from the field of gasoline taxation—Arkansas, Michigan, Mississippi, Montana, New York, Nevada, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Oregon, Ohio, South Dakota,—Records of hearings before Senate Finance Committee and House Ways and Means Committee.

III. The Federal gasoline tax constitutes double taxation. Gasoline taxes of 2 to 7 cents a gallon now are levied by every State and the District of Columbia.

"But even this does not represent the entire burden. Many of the counties and cities also impose additional gasoline taxes."—House Subcommittee on Double Taxation.

IV. The Federal gasoline tax, plus State gasoline taxes, makes the total tax on gasoline excessive in its relation to the price.

"The most heavily taxed commodity other than tobacco."—Representative VINSON.

"As a sales tax for general revenue purposes, it is outrageous."—Senator CAPPER.

The average retail price of gasoline in 1933 was 12.41 cents per gallon. The average of Federal and State taxes was 5.41 cents. This total represented a retail sales tax of 43.59 percent, a wholesale sales tax of more than 100 percent.

"It appears that the combined Federal, State, and local taxes imposed upon gasoline increase the sales price to the consumer from 30 percent to more than 100 percent."—House Subcommittee on Double Taxation.

V. The Federal gasoline tax is wrong in principle. Gasoline taxation was devised as a means of financing State highways.

"Such taxation should be left entirely within the province of the individual States."—Senator BYRD.

VI. The Federal gasoline tax violates tax justice by imposing an undue tax burden upon one necessary commodity. From 1918 through 1933 the Federal Government spent for highways $1,184,160,000 but derived in taxes upon gasoline, motor vehicles, oil, etc., $1,461,444,000.—Records of United States Department of Agriculture.

"If gasoline is classified as a necessity, as undoubtedly it must be in many cases, then the tax burden is unprecedentedly high for a necessity."—House Subcommittee on Double Taxation.

"I regard the Federal gasoline tax for general purposes as an unjust tax."—Senator CAPPER.

"In a country of great industries like this, it ought to be easy to distribute the burdens of taxation without making them anywhere bear too heavily or too exclusively upon any one set of persons or undertakings."—Woodrow Wilson.

VII. Excessive taxation of gasoline causes law violation and tax evasion.

"A very high rate of tax creates an incentive to evade, by bootlegging or otherwise, with a resulting loss of revenue to the States and competitive hardships to reputable distributors and dealers."—House Subcommittee on Double Taxation.

VIII. Excessive taxation of gasoline reduces consumption and thereby curtails tax revenues.

"There were declines in consumption in 1931 in all States having a gasoline tax rate of more than 2 cents per gallon. * * * It is evident that the rates are approaching the point of diminishing returns."—House Subcommittee on Double Taxation.

IX. The Federal Government now has other sources of revenue. The excuse for the Federal tax on gasoline was lack of substitute sources of revenue. Liquors and beer now provide lucrative revenue. Income from other Federal taxes is growing enormously.

X. The Federal gasoline tax adds to the tax burdens of the most heavily taxed taxpayer of the United States today—the owner of a motor vehicle. He is taxed annually about 27 percent of the value of his automotive property.

In 1933 he paid $519,000,000 State gasoline taxes, plus $300,000,000 State registration fees, plus $181,000,000 Federal gasoline taxes, plus $22,000,000 Federal lubricants taxes, plus $22,000,000 Federal tax on motor cars and cycles, plus $28,000,000 Federal tax on tires, plus $4,000,000 Federal tax on parts, plus $3,000,000 Federal tax on motor trucks, making, in total, a $1,000,000,000 plus motor tax bill.

XI. Repealing the Federal gasoline tax now would bring immediate and needed tax relief to more than 23,000,000 voting taxpayers, each the constituent of some Member of Congress.

MANY ORGANIZATIONS DECLARE FOR REPEAL

Mr. President, these, among other organizations representing millions of voting taxpayers, have filed their appeal for repeal of the Federal gasoline tax:

American Motorists Association, Automobile Club of Southern California, American Farm Bureau Federation, American Petroleum Industries Committee, American Petroleum Institute, American Trucking Associations, Inc., American Automobile Association, Chamber of Commerce of the United States, Farmers' National Union, Independent Petroleum Association of America, Keystone Automobile Club, Motor and Equipment Manufacturers' Association, National Association of Motor Bus Operators, National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, National Dairy Union, National Grange, National Highway Users' Conference, National Petroleum Association, National Rural Letter Carriers' Association, and hundreds of other national, State, county, and municipal organizations.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER]. Repeatedly, over the radio, we hear some propagandist advising the American people to write to your Senators and Congressmen to repeal the tax on gasoline. Like much of the propaganda which Senators and Representatives in Congress receive, this appeal tells less than half the truth. The whole truth is that no American who owns an automobile will object to any tax upon motor transportation if he knows that the money thus raised is to be actually expended for the construction and improvement of roads.

I am glad that this propaganda campaign has been ignored by the House of Representatives in the passage of this revenue measure. The Senate Committee on Finance, I am happy to say, has likewise remained unimpressed and recommends the continuance for another year of the 1-cent-per-gallon tax on gasoline.

There was never a more just tax than the gasoline tax, which will bring in $151,000,000 of revenue under the terms of this bill, provided Congress expends the money for Federal aid in the construction of highways. If the funds thus raised should be diverted to other uses, then no more unjust tax could possibly be levied.

What has happened with respect to such taxation and such expenditures? Congress last year appropriated $400,000,000 for an emergency highway construction program; and the money collected from the gasoline tax and the other taxes on motor transportation is liquidating that appropriation. I favor the retention of such taxes in this bill in order that Congress may be fully justified in carrying on an additional emergency highway program. The following table shows the items taxed and the revenue gained. The total amount for the next year is estimated to be $247,100,000. By improvements to insure collection and without change in the rates the Finance Committee estimates that $18,000,000 additional revenue will be produced. These are not new taxes, although, owing to administrative changes, the anticipated receipts from them are to be larger than ever.

Highway revenue items contained in table II, House committee report on revenue bill, 1934

Up to date the American motorists have more than paid the cost of all appropriations for highways made by the Congress of the United States. The original Federal-aid highway act was passed late in 1916. For the years from 1917 to March 1, 1934, collections from motor vehicles, as reported by the United States Bureau of Internal Revenue, have amounted to $1,502,584,784.96. For the same period Federal road expenditures, according to the records of the United States Bureau of Public Roads, have totaled $1,472,250,824.15. These are itemized by years in a tabulation which I shall print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Thus the Federal income from highway transportation sources since the establishment of Federal aid for good roads has exceeded the Federal expenditures for highways by $30,333,960.80, placing Federal highway building on a self-sustaining basis and in a unique position among Federal public works.

Highway work, of course, has been made a part of every broad public-works program, because highway construction fills an economic need in every State. More recently the chief reason has been its great employment-providing capacity. In employment volume per dollar expended, speed of preparation of plans, flexibility and variety of character, and universal application, highway work has proven superior to all forms of public construction enterprise. Added to these facts is now the additional one that the Federal investment in highways is not an expense. The funds are collected in their entirety from highway transportation sources.

In considering this revenue bill, which extends the Federal taxes upon highway transportation items, notice should be taken that the collection of these highway dollars imposes upon Congress an obligation for continued Federal participation in the road-building program of all the States. If those who use the roads are paying for them, the users should have more and better roads.

The tabulation to which I have referred is as follows:

Comparison of Federal-aid highway expenditures and Federal tax income from motor vehicles

[Income figures from records of U.S. Bureau of Internal Revenue. Expenditure figures from records of U.S. Bureau of Public Roads]

[1] Manufacturers' excise tax on automobiles, motorcycles and accessories and including for 1933 manufacturers' excise tax on gasoline, lubricating oils, tires, tubes, etc.
[2] 9-month period. Tax effective Oct. 4, 1917.
[3] 11-month period. Tax repealed May 29, 1928.
[4] To Mar. 1, 1934.
[5] This total includes all regular Federal-aid expenditures plus those made from the first emergency appropriation, the second emergency appropriation (Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932), and the Public Works highway funds. The total expenditures from these 3 emergency funds amounted to $230,860,543 to Mar. 1, 1934.

I can further illustrate what is now actually occurring by a brief quotation from a most excellent report recently made by Mr. Thomas H. MacDonald, Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads, to the Secretary of Agriculture. He said:

Attention is called to the self-liquidating character of highway construction. The highway user is very heavily taxed. The Bureau has in final preparation a study of the returns through taxation of the road used by the Federal, State, and local authorities. The returns to the Federal Treasury during the calendar year 1933, as reported by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, of taxes levied directly upon the road user and indirectly through sales taxes, show that the payments into the Federal Treasury totaled $257,217,517. At this rate the $400,000,000 set aside for highway construction will be returned from these sources to the Federal Treasury within the period that the funds are actually paid out.

In other words, it will take nearly 2 years to expend the $400,000,000 which was appropriated by Congress for Federal aid to highways, and within the 2 years there will have been collected, if the gasoline tax is retained, enough money to pay for the entire emergency road program. If the taxes are to be continued, the road appropriations should be continued. There is no escape from the conclusion that in order to allow ample time for the orderly preparation of plans and the starting of new projects by the States without an unwarranted halt in highway operations, it will be necessary for Congress, at this session, to make an additional highway appropriation.

Senators should keep these facts in mind:

First. That the Federal highway program, since its inception in 1916, has been paid for directly by the motoring public.

Second. That highway building offers the greatest employment advantages of all public works; and Third. That the highway revenue items contained in this bill constitute a responsibility to the motoring public for continued Federal participation in highway building.

Highway improvement is a dynamic and continuing responsibility. Highways either grow worse or better. They cannot stand still with 25,000,000 vehicles in daily operation. The annual program of highway replacements, repairs, and maintenance must be continued on a large scale if adequate highway service is to be preserved and if there is not to be great waste in depreciation of highways which are carrying more traffic than they were designed to serve. There must also be new construction to meet new needs.

I doubt if there is a Senator present who does not realize that it is absolutely essential that Federal highway appropriations be continued. Congress appropriated the $400,000,000 a year ago. There was considerable delay in starting the construction program, but by next summer there will actually be employed on the roads, in June and July, in highway construction, over 500,000 men. Counting a man and a half behind the man on the job, more than a million men will be benefited by the appropriation. If nothing is done in the fall, the work will diminish; and by December a million men who were at work will be again unemployed.

If the Federal highway-construction program is continued for another year, Congress should provide these taxes to pay for it. When the man who owns a passenger car or a truck knows that every cent of the tax he pays on a gallon of gasoline is to be spent on the roads, he will not object.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. LONG. The argument the Senator is making for gasoline taxes is very sound. I have advocated that in my State. The United States does not have to get its money that way. The United States can get its money by taxes on those best able to pay. Of course in the States it is a different matter, because they have no other way to get the money.

Mr. HAYDEN. The fact is that the Federal Government, as I have pointed out, has collected from the road-using public an amount of money equal to the amount it has expended on the roads and is doing so right now. I want to be sure that the Federal highway program is continued not by earmarking the appropriation directly, but the practical effect is that if Congress continues the tax, then we have an unanswerable argument in favor of the continuation of the road-construction program. I have yet to talk to any man who travels over the roads who would object to a tax if the money is expended on the roads. What has happened is that the States became desperate through the failure of their efforts to collect property taxes and have consequently robbed their gasoline-tax funds and diverted the money to other uses. By reason of such diversion to other than highway uses, the motorist has just cause for violent protest.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BYRD in the chair). Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I want to ask the Senator from Arizona what is the present status of the appropriations for road building during the coming year.

Mr. HAYDEN. The present status is that the Committee on Roads of the House of Representatives has favorably reported a bill authorizing that the road program, which was provided as an emergency last summer, be repeated for another year. That committee recommends that another $400,000,000 of Federal aid to the States be appropriated. I have good reason to believe, from contacts I have had at the other end of the Capitol, that such a program will be carried out either by the enactment of authorizing legislation or by earmarking a similar sum for similar purposes in any Public Works appropriation that shall be made. What I am asking the Senate to do is not to give any Member of either branch of the Congress an excuse to vote against or to fail to support the continuation of such a road-construction program by taking out of this revenue bill the taxes necessary to fully meet the cost of that program.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand the situation to be that over a number of years we have been appropriating $75,000,000 to $125,000,000 annually out of the Federal Treasury for cooperation with the States in the highway-building program. Last year we appropriated $400,000,000, which was not required to be matched by the States. That was a gift by the Federal Government to the States. That $400,000,000 amounts to nearly as much as will be collected from the gasoline tax during the next 3 years. We have, therefore, appropriated for highways, to be paid out of the Federal Treasury without being matched by the States, more than enough money to offset the gasoline tax for a period of about 2½ years.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator should not forget that the motorist is also taxed, as estimated in the report accompanying this bill, $25,000,000 on lubricating oil, $26,000,000 on tires and tubes, $3,000,000 on trucks, and $34,000,000 on automobiles. The total amount of money to be brought in from the several sources is $247,000,000, of which $151,000,000 is the gasoline tax.

Mr. BARKLEY. It takes the entire tax on gasoline and motor oils and the other items for nearly 2 years to make up enough money to match the $400,000,000 we appropriated last year for roads.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; but as it will take about 2 years to spend the money, the entire sum will be liquidated by the time it is expended.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the amendment is adopted and the $151,000,000 is eliminated, is there any assurance or any hope that we may be able to continue the road-building program, as it has been in operation during the last year or two, out of the Federal Treasury?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is quite certain that if we do not provide the revenue, the natural impulse will be to say, "Congress refused to levy the necessary taxes to carry on this work, so evidently Congress does not want it done", and consequently there will be no recommendation, through the Budget or elsewhere, for a continuation of Federal aid for highways.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, we propose to seek to continue the road work beyond the expenditure of the $400,000,000 already appropriated, and I understand it is expected that a similar amount will be requested before Congress adjourns. But if we take away from the Treasury $151,000,000 of gasoline tax that goes to the building of highways, we certainly will have no reasonable hope that we can obtain a similar appropriation for road building in the future.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator is eminently correct.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. CAPPER. Is there anything in the revenue bill which compels the use of the tax money from gasoline sources to be used for road-building purposes?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; there is not.

Mr. CAPPER. Then, so far as the future highway program is concerned, it makes no difference what we do here today. The Federal highway appropriation will come out of the general revenues of the Government, regardless of our action on the gasoline tax.

Mr. HAYDEN. It has rarely been the custom of Congress to designate the receipts from certain taxes for expenditure in a certain manner, but we can take into consideration the fact, particularly in this case, that we know the taxpayer will not complain if the money is used for highway construction. He will vigorously protest if it is not. It gives us the very best of arguments, as the Senator from Kentucky has so well pointed out, if the gasoline tax is continued in this bill.

Let me add another thought. What we should do is to continue the emergency road appropriation just as we did last year, carrying it for 1 year more, and at the same time we should look ahead for at least 2 years more and authorize the regular annual Federal-aid appropriation of $125,000,000 so that the State legislatures, when they meet in their sessions, will know that the Federal Government is going to continue its established road policy and therefore will not divert the gasoline tax to other uses. So long as Congress does not lay down a definite road program which the States can rely upon for a period ahead, the State legislatures desperate as they are for revenue, will say, "We do not know what the Federal Government will do. Therefore we are justified in diverting the gasoline tax to other than highway purposes."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I thoroughly agree with the Senator, as he has observed, that the policy of the Federal Government in making these larger appropriations has caused State after State to divert the State gasoline tax for purposes other than road building. In the long run the roads are really having spent upon them less money for construction than they had when the Federal Government required the States to match the Federal appropriations. If this policy is continued and the Federal Government appropriates large sums by way of grants to the States, and permits the States to use their license and automobile taxes for purposes other than highway construction, it will result in the function of the building of highways becoming thoroughly and purely a Federal function, and the enormous taxes paid on gasoline and oil to the States will not be used for that purpose at all.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the observations of the Senator from Georgia are particularly sound; and, so far as I am concerned, I would advocate a provision in any act with respect to regular Federal aid that if any State thereafter diverts its gasoline tax to other uses, such State could not obtain the benefits of the Federal grant. Congress should protect the motorist by seeing to it that the tax money he pays when he buys gasoline is expended solely on the roads.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it seems to me that situation will be taken care of when we get by the emergency appropriations which we made for highways, and which we realized the States could not match. When we get out of the emergency and get back on the even keel of annual appropriations, we shall then do as we have always done heretofore, require the States to match that money, dollar for dollar, so that they cannot divert money from their road funds to such an extent that they cannot match the Federal appropriations.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, we have heard much talk recently about the depression in capital-goods industries and the necessity for stimulating them. Let me tell the Senate what I think would accomplish fine results in that regard. If Congress shall lay down a highway program for 3 years ahead of time, the effect would be that instead of using old second-hand concrete mixers and other equipment that has been kept together by scrap iron and baling wire, as the contractors have been doing, many new machines would be promptly bought.

There have been practically no new purchases of road-construction equipment in the United States for the past 4 years. Why? Because neither the State that lets the contracts nor the contractor who does the work has known what to expect. If Congress authorizes and does it promptly, a highway program over the next 3 years, we shall see surprisingly large purchases of all sorts of road-making machinery.

I was recently told of a highway contractor in New England who normally charging off $200,000 to depreciation and buying $200,000 worth of new machinery a year was inquiring whether he should buy $36,000 worth of equipment. He was asked, "Why do you make such a inquiry?" and his answer was "because I do not know what the future of road building is in the United States." If Congress will lay out a road program, that contractor will be back in the capital-goods market buying as he did before.

I have been told that there have not been more than about 20 new concrete mixers sold to road contractors in the whole United States during the past year for use in connection with their work. Make road building a stabilized industry, let the country know that the Congress is for good roads, that it intends to provide the funds, as in this bill, to carry out a national highway program, and the purchases of new road-building equipment will be surprising.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. But if this amendment should be adopted, and $151,000,000 of revenue should be done away with, and thereafter no Federal money for roads should be given this year, it would be an incalculable blow to the roads of the country, would it not?

Mr. HAYDEN. There is no question about that, Mr. President.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have advocated such gasoline taxes in my State for road purposes, and even for educational purposes; and I desire to state in the RECORD why I do not support this amendment in the Senate.

This gasoline-tax provision necessarily taxes the poor man. He must pay about 95 percent of the tax. That is also true of gasoline taxes in the States; but the gasoline tax in the States is necessary because it is the only way the States can raise money. The only way roads can be built in a State with State money is to get the money from gasoline taxes because the State has no other way of getting it.

In the Congress of the United States, however, we do not have to tax the poor. We do not have to lay a single dime of taxation on the poor man in the Congress of the United States; and we would do a good thing if we in Congress did not put a tax on candy, or a tax on gasoline, or a tax on anything that goes on the back of the poor man because we do not have to do it; and every time we do it, we add to the fact that we are permitting taxes to be avoided by those who are best able to bear them. Therefore, since I have been in Congress I have opposed the imposition by Congress of taxes of this kind that must of necessity go on the backs of the poor people.

If Congress had to raise its revenue in this manner, I should say we would have to vote it. Congress does not have to raise its revenue from sales taxes, however. Congress ought not to levy any kind or form of sales taxes on the necessities of life, such as gasoline is. While I would favor the levying of this tax by a State for road purposes, I oppose its being levied by the United States.

I desire to disillusion my friend from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN]. He thinks he is helping the States, but he is not. The State government of Louisiana or the State government of Arizona could put a 1-cent tax on gasoline tomorrow, if it wanted to, and get this money, without having to beg Washington to send it to the State, and we could omit this tax. Even assuming that the money is sent to the States, and we have to beg to have it sent to us, and bow low and scrape the earth, as we all know, to the departments in Washington to get them to do it, they would not send Indiana or Oregon any more money than the State of Oregon or the State of Indiana would get if it levied a 1-cent tax itself.

Congress does not need to put a 1-cent tax on gasoline to give the several States any of the gasoline-tax money. If Arizona wants a revenue of 1 cent a gallon from a tax on gasoline, the Arizona Legislature can enact its own law and raise the same amount of money. We do not have to legislate to get revenue to send to a State when we are taxing something that the State itself might tax. It would be better to let the State say whether it wants to levy a 1-cent tax on gasoline to get the amount of money that it derives from that source than to have Congress levy a tax on gasoline in order that it may send it to the State.

It may be that the State of New York does not want a 1-cent gasoline tax. It may be that the people of New York would not want to have such a tax levied by their own legislature; but we here in Congress are levying a tax upon the people of New York in order to send that amount of money to the State of New York whether the New York State Legislature wants that kind of tax or not. So we are going into the field of taxation that belongs to the States, and we are levying taxes upon the little man that must be paid by the poor man, whereas that kind and form of taxes should be left entirely to be preempted by the States that have not the means that the Congress has of taxing the rich, and pulling down swollen fortunes to support the Government.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, the Senator refers to the poor man paying the gasoline tax. At least the poor man would have to have an automobile in which to use gasoline if he paid part of the tax.

Mr. LONG. Oh, nearly all poor people have some kind of an old flivver. Nearly everybody in the United States, thank God, has some old kind of a one-lung automobile left. That is about all some of them have. I do not know many persons who, if they do not own machines themselves, have not brothers or brothers-in-law or somebody else who will lend them some kind of old flivver to run around with. That is about the only thing that the poor man universally has left today; and the possession of an automobile does not mean that you have anything. You can get one for $10.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not desire to consume the time of the Senate, except to make a very brief suggestion.

Of course, we are all interested in what the Senator from Louisiana calls the poor man. We have our full proportion of poor people in my State, and I am just as much interested in them as I am sure the Senator from Louisiana is in the poor people in his State. It was really to relieve some of these poor people that the $400,000,000 road fund was created in the first place, to give employment to some of the poor people in all the States of the Union.

We all realize that when the Federal gasoline tax was levied it was levied as an absolute necessity. The Finance Committee, in an effort to balance the ordinary Budget when the tax law was imposed in 1932, had with a fine-tooth comb searched every crevice and crack and cranny in the United States to find enough money to do it. When we got through with everything else we found ourselves about $151,000,000 shy, and it was because of that fact that the Federal gasoline tax was levied in order to make up the deficit. Subsequently we appropriated $400,000,000 to be given to the States without any obligation on their part except to spend it for the purpose of building highways, because we wanted to give work to unemployed men in this country; and we realized that the expenditure of $400,000,000 in building highways not only gave men work, but it brought about a permanent improvement in the construction of highways.

If I had to take my choice between spending $400,000,000 to build highways out of the Public Treasury and spending $400,000,000 to employ men to sweep the highways or do some of the other things that we have been compelled to do in order to tide over this winter, I should infinitely prefer to spend it in building highways, which will not be blown away by a passing wind, but are a permanent improvement.

It may be that because of the inability to collect taxes from property, and for other reasons, some of the States have diverted some of the regular road money into ordinary channels during the depression, while this $400,000,000 was being spent out of the Federal Treasury to build highways; but that is only a temporary situation, and it has been brought about by the very same condition that made it necessary in the beginning for us to levy this tax and to appropriate the $400,000,000. I have no doubt that any State which has diverted any of this money will reappropriate it for public highways when we pass beyond the emergency, and get back to the normal relationship of the States and the Federal Government in building highways. I am as certain as that I am standing on the floor of the Senate that if at this time we eliminate this $151,000,000 tax—which will be eliminated automatically on the 1st of July a year from now—we shall make it practically impossible to secure any additional funds for permanent highways and the employment of hundreds of thousands of people who are now unemployed or will be unemployed unless we continue these highway-system activities.

For that reason especially, Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] will not be agreed to.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, there is not one word in the bill as it comes from the Finance Committee which shows that the highway-improvement program depends in any way upon this tax on gasoline. The adoption of my amendment will not in any way interfere with the highway program to be authorized by future appropriations.

I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] to the amendment of the committee. Upon that the yeas and nays are demanded. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Couzens	Kean	Reynolds
Ashurst	Cutting	Keyes	Robinson, Ark.
Bailey	Davis	King	Robinson, Ind.
Bankhead	Dickinson	La Follette	Russell
Barbour	Duffy	Lewis	Schall
Barkley	Erickson	Logan	Sheppard
Black	Fess	Lonergan	Shipstead
Bone	Fletcher	Long	Smith
Borah	Frazier	McAdoo	Steiwer
Brown	George	McCarran	Stephens
Bulkley	Gibson	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Goldsborough	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Byrd	Gore	McNary	Thompson
Byrnes	Harrison	Murphy	Townsend
Capper	Hastings	Neely	Vandenberg
Carey	Hatch	Norris	Van Nuys
Clark	Hatfield	Nye	Wagner
Connally	Hayden	O'Mahoney	Walcott
Copeland	Hebert	Patterson	Walsh
Costigan	Johnson	Reed

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] to the committee amendment.

Mr. CAPPER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CUTTING (when his name was called). I have a pair for the day with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I refrain from voting.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce that I am authorized by my colleague [Mr. DIETERICH] to say that if he were present and voting he would vote "nay."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have been requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] and to state that if he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. FESS (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. FESS. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia and am not advised as to how he would vote, if present. Therefore, I think it well to withdraw my vote.

Mr. MCKELLAR. My colleague the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BACHMAN] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. I regret to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

I also wish to announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN].

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 46, as follows:

YEAS—29

Barbour	Copeland	Long	Russell
Bone	Davis	McAdoo	Schall
Borah	Erickson	McGill	Steiwer
Bulow	Frazier	Nye	Thomas, Okla.
Byrd	Gore	Patterson	Walcott
Capper	Hatfield	Reed
Carey	Kean	Reynolds
Connally	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.

NAYS—46

Adams	Fletcher	Lewis	Sheppard
Ashurst	George	Logan	Shipstead
Bailey	Gibson	Lonergan	Smith
Bankhead	Goldsborough	McCarran	Stephens
Barkley	Harrison	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Bulkley	Hastings	McNary	Thompson
Byrnes	Hatch	Murphy	Townsend
Clark	Hayden	Neely	Van Nuys
Costigan	Hebert	Norris	Wagner
Couzens	Johnson	O'Mahoney	Walsh

NOT VOTING—21

Austin	Cutting	Metcalf	Vandenberg
Bachman	Dieterich	Norbeck	Wheeler
Black	Dill	Overton	White
Brown	Fess	Pittman
Caraway	Glass	Trammell
Coolidge	Hale	Tydings

So Mr. CAPPER's amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 221, line 21, it is proposed to strike out the words "1 cent" and insert in lieu thereof "one half of 1 cent."

Mr. CAPPER. The reduction is one half of 1 cent. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 112, line 13, it is proposed to add to section 141 (c) the following:

Provided, however, That the additional rate of 2 percent shall not apply to corporations which are common carriers by railroad, their affiliated and/or leased corporations for the years 1934, 1935, and 1936.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I can explain the purport of this amendment in a moment. Under the bill as it stands a penalty of 2-percent additional tax is imposed upon corporations filing what is called a consolidated return, that is consolidating into a single return the income and the expenses of the whole group of affiliated companies.

A railroad under State laws is required in many cases to incorporate in each State. Thus the Southern Pacific Co. has to have the Southern Pacific Railway in Texas incorporated in Texas, and the same thing is true in several other States through which its line passes. It is not a matter of choice for the railroads, but it is a matter of imperative necessity under the State laws for them to have these subsidiary companies. It is very difficult to keep the returns of those different companies separate.

The Interstate Commerce Commission requires consolidated accounting and if the return is made in the form required by the Interstate Commerce Commission it fits right into the penalty imposed by this act.

I realize there is no use arguing against the imposition of a penalty upon the average concern adopting this method of accounting, but it seems to me that in the case of the large railroads it is unjustifiable to attach the penalty for what the State laws require them to do.

In my own State of Pennsylvania, for example, a railroad company which wants to insure a supply of water for its locomotives and which has to bring it from a distance on its line, in order to obtain power to construct its pipe line across the country has to incorporate a water company and use its powers of eminent domain in laying its pipe lines. The railroad does not have power to do that. It is imperative that they have the power, and the method I have described is the only method by which they can get it. It seems unfair to impose this penalty for doing a perfectly legitimate act which is not only permitted by the laws but required under the laws of the various States.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I understand the Senator is proposing to except from this penalty, as he calls it, certain railroads?

Mr. REED. All railroads.

Mr. BORAH. For instance, the Pennsylvania Co. is a holding company.

Mr. REED. No; it is an operating company.

Mr. BORAH. It is also a holding company.

Mr. REED. It is a holding company in the sense that it owns the stock of these other companies. I know nothing much about the Pennsylvania Co. I have no interest in it. I do not represent it.

Mr. BORAH. I did not mention the Pennsylvania because the Senator from Pennsylvania was discussing the subject, but in looking up this subject I ran across, as an illustration, the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., which is a holding company, and holds the stock of a number of smaller companies.

Mr. REED. That is right.

Mr. BORAH. Now certainly that company ought not to be permitted to step from under the penalty, as we call it.

Mr. REED. I think it should, because it is required by State law to have these subsidiary companies, in many cases.

Mr. BORAH. It undoubtedly would have them if the State law did not require it, in many cases.

Mr. REED. In that case I should not propose the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. That is the difficulty with the amendment. The Senator includes in his amendment all railroads, and there are companies which are purely holding companies, and there is no necessity of them being so by reason of the State law.

Mr. REED. If the company were purely a holding company it would not have any advantage under this amendment. I have read, in this connection, of the organization of a concern called the Chesapeake Corporation, which I believe was organized to hold stock in a number of railroads, but it is not a railway company. It would not get any advantage from this amendment. I would not want it to.

Mr. BORAH. That particular company might not, but there are railroad companies which pass as railroad companies which are holding companies.

Mr. REED. In that case they would not get any benefit, if they are purely holding companies, and I would not want them to get any benefit.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand it, the Pennsylvania Co. is a railroad company, but it is also a holding company.

Mr. REED. I think it owns stock in other roads; yes.

Mr. BORAH. It owns all the stock in some of the other railroads.

Mr. REED. That is right. That is the same thing as making a common enterprise of it.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely; but I do not see why a railroad situated as that railroad is should not pay the penalty if other holding companies pay the penalty.

Mr. REED. It seems to me there is a clear distinction in the fact that the State laws require them to be holding companies. The Senator would not want to see the Southern Pacific broken up into short chunks across each State.

Mr. BORAH. No; and there is not a particle of danger of the Southern Pacific being broken up by a 2-percent penalty, because it derives too great an advantage out of the fact that it may make consolidated returns.

Mr. REED. I do not think so.

Mr. BORAH. The experts tell me that we are losing something like $300,000,000 of taxes by reason of these consolidated returns.

Mr. REED. I think they are due, however, to receive a great disillusionment. I think this 2-percent penalty is going to do away with the business of filing of consolidated returns, and they will find we are not losing what they think we are.

Mr. BORAH. It is assumed that the 2-percent tax will possibly prevent some consolidated returns and will bring about some separate returns. But by no means, in my judgment, will it effectuate a complete change, so we will not be losing a great amount of taxes which are far more just than other taxes imposed.

Let me call the Senator's attention to something I observed in the RECORD today. This appears in the House debate of April 9:

Mr. MCFARLANE. We find that the Bendix Aviation Corporation has saved, through the filing of consolidated returns, and in the change of income-tax laws which have been changed since the law of 1918, the sum of $625,863.49 in money they would have been required to pay to the Government had the law not been changed and had they been required to file separate returns rather than consolidated returns.

The Curtiss-Wright Corporation saved $101,709.31 in the same way. The North American, or the General Motors Corporation, has saved $150,980.75. United Aircraft & Transport Corporation has saved $854,959.29. The Aviation Corporation of America has saved $313,454.44. These five holding corporations have saved primarily on Government contracts through the filing of consolidated returns $2,046,967.28.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator understand, when he says the companies have saved so much in taxes, that, after all, these concerns are one consolidated enterprise? Consolidated returns cannot be filed unless the parent company owns 95 percent of the stock in the subsidiary. It is all one consolidated enterprise, and if it loses in one shop, why should it not set off those losses against the profits in another shop?

Mr. BORAH. The individual corporations, in making such returns, have no such benefit.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes; I beg the Senator's pardon. Take the Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. It has shops in all this broad land. In some of those shops it makes a profit; in others it makes a loss. It certainly subtracts the losses from the profits before it pays the tax.

Mr. BORAH. I admit that; but what I am saying is that they get that advantage because a single corporation making those returns cannot offset anything.

Mr. REED. But that is a single corporation owning a great many stores. The Senator would not want them to pay taxes on stores that make money and ignore entirely the losses they sustain in the other stores?

Mr. BORAH. My contention is that each corporation should make its separate return, and then it would be upon a level with all other corporations. These holding companies are not organized for eleemosynary purposes. They are organized for business, for gains, for profits, and they make vast gains, they make vast profits. Why should they not make separate returns?

Mr. REED. It adds very much to the accounting. I think the Senator will find when it is all over that he has abolished a practice that saves the Government a great deal of clerical work, and in the long run its abolition will not bring in a cent of additional tax.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator's amendment reads "that the additional rate of 2 percent shall not apply to corporations which are common carriers by railroad, their affiliated and/or leased corporations for the years", and so forth. In other words, if the United States Steel Corporation had many subsidiaries, among them being a railroad, they could file a consolidated return under the provision of the Senator's amendment and be exempt from the 2-percent tax?

Mr. REED. Not at all.

Mr. HARRISON. Or if a railroad had as a subsidiary a big hotel, or many hotels, under this provision they would be exempt from the tax. I think the Senator is going quite too far.

Mr. REED. I feel quite sure this amendment would not authorize the Steel Corporation to do what the Senator has said.

Mr. HARRISON. That is the way it reads, "affiliated or leased corporations."

Mr. REED. The Steel Corporation is not a common carrier by railway.

Mr. HARRISON. The railroad would be, but the other concerns are not.

Mr. REED. The concern that owns the railroad would not get the benefit of this provision. This applies only in case the railroad owns some other business. The railroad has to be the owner, as I interpret the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. As I interpret it, it would have to apply to the group as the holder of the common carrier and affiliated organizations, whether railroads or what not.

Mr. REED. No; that is not intended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senate to discuss the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, but merely to state that the Finance Committee considered the question and declined to make an exception of the railroads. I think it was largely on the theory that it is wholly optional with the taxpayer whether he makes a consolidated return or an individual return. If the corporations do not make any money to justify the making of a consolidated return, they may be relied upon to make individual returns; so they are not penalized by this provision unless at their own option.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee which has been passed over.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 196, line 13, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 405. Estate tax rates: (a) The last 14 paragraphs of section 401 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1932 are amended to read as follows:

"$126,000 upon net estates of $1,000,000; and upon net estates in excess of $1,000,000 and not in excess of $1,500,000, 20 percent in addition of such excess.

"$226,000 upon net estates of $1,500,000; and upon net estates in excess of $1,500,000 and not in excess of $2,000,000, 22 percent in addition of such excess.

"$336,000 upon net estates of $2,000,000; and upon net estates in excess of $2,000,000 and not in excess of $2,500,000, 25 percent in addition of such excess.

"$461,000 upon net estates of $2,500,000; and upon net estates in excess of $2,500,000 and not in excess of $3,000,000, 27 percent in addition of such excess.

"$596,000 upon net estates of $3,000,000; and upon net estates in excess of $3,000,000 and not in excess of $3,500,000, 30 percent in addition of such excess.

"$746,000 upon net estates of $3,500,000; and upon net estates in excess of $3,500,000 and not in excess of $4,000,000, 32 percent in addition of such excess.

"$906,000 upon net estates of $4,000,000; and upon net estates in excess of $4,000,000 and not in excess of $4,500,000, 35 percent in addition of such excess.

"$1,081,000 upon net estates of $4,500,000; and upon net estates in excess of $4,500,000 and not in excess of $5,000,000, 37 percent in addition of such excess.

"$1,266,000 upon net estates of $5,000,000; and upon net estates in excess of $5,000,000 and not in excess of $6,000,000, 40 percent in addition of such excess.

"$1,666,000 upon net estates of $6,000,000; and upon net estates in excess of $6,000,000 and not in excess of $7,000,000, 42 percent in addition of such excess.

"$2,086,000 upon net estates of $7,000,000; and upon net estates in excess of $7,000,000 and not in excess of $8,000,000, 44 percent in addition of such excess.

"$2,526,000 upon net estates of $8,000,000; and upon net estates in excess of $8,000,000 and not in excess of $9,000,000, 46 percent in addition of such excess.

"$2,986,000 upon net estates of $9,000,000; and upon net estates in excess of $9,000,000 and not in excess of $10,000,000, 48 percent in addition of such excess.

"$3,466,000 upon net estates of $10,000,000; and upon net estates in excess of $10,000,000, 50 percent in addition of such excess."

(b) The amendments made by this section shall be effective only with respect to transfers of estates of decedents dying after the date of the enactment of this act.

SEC. 406. Nondeductibility of certain transfers: Section 303 (a) (3) and section 303 (b) (3) of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, are amended by inserting after "individual", wherever appearing therein, a comma and the following: "and no substantial part of the activities of which is participation in partisan politics or is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting, to influence legislation."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, does the Senator from Mississippi desire to have me proceed with a discussion of the estate-tax rates this evening?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that I have read the amendment which he intends to submit, and while I have no authority to speak for the committee, yet, personally, I shall vote for his amendment and hope it may be adopted. I do not see why we cannot have a vote on it tonight.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then, I offer my amendment at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin offers an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the committee amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lieu of the committee amendment, beginning on page 196, line 13, estate-tax rates, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 404. Estate tax rates: (a) Section 401 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1932 is amended to read as follows:

"(b) The tentative tax referred to in subsection (a) (1) of this section shall equal the sum of the following percentages of the value of the net estate:

"Upon net estates not in excess of $20,000, 1 percent.

"$200 upon net estates of $20,000; and upon net estates in excess of $20,000 and not in excess of $30,000, 2 percent in addition of such excess.

"$400 upon net estates of $30,000; and upon net estates in excess of $30,000 and not in excess of $40,000, 3 percent in addition of such excess.

"$700 upon net estates of $40,000; and upon net estates in excess of $40,000 and not in excess of $50,000, 4 percent in addition of such excess.

"$1,100 upon net estates of $50,000; and upon net estates in excess of $50,000 and not in excess of $60,000, 5 percent in addition of such excess.

"$1,600 upon net estates of $60,000; and upon net estates in excess of $60,000 and not in excess of $80,000, 7 percent in addition of such excess.

"$3,000 upon net estates of $80,000; and upon net estates in excess of $80,000 and not in excess of $100,000, 9 percent in addition of such excess.

"$4,800 upon net estates of $100,000; and upon net estates in excess of $100,000 and not in excess of $200,000, 12 percent in addition of such excess.

"$16,800 upon net estates of $200,000; and upon net estates in excess of $200,000 and not in excess of $400,000, 16 percent in addition of such excess.

"$48,800 upon net estates of $400,000; and upon net estates in excess of $400,000 and not in excess of $600,000, 19 percent in addition of such excess.

"$86,800 upon net estates of $600,000; and upon net estates in excess of $600,000 and not in excess of $800,000, 22 percent in addition of such excess.

"$130,800 upon net estates of $800,000; and upon net estates in excess of $800,000 and not in excess of $1,000,000, 25 percent in addition of such excess.

"$180,800 upon net estates of $1,000,000; and upon net estates in excess of $1,000,000 and not in excess of $1,500,000, 28 percent in addition of such excess.

"$320,800 upon net estates of $1,500,000; and upon net estates in excess of $1,500,000 and not in excess of $2,000,000, 31 percent in addition of such excess.

"$475,800 upon net estates of $2,000,000; and upon net estates in excess of $2,000,000 and not in excess of $2,500,000, 34 percent in addition of such excess.

"$645,800 upon net estates of $2,500,000; and upon net estates in excess of $2,500,000 and not in excess of $3,000,000, 37 percent in addition of such excess.

"$830,800 upon net estates of $3,000,000; and upon net estates in excess of $3,000,000 and not in excess of $3,500,000, 40 percent in addition of such excess.

"$1,030,800 upon net estates of $3,500,000; and upon net estates in excess of $3,500,000 and not in excess of $4,000,000, 43 percent in addition of such excess.

"$1,245,800 upon net estates of $4,000,000; and upon net estates in excess of $4,000,000 and not in excess of $4,500,000, 46 percent in addition of such excess.

"$1,475,800 upon net estates of $4,500,000; and upon net estates in excess of $4,500,000 and not in excess of $5,000,000, 48 percent in addition of such excess.

"$1,715,800 upon net estates of $5,000,000; and upon net estates in excess of $5,000,000 and not in excess of $6,000,000, 50 percent in addition of such excess.

"$2,215,800 upon net estates of $6,000,000; and upon net estates in excess of $6,000,000 and not in excess of $7,000,000, 52 percent in addition of such excess.

"$2,735,800 upon net estates of $7,000,000; and upon net estates in excess of $7,000,000 and not in excess of $8,000,000, 54 percent in addition of such excess.

"$3,275,800 upon net estates of $8,000,000; and upon net estates in excess of $8,000,000 and not in excess of $9,000,000, 56 percent in addition of such excess.

"$3,835,800 upon net estates of $9,000,000; and upon net estates in excess of $9,000,000 and not in excess of $10,000,000, 58 percent in addition of such excess.

"$4,415,800 upon net estates of $10,000,000; and upon net estates in excess of $10,000,000, 60 percent in addition of such excess."

(b) Section 401 (c) of the Revenue Act of 1932 (relating to the exemption for the purposes of the additional estate tax) is amended by striking out "$50,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$40,000."

(c) Section 403 of the Revenue Act of 1932 (relating to the requirement for filing return under such additional estate tax) is amended by striking out "$50,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$40,000."

(d) The amendments made by this section shall be effective only with respect to transfers of estates of decedents dying after the date of the enactment of this act.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I am wondering if we can get a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on the amendment tomorrow. The Senator from Wisconsin wants a roll call on his amendment I understand. I have told several Senators that we probably would not have a roll call on any controversial matter tonight. May we not agree that on the convening of the Senate tomorrow noon the vote shall be had first on this amendment?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like about 10 minutes in the morning to explain the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Let us agree then that tomorrow at not later than 12:30 o'clock p.m., a vote shall be taken on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin or any amendment that may be offered to it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is agreeable to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that tomorrow, at not later than 12:30 o'clock p.m., the Senate shall vote on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin and all amendments thereto. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I want to ask a question about the unanimous-consent agreement which was just made. The final vote is to come at not later than 12:30?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; and it applies merely to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin or any amendment that may be offered thereto, dealing with estate taxes.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to state that immediately upon the convening of the Senate tomorrow noon I shall endeavor to secure recognition to discuss my amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 236, to strike out lines 11 to 15, inclusive, and insert the following:

SEC. 608. Tax on jewelry, etc.: The tax imposed by section 605 of the Revenue Act of 1932 shall not apply to articles sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer, after the date of the enactment of this act, for less than $25.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, this is an amendment to a provision heretofore agreed to, so I will have to ask unanimous consent that the vote be reconsidered by which the Senate agreed to that part of the committee amendment on page 236, known as "section 608, termination of tax on clocks and clock parts", lines 11 to 15, in order that I may offer this substitute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the vote by which section 608 of the committee amendment was agreed to be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on the substitute offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to state that this is a composite amendment, which I have offered after consultation with many Senators. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] had intended to offer and had printed an amendment pertaining to watches and watch parts; the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] was interested in marine glasses and binoculars; the Senators from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE and Mr. DUFFY] were interested in fountain pens and certain kinds of jewelry; and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] was also interested in the tax on certain kinds of jewelry.

This is the section which, under the act of 1932, levied a 10-percent tax on all articles of jewelry, watches, clocks, fountain pens, and a miscellaneous list of items selling for more than $3. My amendment would raise the limitation to $25 and abolish the tax on all articles selling for less than $25.

I understand the Senator from Mississippi is willing to accept the amendment. The entire section only brings in $4,000,000 a year.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I may say that I have talked to several representatives of the fountain-pen producers and others using gold in the manufacture of their products. I am told that they are really losing money by virtue of the increased valuation of gold. I think it is in the interest of fairness that the amendment be adopted. Personally I have no objection to it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi has brought out a point which I wish to urge in support of the amendment, namely, that the manufacturers who are using gold in the manufacture of their products have had to experience an increased cost. It seems to me, under the circumstances, that the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky is eminently justified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and, so that it may be in order, I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment on page 238 was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Massachusetts offers an amendment to the committee amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 238, line 16, in the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out "201 or 204" and insert in lieu thereof "201, 204, or 207."

Mr. WALSH. That is merely a corrective amendment. By some mistake, mutual insurance companies were not exempted from the capital-stock tax, although such companies have no capital stock. A further explanation of the amendment can be found on page 6076 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; that amendment is all right, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT, as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, April 12, 1934, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 11, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Reverend G. E. Jones, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Noblesville, Ind., offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father, we approach Thy throne. We desire to express our gratitude unto Thee for all the blessings bestowed upon us. We thank Thee for every expression of Thy love and for every manifestation of Thy grace. We pray Thee that we may use them all for the furtherance of Thy kingdom. We thank Thee for our country. Bless, we pray Thee, our President, his counselors, and all those in authority. We realize our dependence upon Thee. Help us to rely upon Thee as we ought. We pray, our Heavenly Father, to give all our counselors the wisdom that is from above, which is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and of good works, without partiality and without hypocrisy. Give all the people of this land the grace not to worry our legislators with their selfish ambitions, and not to frown upon them, criticize or crucify them when they speak and act contrary to such selfish desires.

Help us, our Heavenly Father, to remember that man is the greatest creature on earth; that the greatest thing in man is mind; that the greatest thing in mind is love; that the greatest thing in love is service; that the greatest thing in service is sacrifice; and the sacrifice which is needed in the universe today is that which finds the source of its power in the Cross of Calvary and in the glory of the enthroned King of Kings and Savior of the world, in whose name we ask it. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RENOMINATION OF THE SPEAKER

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time in order to extend the congratulations of the entire membership of the House upon the magnificent victory which was given you in the Democratic primary on yesterday, when you were renominated for Congress. [Applause, the Members rising.] They tell me that the number of Democrats who voted for you in your district, and I hope many Republicans who have now seen the light of day, was so numerous that they are still counting the votes. [Laughter and applause.]

This was a deserved tribute, Mr. Speaker, a tribute paid by those who know you best for the long, able, and splendid service you have rendered throughout your career in Congress, and one which, I am sure, forecasts equally certain success in the election next November. [Applause.] While the tribute was to you and belongs to you, let me say that I think the administration is entitled to share, at least in some part, in the congratulations because of this approval of your intense loyalty in putting over the measures proposed by the President in the effort, which I believe has been a successful one, to relieve the country from the distressed conditions under which it has labored during the past three or four years.

Mr. Speaker, I know there is nothing sweeter to a man than to be thus honored by his friends; and when he has been honored, as you have been honored, in such a splendid way, it is the crowning glory and achievement of a great and splendid career in service to your beloved country. [Applause.]

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL—1935

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, in the enforced absence of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], the chairman of the subcommittee, on account of an accident, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I present a privileged report on the bill (H.R. 9061) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 1195).

The bill was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. DITTER reserved all points of order on the bill.

DIGEST OF VETERANS' LEGISLATION

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a digest of the veterans' legislation recently passed by the Congress, showing the effect of that law on World War veterans. This digest was worked out by the legislative representative of the Disabled Veterans of the World War, and I thought it would be of interest and of benefit to the Members who have so many inquiries to answer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following digest of the veterans' legislation recently passed by the Congress showing the effect of that law on World War veterans. This digest was worked out by the legislative representative of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, and I thought it would be of interest and of benefit to the Members who have so many inquiries to answer.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT,
DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS,
Washington, D.C., March 31, 1934.

Special legislative bulletin

The following is a general digest of Public, No. 141, Seventy-third Congress, amending veterans' laws, so far as they concern World War men:

1. There are no retroactive payments beyond March 28, 1934, under any provision.

2. All rates of pay under the old World War Veterans' Act, exclusive of presumptives, but including statutory compensation for the loss of the use of both eyes, double amputations, etc., are reenacted.

3. The usual prohibition against payment to misconduct cases and post-armistice enlistments do not prevail in the cases of the totally blind.

4. At a rate of 75 percent of the amount being received when the Economy Act was enacted, there will be restored all presumptive cases, as they stood March 19, 1933, except for the post-armistice enlistments, where there is clear and unmistakable evidence that the disability occurred before or after service unless aggravation was shown and to persons whose service connection was granted through fraud, error, or misrepresentation.

5. All those who entered World War service before November 11, 1918, and in whose service-connected cases there is no misconduct and where there is no fraud, misrepresentation, or error, are restored to their previous rates of payments, except unmarried hospitalized men.

6. There is a return to the rating table in effect March 19, 1933, for the rating of all present and future compensation cases.

7. There is prohibition against reduction or discontinuance to widows, orphans, or dependent parents who were receiving benefits March 19, 1933.

8. There is a provision that any veteran who will sign a certificate that he is unable to meet the expense will receive hospitalization and transportation to and from the hospital for non-service-connected disability, disease, or defect within the limitations of the Veterans' Administration facilities, for those not dishonorably discharged.

9. The limitations as to receipt of joint pension and salary while employed by the Federal Government will not apply to World War cases.

10. The provision for reduction for compensable persons outside the continental United States is eliminated.

11. Provision is made at the usual rates for those disabled as a result of vocational training, hospitalization, or medical treatment.

12. The provision barring those eligible for benefits from participating in decisions on applications of other veterans for benefits is eliminated.

13. All monetary benefits for service-connected cases are referred to as "compensation" rather than "pension."

14. The Veterans' Administration is authorized to pay insurance benefits in the case where the maturity of a contract had been determined prior to March 20, 1933.

It is estimated that approximately 330,000 World War men will be affected by this legislation, the annual increased cost of which is estimated at $83,000,000, and the Veterans' Administration expects to forward checks to veterans under the revisions on May 1.

THOMAS KIRBY,
National Legislative Chairman.

PUBLIC GRAZING LANDS

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the vote on the passage of the bill (H.R. 6462) to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development, to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes.

The question was taken; and Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT demanded a division.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 265, nays 92, not voting 73, as follows:

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] suffered an unfortunate accident the other day. He is chairman of the subcommittee that has in charge the District of Columbia appropriation bill. That bill has been reported by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], but he and other members of the committee are very anxious that Mr. CANNON should be here during the consideration of that bill. Therefore the District appropriation bill will not be taken up today as expected. If Mr. CANNON returns tomorrow it may be taken up at that time.

For that reason I wish to submit this unanimous request, that we proceed today with the consideration of bills unobjected to on the Private Calendar.

And in connection with that request, I will state that if that is done, unless the House wishes otherwise, I see no reason for a night session. If the appropriation bill is not taken up tomorrow, I will then submit a unanimous-consent request that we proceed with the calling of the Private Calendar tomorrow.

Mr. DITTER. Reserving the right to object, might we not have general debate tomorrow on the District of Columbia appropriation bill in the absence of Mr. CANNON?

Mr. BYRNS. I think it is the disposition of the committee to wait until Mr. CANNON returns. But that is a matter that will be left to the Appropriations Committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman's proposition is to begin at the star?

Mr. BYRNS. That is understood.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I want to submit another unanimous-consent request. There are six jurisdictional bills on the Private Calendar which have been passed by the Senate. Those interested in those bills are anxious that they should be called and disposed of. I assume that because they are jurisdictional bills it will take but a few moments to consider them. I ask unanimous consent that these bills be first called.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object at this time, for the reason that the committee has not had time to examine the bills. The gentleman can renew his request later in the afternoon, but at the present time I object.

BUFFALO AND FORT ERIE PUBLIC BRIDGE AUTHORITY

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 315, granting consent of Congress to an agreement or compact entered into by the State of New York with the Dominion of Canada for the establishment of the Buffalo and Fort Erie Public Bridge Authority, with power to take over, maintain, and operate the present highway bridge over the Niagara River between the city of Buffalo, N.Y., and the village of Fort Erie, Canada.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Has this joint resolution the unanimous support of the committee?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, this will not cost the Government of the United States anything?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Nothing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the consent of the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, given to the State of New York to enter into the agreement or compact with the Dominion of Canada set forth in chapter 824 of the Laws of New York, 1933, and an act respecting the Buffalo and Fort Erie Public Bridge Authority passed at the fifth session, Seventeenth Parliament, Dominion of Canada (24 George V 1934), assented to March 28, 1934, for the establishment of the Buffalo and Fort Erie Public Bridge Authority as a municipal corporate instrumentality of said State and with power to take over, maintain, and operate the present highway bridge over the Niagara River between the city of Buffalo, in the State of New York, and the village of Fort Erie, in the Dominion of Canada.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion by Mr. McREYNOLDS to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

EMPLOYMENT OF COUNSEL IN UNITED STATES v. WEIRTON STEEL CO.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 3209) limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in the case of the United States of America against Weirton Steel Co. and other cases, and consider the same at this time, a similar House bill (H.R. 8883) having been favorably reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What is this bill?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. This is a request made by the Department of Justice, so that the services of the gentleman mentioned in the bill may be had in the prosecution of the case against the Weirton Steel Co.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And it has the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, is this the bill that was objected to at the last session when the Private Calendar was considered, which provides for the employment of certain attorneys by the Department of Justice?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; and I understand that it has been explained to the gentleman.

Mr. TRUAX. That is true. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That nothing in sections 109 and 113 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States", approved March 4, 1909, as amended (U.S.C., title 18, secs. 198 and 203) or in section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U.S.C., title 5, sec. 99), or in any other act of Congress forbidding officers or employees or former officers or employees of the United States from acting as counsel, attorney, or agent for another before any court, department, or branch of the Government or from receiving or agreeing to receive compensation therefor, shall be deemed to apply to attorneys or counselors to be specially employed, retained, or appointed by the Attorney General or under authority of the Department of Justice to assist in the prosecution of the case of United States of America v. Weirton Steel Co., and/or any other case or cases, civil or criminal, involving said company, its officers or agents, arising under the National Industrial Recovery Act or any code of fair competition adopted pursuant thereto.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H.R. 8883) was laid on the table.

DEPOSITS IN CLOSED BANKS

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. What does the gentleman want to talk about?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. About statistics in respect to deposits in closed banks.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And the gentleman will not require any more time than that?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. No.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. We are anxious to get on with the consideration of the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, the House at this session is considering and will consider legislation concerning the banking structure of this country. I believe the House should have all of the information before it that it can possibly have. I have before me the Federal Reserve Bulletin of July 1933, which contains statistics giving classes of depositors in 5,500 Federal Reserve member banks, according to the amount of their deposits. These statistics relate to 30,500,000 depositors. The total deposits amount to $23,500,000,000. They show that in May 1933 deposits of $2,500 and less were held by 96½ percent of the depositors. That is to say, 96½ percent of the depositors had deposits in these banks of $2,500 or less, but those 96½ percent of de-positors had deposits totaling only 23.7 percent of the total amount of deposits. The remaining 3½ percent of the depositors owned 76 percent of the total deposits. It will be of interest to learn that out of the 30,500,000 depositors, less than 50,000 had deposits exceeding $50,000, but their total deposits amounted to 44.6 percent of all deposits. Depositors in excess of $50,000 amounted to 0.1 of 1 percent in number, but their deposits totaled 44.6 percent of all deposits.

I shall now list in full the data which I have been discussing. It relates to all licensed banks who on May 13, 1933, were part of the Federal Reserve System. These statistics, as far as they relate to national banks, were compiled by the Comptroller of the Currency, and, as far as they relate to member banks, they were compiled by the Federal Reserve Board. The total number of accounts involved in these banks is 30,556,105, and the total amount is $23,542,307,000. The data is summarized in the following table, which is taken from the Federal Reserve Bulletin dated July 19, 1933, page 414.

Licensed member banks (5,500 banks)—Number of deposit accounts, by size of account, May 13, 1933

Size group	Number of accounts	Amount of deposits	Percentage distribution		Average size of accounts
			Number of accounts	Total deposits
Deposit accounts of—
$2,500 or less	29,482,384	$5,580,327,000	96.5	23.7	$189
$2,501 to $5,000	569,833	1,912,132,000	1.9	8.1	3,356
$5,001 to $10,000	269,903	1,840,791,000	.9	7.8	6,820
$10,001 to $50,000	187,115	3,720,403,000	.6	15.8	19,883
Over $50,000	46,870	10,488,654,000	.1	44.6	223,782
Total (5,500 banks)	30,556,105	23,542,307,000	100.0	100.0	770

I want to repeat that 96½ percent of these accounts were in amounts of $2,500 or less, and that the average account of this class was $189.

I call particular attention to these statistics because I believe they will be of interest in connection with legislation that we are now considering or will consider during this session.

Mr. Speaker, I am in hearty sympathy with the idea of taking care of the small depositors, but I believe we should consider the matter very carefully before we decide that the Treasury of the United States should pay in full big depositors in closed banks. In many cases such deposits amount to millions of dollars. For instance, the account of the Ford Motor Co. in the closed banks in Michigan amounted to $32,500,000.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FIRE SUFFERERS OF MINNESOTA

Mr. HOIDALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks upon the fire sufferers' bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOIDALE. Mr. Speaker, at the point where the western extremity of Lake Superior pierces like an arrowhead into the eastern boundary of my home State of Minnesota lies that gem city of the North, which was, some years ago, in a speech made upon this floor by Proctor Knott, baptized the "Zenith City of the Unsalted Sea."

A short distance to the north, not far from the Canadian boundary, lie the Missabe and Vermillion iron ranges—the greatest producers of iron and steel in the world.

To the west and northeast of Duluth the land is of a gently rolling topography, covered, except where clearings have been made, by second-growth timber and underbrush.

If during the days of the World War, you had motored through this vast northeastern section of Minnesota, following winding roads among our "10,000 lakes," a veritable paradise of outdoor recreation, your interest would have been attracted to the promising and homey little farmsteads, hewn by industrious and thrifty hands out of a forest wilderness—little huts here and there in bright open clearings—huts, but nevertheless homes that sheltered the families and everything that these sturdy pioneers held dear. These clearings and small farms gave expression to the ambition, the industry, and the determination of a poor but hopeful people struggling against adverse conditions to give their children a place in the sun.

Cloquet, a city of some 8,000 people, was the largest town in this settlement in the north. In this city were several wood-products factories in which many of the settlers worked and to which many of them sold timber cut from their homesteads.

The World War was drawing to a close. The railroads were managed and controlled by the Director General of Railroads, and the Government was liable to the same extent and in the same way as the railroads would have been liable under private management.

On the morning of October 12, 1918, the sun arose out of the waters of Lake Superior in a clear sky. It was one of those beautiful October days for which the Arrowhead country of Minnesota is famous. The frosts of early autumn had turned the foliage of a great variety of trees and shrubbery into a riot of beautiful colors. The falling leaves sailed to the ground in the gentle morning breeze. The smoking chimneys belching from the factories at Cloquet gave evidence of war-day activity. In the surrounding countryside farm work was rushed in anticipation of the approaching winter, while children on their way to school, with books and dinner pails in their hands whistled, laughed, and played with the falling leaves. And that was the last happy day those people have seen.

Before sundown of that day the deep, keen sorow that follows death and total destruction fell upon this ill-fated community.

Let me tell you the story briefly.

By noon the gentle breeze of the morning had increased to a velocity of 25 miles an hour.

The official report of the Director of the Railroads, made to the Government, says:

> In October 1918 a most devastating fire occurred in the forest regions of Minnesota. Roughly speaking, some 1,500 square miles of territory was burned over; 4,000 homes and 5,000 barns were burned, and a number of good-sized towns wholly destroyed, including the town of Cloquet, with a population of some 12,000 people; 450 people lost their lives, and some 2,000 people received personal injuries sufficient to require medical attention.

Here, in the cold and direct words of the Director of the Railroads, is the story of the most devastating and heartrending calamity that has come to my State and my people. We must draw heavily upon our imagination in order to picture to ourselves this cruel tragedy—4,000 homes scattered over a countryside approximately 30 miles square, including also several small villages; 450 charred bodies of men, women, and children; and among them many of those who in the morning hour had laughed and played on their way to school.

Two thousand maimed and injured in the brave fight they made to save human lives.

That night the dying embers of ruined homes were all that remained of a community that in the morning was pulsating with the activities of a happy people.

Broadly speaking, I have drawn this meager and inadequate picture of a frightful calamity in order that you may understand the extent of the damages suffered.

It must be conceded that whoever was to blame for this terrible catastrophe had a heavy burden to bear. The least that could be expected would be payment in full of the property loss suffered. Where loss has been inflicted upon one person by reason of the alleged fault of another, two things must be proved as a basis for recovery: First, who caused the damage; and second, the amount of the damage.

These two things, so far as the argument here is concerned, have been definitely and absolutely determined. Seven test cases scattered throughout the burned area were tried. Four of these cases were appealed to the Supreme Court and decided against the railroad. The question of responsibility was fixed, absolutely and conclusively. There is no question as to liability.

I quote from the report on this claim:

At any rate, the testimony clearly indicates that the responsibility and legal liability of the United States Railroad Administration was settled by the courts and is not an issue so far as the merits of this bill are concerned. Any attempt to try to raise that issue is simply an attempt to say that the courts were wrong and, as Judge Dancer pointed out, under the law, the Government was bound by the decision of the courts.

The amount of the damages has been determined and is equally well settled. Nothing could be more definite and accurate because the exact amounts have been ascertained either through law suits or by agreements.

All the claims here made rest upon judgments entered in court, or upon agreements entered into in writing between the attorneys for the railroads and the claimants. After checking and rechecking, the attorneys for the railroad had beat down the amount claimed and then 50 percent was paid upon the amount so beaten down. This was not a compromise payment. It was an arbitrary payment of half the amount arrived at by compromise. Judgment was entered upon each and every claim and a percentage—40 percent in claims over $25,000 and 50 percent in claims under $25,000—was paid. The balance remains unpaid but the poverty-stricken settlers were forced, in order to get something, to acknowledge payment in full.

I now come to the question of the settlement made by the claimants. We must bear in mind that seven test cases were tried. Some of the test cases mentioned were tried before juries, but as an additional and different test the Railroad Administration and the settlers stipulated that the Peterson case should be tried before five judges sitting not only as a court but also as a jury to determine the facts. They also stipulated in writing that the decision in this case should govern and control 278 other cases in the city of Cloquet.

While these cases were in progress, the attorneys for the Railroad Administration repeatedly stated that if the courts held the Government liable, payment would be made in full. If the Government was not liable, they would not pay a cent. In other words, they would not compromise. They would pay all or nothing.

I read from the report, on page 2:

The testimony of the fire sufferers showed that before the litigation, which was protracted and expensive, the Government indicated that it would either pay all or none of the damage; that if the courts held the Government liable, it would pay in full; that if the courts held the Government was not responsible, it would not pay a cent. Not until after the court decisions favorable to the fire sufferers did the Director General indicate any willingness to compromise or pay part of the losses. The Director General refused to follow the Minnesota courts or their decisions. He was arbitrary. The fire sufferers were destitute. They faced the possibility of years of litigation and were forced to accept what the Director General was willing to pay and execute such papers as he required. The committee in the Seventy-first Congress felt that such action was unfair, and not binding on the claimants, after hearing the witnesses and the testimony. Congress is the only place where the claimants can come for redress, due to the releases, etc. As was pointed out by Congressman PEAVEY in his testimony (p. 11 of hearings), Congress does not pass upon claims where the claimant has a legal obligation he can enforce against the Government.

From Senate report, page 3, I read this sentence:

Claimants were told when the cases were being tried that if they were successful, they would be paid in full; that if they lost, they would not be paid one cent.

Mr. Baldwin, the Minnesota attorney for the Railroad Administration, said this to Judge Cant when the judge suggested a compromise of all the cases:

Judge Cant, we are entitled to a decision in this case. The Government demands a decision. If we are liable, we will pay every dollar we owe. The Government is not a Jew proposition. We will pay the people 100 cents on the dollar if we lose. If we win, we will not pay one cent. But we are entitled to a decision, and we demand it.

Let me say, by the way, that Judge Cant was one of the great and outstanding judges of the West. Shortly after he made the decision in the fire cases he was made a Federal judge and served with great distinction until his death.

One of the witnesses before the Committee on Claims said this:

Our understanding was that if we won the Cloquet (Peterson) case, our troubles were over and the Government would come in and settle the whole thing, would pay 100 percent—

Just as they had proposed to do.

But what happened? The Cloquet case was won. All the cases scattered throughout the devastated district were won. The Cloquet case went to the Supreme Court. Judgment was entered for the sum of $30,000. Nothing could be realized upon an execution. There was nothing upon which the sheriff could levy. The law specifically provided that the railway properties were not subject to execution or levy.

The law also provided this, in section 206:

Final judgments, decrees, and awards in actions, suits, proceedings, or reparation claims of the character above described rendered against the agent designated by the President under subdivision (a) "shall be promptly paid out of the revolving fund."

But instead of paying according to understanding had before the trials were finished, the attorneys for the Railroad Administration now reversed their attitude. Here is the record:

Three judgments were entered, and when the decisions were affirmed in the Supreme Court in July 1921 we asked the Government to pay those judgments. Mr. Davis absolutely refused to pay them. Although we had tried the case three times and had entered judgment for costs and interest, he absolutely refused to pay. The demand for payment of the Cloquet judgments was not later than August 11, 1921 (p. 118 of hearings).

Mr. CHRISTGAU. What reason did he state for the refusal?

Mr. ARNOLD. He did not give any reason. He said he would not pay them, and never has paid them. Not only that, but the day after the decision of the five judges, to wit, on the 17th day of September 1920, the Railroad Administration attorneys announced that thereafter there would be no more grouping of cases; that we would have to try each case separately to a jury or get no results; they would not take any more cases before the judges; that they were all through with the trial of group cases before the judges.

Mr. Davis knew that it would take about 6 weeks to try each case. He knew that if all the judges in the State of Minnesota were employed in the trial of cases then pending, it would take 10 years to dispose of the cases. He knew that the five judges in the district could not finish the cases in two generations. He knew he had these helpless, shattered human wrecks up against a stone wall. They were at his mercy. He was a dictator whose terms could not be modified or questioned.

And this is what he said to those who so recently had buried 500 of their children, their kin, and their neighbors: "You have your choice between taking 50 cents on the dollar of your actual loss or trying these cases one by one through endless time."

Let me quote the record:

Mr. DAVIS. I have to assume the responsibility of this, and I do so very cheerfully. I have always understood this—that this was the theory—I made that proposition and it was final; they could take it or leave it, but they were not deprived of any legal right.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I have always considered this the rankest kind of coercion.

Mr. DAVIS. In what way?

Mr. HOLLISTER. The proposition you made that the claimants could take your offer or leave it, which left them only the opportunity to try the cases one after another, which would have taken years and years. Moreover, there was no way to collect the judgment when we got one, except through good "Santa Claus" Davis.

Mr. DAVIS. There was nothing except the written proposition I made.

Mr. HOLLISTER. You told us that was final, and we could take it or leave it. If we had to go into court with these little cases, of which there were hundreds and hundreds, it would have cost more than the alternative.

There is your stone wall. There is the picture of ruthless power upon the one side and helpless lack of resistance upon the other.

These people—the fire sufferers and the Director of Railroads—were not dealing with each other at arm's length—they were not standing upon the same level. One had the power and used it, the other had nothing but weakness—no choice but to submit.

Yes; there was a settlement—but what kind of a settlement?

If you owed me $1,000 on a promissory note and had the money to pay me with and I went to you and asked you for payment, explaining that I was in dire need, that my child was sick, and that I must have the money and could get it nowhere else—if under these circumstances you offered me $500 and no more, take it or leave it, and I took the money because I could not bear to see my child suffer, would that be a settlement that would be binding upon me, would it be a compromise? It would not.

It is under these circumstances that this bill is now before this House to reimburse some 8,000 fire sufferers whose unpaid half of their claims averages $1,000 each—a total of about $8,000,000.

I wish I had the time to read to you the testimony given at the hearings before the Committee on Claims, but I must be satisfied to submit the findings made. In three different Congresses has the Committee on Claims reported this bill out favorably. Let me quote some of the findings of the committee:

The testimony of the fire sufferers showed that before the litigation, which was protracted and expensive, the Government indicated that it would either pay all or none of the damage; that if the courts held the Government liable, it would pay in full; that if the courts held the Government was not responsible, it would not pay a cent. Not until after the court decisions favorable to the fire sufferers did the Director General indicate any willingness to compromise or pay part of the losses. The Director General refused to follow the Minnesota courts or their decisions. He was arbitrary. The fire sufferers were destitute. They faced the possibility of years of litigation and were forced to accept what the Director General was willing to pay, and execute such papers as he required. The committee in the Seventy-first Congress felt that such action was unfair, and not binding on the claimants, after hearing the witnesses and the testimony (p. 2 of report).

To summarize the situation briefly, lawsuits affecting the liability of the Government in various areas were tried as the litigation progressed. The Government was held liable in this litigation. The Government then made offers to settle for 40 or 50 percent of the loss, as determined by it, in these various areas. It made no settlement of claims of doubtful liability.

As Mr. Davis, Director General of Railroads, said in his letter to President Harding (p. 28 of printed hearings) and in his proposition of settlement (p. 29 of printed hearing), only claims were settled where they had a legal claim against the Government. We quote his exact language:

"This right to adjust and settle is based only upon legal demands which would ordinarily be enforceable in a court of justice. (See p. 29 of printed hearings.)

"We stress this fact because the bill, H.R. 5660, affects only those claimants who suffered loss and who were recognized by the Railroad Administration as having legal demands, and who received a part payment on that account. In no cases were any settlements made unless the legal liability of the Government was recognized (p. 5 of hearings).

"There is no question but that they (the fire sufferers) were under compulsion in accepting that settlement of 50 cents on the dollar. Two years after the fire the five judges met and signed a letter and sent it to the Railroad Administration. It was dictated by Judge Cant. He wrote and we subscribed to it, and it was to the effect that it would take all the judges of the State 10 years to try all those cases. We spent several months listening to the testimony on one case. That did not include all the damages but only the damages of one man. It would have taken months and years to hear all the testimony and decide how much each citizen was entitled to receive. Those districts were prostrated, and the people could not wait" (p. 95 of printed hearings).

Again, Judge Dancer says:

"I realize, however, that if every such individual were compelled to bring suit against the Government to establish his claims the result would be complete denial of practical justice" (p. 5 of hearings).

As appears from the testimony of Judge Dancer, and from undisputed facts, both in the Government testimony and from the other witnesses, your committee cannot find that the settlements were fair to the fire sufferers, and does not believe they should be bound by the releases executed by them in order to receive partial payment of their loss (p. 6 of hearings).

The testimony developed in the hearings on this case is uncontroverted as to the situation which resulted in part payment of the losses suffered by the fire claimants. The testimony leads to the conclusion that the fire sufferers were practically forced to accept such payments as the Director General of Railroads was willing to make. When he made those part payments, it is true that the fire sufferers had no other alternative except to comply with his pronouncements. He required that a legal release of all claims against the Government be executed; he required that a legal stipulation for the entry of judgment be executed; he required that a legal satisfaction of judgment be signed and executed. He took all these steps so as to forever bar any claimant from having any legal or equitable causes of action against the United States in any of its courts. The only redress, therefore, which the claimants in this bill have is a bill in Congress.

The Government is still indebted to them, in spite of these legal instruments, for the balance of a loss which was ascertained by the Government, on a liability that was established by the courts of Minnesota, and on which only partial payment has been made.

The United States insists that its citizens discharge their duties and obligations fully. In collecting income taxes, it does not accept a percentage of the amount due. This Government should, therefore, recognize its just obligations and, through Congress, ought to treat fairly with its citizens. Either the Government owed the fire sufferers the amount of loss which each of them sustained or else it owed them nothing. It recognized liability in making part payments on these claims. The only way that justice can be done is to pass this bill and pay the balance (pp. 8–9 of hearings).

The Attorney General has carefully gone over the record and over his own signature he has given his support to this bill. This letter of the Attorney General, addressed to the President, was by the President transmitted to Mr. BLACK, Chairman of the Committee on Claims, with a letter from the President, in which he states that he concurs with the opinion of the Attorney General.

This bill, which for convenience has been substituted for my bill introduced in the House, has been passed by the Senate without a dissenting vote, and this vote today should do justice delayed 12 long years.

This calamity is without precedent or analogy for the following reasons:

First. The responsibility for this disaster, after extended litigation, was placed squarely on the Government by the highest court of Minnesota.

Second. Thereafter the Director General, in opposition to the contentions of the various claimants, himself fixed the extent of the loss of each claimant.

Third. The Director General then arbitrarily offered 50 percent of the amount of loss he himself had fixed and told the claimants they could take it or leave it.

Fourth. There was no forum, nor could there be any forum, where 8,000 claimants whose entire earthly possessions were destroyed could get relief in their extreme condition.

In closing let me say that there are now in the hands of the Railroad Administration unexpended funds in the amount of $19,000,000 available for payment of this claim.

The payment should be made.

The Attorney General has given consideration to the question of settlement involved; and after having looked it all over, he said the bill is meritorious. The President agrees.

Let us do justice to 8,000 people most shamefully wronged.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the bills on the Private Calendar.

WILLIAM L. JENKINS

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that no. 248 on the calendar, H.R. 1939, for the relief of William L. Jenkins, which was passed when last we considered the Private Calendar be called at this time. It was passed at that time with the understanding that it would be called when the Private Calendar was again called.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will recall that bill which was passed over without prejudice.

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 1939) for the relief of William L. Jenkins.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This claim was incurred on December 8, 1916. As I said when the bill was last under consideration, I think it is bad policy for us to go back that far in settling claims, when we are making every effort to hold down expenses of the Government and balance the Budget, insofar as the operating expenses of the Government are concerned.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. DITTER. I believe I can explain satisfactorily why that is so. The purposes of the bill, that is, the relief of Mr. Jenkins, growing out of the destruction of vouchers that are required by the accounting department, was not brought to the attention of Mr. Jenkins until 1930. It was not until there was provision made through another act, providing for a $400 item due by the Government to Mr. Jenkins, that his attention was directed to the fact that these vouchers had been destroyed during the war period in 1917.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. When was the bill first presented in Congress?

Mr. DITTER. The last Congress passed this bill, as far as the House was concerned, and it died in the Senate. My predecessor, Mr. Watson, handled the bill during the last Congress. It passed the House and it died in the Senate. There was no objection at the time the bill was handled at that time in the House. If the gentleman will refer to the complete report he will find substantiation of my statements regarding the matter of delay, in the latter part of the report, confirmed by the State Department. I feel that this is not a case where the charge of laches or undue neglect should be brought to bear against this claimant. It does not involve the payment of any money. The merit of the matter concerns destruction, during the war period, of the files of the Government, including vouchers, for which destruction the claimant is in no way responsible.

Mr. TRUAX. Does the State Department recommend the passage of this bill? I mean the present Department.

Mr. DITTER. The present State Department?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. DITTER. No. I cannot say that it has been referred to the present State Department. In other words, I do not have information by which I would want to assure the gentleman that the present State Department has had this matter under its consideration.

Mr. TRUAX. I would suggest that the gentleman permit the bill to be passed over without prejudice and secure the recommendation of the present State Department.

Mr. DITTER. Will that not just be a matter of further delay, with the probability of adjournment, and then I will be faced with exactly the same question that is presently raised, the matter of unusual delay in the presentation of the claim? I think the State Department meritoriously has passed on it. The Committee on Claims has passed on it. It simply means that the unfortunate circumstance of war caused the destruction of some of the State records, including vouchers, under the control of this consul.

Mr. TRUAX. Until the gentleman secures the recommendation of the present Department of State, I will be forced to object to it unless he wants to pass it over without prejudice.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. TRUAX. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I want to refer to the statement made by the gentleman from Ohio, and, if the chairman of the committee were here, he would confirm it. That same suggestion has been made on other occasions with reference to departmental regulations and departmental recommendations, and in each instance where we have suggested to the department in charge of a matter of this kind that they give us a new recommendation, they tell us invariably that it is a matter of policy that has been determined by the department, and they always refer us to the previous communication that came from the department.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I am going to withdraw my objection unless my colleague from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK] desires to object.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand the same bill was objected to heretofore. I have not had an opportunity to go into it. I think the request made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] is a sound reservation, asking for a departmental report, and therefore, in the absence of that request being consented to, I am going to object.

Mr. DITTER. May I correct the gentleman? There was no objection to this bill in the past Congress.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I gathered from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRISWOLD], who was just here, that there was objection. I was not here, so I could not tell the gentleman.

Mr. DITTER. May I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the bill be passed over without prejudice, in order that I may satisfy my colleague from Ohio, and allow it to stand as the first bill to be called on the next call of the calendar?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be passed over.

There was no objection.

ELECTION—NEW BRITAIN, CONN.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the second largest city of my district there was an election and I have a telegram from Mr. W. J. Farley, as follows:

New Britain goes Democratic by over 1,900.

In this city, Mr. Speaker, there was a Republican mayor who had served for several terms. Yesterday he was defeated by Attorney David L. Dunn, a Democrat. The vote emphasizes to me, as it must to the Members of the House, the continued confidence in the Democratic government of this country. By the fact that it was a turnover from Republican to Democratic, it shows increased confidence in the achievements of this Congress and our President. [Applause.]

PRIVATE CALENDAR

MRS. GEORGE LOGAN ET AL.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer back to Calendar No. 258, H.R. 2416. Consent was given to take it up on next calendar day, and it was passed over temporarily.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk called the bill, H.R. 2416, for the relief of Mrs. George Logan and her minor children, Lewis and Barbara Logan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have gone into this bill since I have talked with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON]. There is still great doubt in my mind whether there is any causal connection between this wound and the death, there being a 6-year period of intervention between the time of the wound and the time of the death, but there is some doubt in my mind, and if the gentleman will accept $3,000 instead of $5,000, I will not object. That will reduce it $2,000.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. If that is the very best the gentleman will do, then reluctantly I accept the reduction.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to Mrs. George Logan and her minor children, Lewis and Barbara Logan, as dependents of George Logan (deceased), who sustained injuries in line of duty and later died of such injuries, which were received while on duty as a prison guard at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ZIONCHECK: Page 1, line 5, strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ROBERT B. JAMES

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2541, for the relief of Robert B. James.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to Robert B. James, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $7,000, the amount of a fine paid by Robert B. James in pursuance of a judgment entered upon a plea nolo contendere under certain provisions of the so-called "Lever Act" previous to the time that the Supreme Court of the United States held such provisions void, the said plea and said payment being made under a stipulation as follows: "In consideration that the Attorney General and this court shall accept the plea nolo contendere which I hereby tender to the above-entitled indictment, I do hereby waive any and all fines which the court may see fit to impose upon me upon such pleas, except in the event that the so-called 'Lever Act' under which said indictment is found shall be declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States and that no prosecution could be sustained upon the facts stated in said indictment: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

G. ELIAS & BRO., INC.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2558, for the relief of G. Elias & Bro., Inc.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill carries $30,859.28 based on a claim that after bids were submitted and contracts were let, the specifications were changed, and they are asking the Government to pay them this $30,859.28 additional.

A similar bill was pending in the Senate in 1932, carrying the number S. 1220, which bill sought to appropriate in settlement of this claim $52,268.56. Thus in 1932 they were demanding $52,268.56. The bill through Senator Howell, was submitted to the War Department for a report; and the Secretary of War, Mr. Patrick J. Hurley, reported on the same as follows:

The records do not show that any additional packing or crating, other than that required under the contract, was requested or accomplished, and therefore any claim therefor is not justified.

The records show that the bids by G. Elias & Bro., Inc., while the lowest among several competitors, were not considered unreasonably low. Any alleged loss because of additional costs of production, therefore, must be attributed to the errors of the contractor and not as a result of any act of the Government agents.

In view of the foregoing, this Department can see no merit in the proposed relief, and favorable consideration of the bill S. 1220 is, therefore, not recommended.

So I do not feel that this $30,859.28 ought to be taken out of the Treasury. I must object. I reserve my objection, however, since the gentleman from New York asks that he be allowed to make an explanation, but eventually I shall object.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman from Texas that the original request was for some $50,000, but our subcommittee reduced it to the amount contained in the bill. If the gentleman will allow the bill to go over without prejudice, I shall give him an itemized statement of the losses incurred as the result of changes in specifications ordered by Government agents.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I hate to object to the gentleman's bill because of my friendship for him and also because of the splendid work he does on our Post Office Committee; but he must know that former Secretary of War Hurley said there was no change made in the specifications. Such a claim was not made when the original claim was made against the Department. This is an afterthought and was not raised until 1927. Under these circumstances I feel impelled to object.

Mr. MEAD. This firm up until a short while ago had been doing a prosperous business in Buffalo. It recently became bankrupt.

Mr. BLANTON. They had two contracts, and were paid in full for all that was due them under such contracts.

Mr. MEAD. They were forced into bankruptcy; the corporation has been wiped out after having been in existence for many years. The owner died, his friends say of a broken heart; and the contracts he had with the United States Government helped to ruin him financially. No one is left but his widow. I shall be very glad to furnish the gentleman with an itemized statement of the costs, together with such information concerning the orders and instructions, as we furnished the subcommittee; and at that time if he desires to object he will still have that right.

Mr. BLANTON. I must say to the gentleman from New York that in 1932 I went into this bill carefully and checked it up. I had very definite ideas then, which I still entertain, that this is not a just claim against the Government, and that we should not pay out this $30,859.28. I am forced to object, Mr. Speaker.

G. ELIAS & BRO., INC.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2561, for the relief of G. Elias & Bro., Inc.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, would the gentleman from New York be willing to accept the usual attorneys' fee amendment?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I shall be very glad to.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I should like to ask the gentleman further with reference to the amount of the claim. I see it is $4,400.

Mr. MEAD. Yes. We reduced it by, I think, $3,000 before the subcommittee.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to G. Elias & Bro., Inc., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,400 in full settlement for losses suffered by said company on account of priority orders and other conditions arising out of the late war with Germany which prevented the delivery of lumber specified under contract with the United States Navy Department no. 29497 within the time specified, for which contract bid was submitted by said company prior to the entrance of the United States into the late war.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANCHARD: At the end of the bill add the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TEXAS MILITARY COLLEGE, TERRELL, TEX.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2650, for the relief of the Texas Military College, of Terrell, Tex.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CORA A. BENNETT

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2667, for the relief of Cora A. Bennett.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I reserve the objection.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman state why he is objecting to the bill?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. This decedent died in 1918 of influenza, and according to the report there is no connection whatever between his death and his Government service. There is not a line in the report which would indicate that his death was in any way connected with his service.

Mr. TARVER. The purpose of the bill, as the gentleman of course, will observe, is to afford this widow an opportunity to show to the Compensation Commission that her husband's employment did bring about his death. The report from the decedent's superior officer is dated almost 3 months after his death.

It is apparent that there was great negligence in even reporting the death of this man, and it is also apparent that the officer who made the report could not report that his death was in line of duty because he was not apprised of the circumstances under which the man died. It has not been thought necessary, in view of the fact that Congress has passed many bills of this character simply vesting jurisdiction in the Commission to hear the facts, to submit evidence showing that death did result because of the performance of decedent's duties. The evidence could readily have been obtained, but it has not been required in the cases of other bills of this character passed by the House.

May I ask the gentleman if he does not think it fair that this widow under the circumstances should be accorded the opportunity of showing to the Commission that her claim is well founded? This opportunity she has never had.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I dislike, of course, to object to bills of my colleagues, but unless there is some reason for believing that this might be regarded as a meritorious claim for compensation, and unless some excuse is offered for the delay of 16 years, I feel I should object.

Mr. TARVER. The delay has not been 16 years, may I say to the gentleman. This bill has been introduced in several prior Congresses, but has never been reached for consideration. The lady did not know that she had any right to file a claim under the Employees' Compensation Law, but as soon as she found it out she began pressing for relief. It is a very minor matter, so far as the Government is concerned, but it is of importance to the widow, who cannot under the terms of this bill secure anything to which she is not entitled under the evidence which may be submitted. No harm can be done by its passage and great harm might be done to her if this bill is not passed.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The only evidence we have in connection with the case itself is in the report of the War Department, which states that James D. Bennett died of influenza while on temporary duty and that his death was not incident to his service. There is no contradiction of this statement, and I cannot see that there is a basis for a claim here. Very reluctantly I feel compelled to object.

Mr. TARVER. It further appears, if my colleague will notice, that Col. Jack Hayes, the superior officer of this man, reported his death under date of February 15, 1919, when, as a matter of fact, death occurred on October 29, 1918, almost 3 months before. He had not become aware of his death until 3 months after the death occurred.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Even so, that is a long time ago.

Mr. TARVER. The statement that his death was not in line of duty should not preclude this widow from submitting her case to the proper authorities.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I think there should be some evidence submitted to warrant the case's being submitted to the Commission.

Mr. TARVER. There has not been evidence submitted in other cases of similar character during this Congress and prior thereto to show the facts in each case. That is, evidence that would be submitted to the Commission in the event a hearing was accorded. For this reason, I did not think it was necessary in this case.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I think question of fact should be presented.

Mr. TARVER. I am sorry the gentleman feels that way about the matter.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BONNIE S. BAKER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2682, for the relief of Bonnie S. Baker.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Georgia if it is not true that the Department found, as a matter of fact, that the former postmaster was guilty of negligence in the handling of these Government funds or stamps?

Mr. TARVER. The Department so finds, but if it had found otherwise it would not have been necessary to appeal to Congress for relief. The Department itself would have afforded whatever relief was necessary.

This is another class of bill considered favorably by the House. The amount involved is only $100.29. This widowed postmaster had an assistant in charge in a country post office. This assistant left the money, which belonged to the Government, in a metal box while he went about 30 feet to get lunch. While he was gone a window was broken and a thief stole the $100.29. It occurs to me that the finding by the Department to the effect that this postmaster was negligent in the premises is necessarily without evidence to support it. It has not been deemed necessary in rural sections of my district to take elaborate precautions against burglary and probably the precautions taken in this case were similar to those taken by others under similar circumstances. It occurs to me that even if the assistant postmaster might have been to some extent at fault, there is no reason for penalizing this widowed postmaster because of circumstances which she could have in no way avoided.

Mr. BLANCHARD. There must be some reason for regulations and law, and clearly in this case the regulations and the law were not complied with.

Mr. TARVER. I do not see how the gentleman can say that they were not complied with. Does the gentleman expect a country postmaster to maintain an iron safe for the purpose of keeping safely the money belonging to the Government?

Mr. BLANCHARD. If the law so required, I would certainly expect that to be done.

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman's expectations are so out of line with what I consider to be reasonable and just that I hardly know how to answer his statement. Many bills of this sort have been passed without objection. If the gentleman objects to paying this lady the small amount of money involved, that is his responsibility.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am not going to object. The gentleman need have no fears on that score.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100.29 to Bonnie S. Baker, former postmaster at Gore, Ga., to reimburse her for currency and coin in that amount stolen from said post office by burglary on November 18, 1930, which said loss was sustained without negligence on the part of said postmaster and was by her repaid to the Government from her private funds.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONSTRUCTION OF POST OFFICE AT LAS VEGAS, NEV.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill (H.R. 3900) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay certain subcontractors for material and labor furnished in the construction of the post office at Las Vegas, Nev.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the bill that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRISWOLD] objected to the last time the calendar was called?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Yes; and I have seen the gentleman and talked with him about it.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. And he has no objection to returning to the bill and passing it?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. No; and, in fact, he suggested to me the procedure to be followed.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Then, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to returning to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BLOOM). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to subcontractors, labor, and material men who furnish labor and material to the Plains Construction Co., defaulted general contractor for the construction of the post office at Las Vegas, Nev., such sums as he may consider equitable and just to reimburse said subcontractors, labor, and material men for unpaid accounts left by said Plains Construction Co. at the time of its default, said sums to be paid only upon proper proof of actual losses sustained exclusive of profit; and there is hereby made available for this purpose not to exceed $20,000 from any sum which may remain from the lump-sum appropriations made for building-construction purposes, notwithstanding the amount of the claims of said subcontractors in addition to the cost of completing the building exceed the limit of the cost for the construction of the Las Vegas post office.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOSEPH SHABEL

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2689, for the relief of Joseph Shabel.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, from any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Joseph Shabel the sum of $5,000 in full settlement of all claims against the Government for injuries and damages sustained when struck by a Government automobile on May 7, 1932, said automobile having been driven at the time by Hayden N. Bell, a Federal prohibition agent: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,579."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment. In line 5, after the word "to", insert the words "Edward Shabel, son of."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TARVER: Page 1, line 5, after the word "to", insert the words "Edward Shabel, son of."

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman the number of this bill?

Mr. TARVER. It is Calendar No. 267, and may I say to the gentleman that the claimant has died subsequent to the reporting of the bill, and I am simply inserting the name of his only son.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment, in line 5, after the words "Joseph Shabel", insert the word "deceased."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TARVER: Page 1, line 5, after the word "Shabel", insert the word "deceased."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, in line 7, page 1, after the word "sustained", I move to insert the words "by Joseph Shabel."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TARVER: Page 1, line 7, after the word "sustained", insert the words "by Joseph Shabel."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill for the relief of Edward Shabel, son of Joseph Shabel."

LULA A. DENSMORE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2692, for the relief of Lula A. Densmore.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Georgia to the fact that he has some meritorious bills here and no one is objecting to them.

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman from Georgia appreciates that very much.

Mr. TRUAX. I think this bill is a meritorious one, but all of these bills are for the relief of private individuals. We have two petitions on the Clerk's desk that are for the relief of thousands and hundreds of thousands of individuals in this country. One is the petition to discharge the committee from the consideration of the McLeod bill and the other is a petition to discharge the committee from further consideration of the Frazier-Lemke bill. I should like to ask the gentleman from Georgia if he has signed either one of these petitions.

Mr. TARVER. No; and I have no intention of signing them, may I say to my colleague, since I do not entertain the same opinion of this legislation that he does. Of course, I recognize the fact that my colleague is out of order in calling my attention to matters of this sort and in seeking to obtain a statement from me regarding my position concerning them during the consideration of this calendar but, since the gentleman has undertaken to do so, I have no hesitancy in telling him that I think both of these bills are bad legislation; and I have not only not signed either of the petitions to discharge the committee, but I have no intention of doing so.

Mr. TRUAX. I thank the gentleman for his clear-cut statement. There is no question about the gentleman's position, and I am pleased that his bills are meritorious, so that I do not have to object to them.

Mr. TARVER. I thank the gentleman.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Lula A. Densmore, widow of Clarence Densmore, the sum of $15,000 in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for damages incurred by the killing of Clarence Densmore, her husband, on a public highway of Douglas County, Ga., by Fred Pierce, a Federal prohibition agent, which said killing occurred on July 13, 1932: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$15,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

A. C. FRANCIS

The Clerk read the title of the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 2748, for the relief of A. C. Francis.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to A. C. Francis, sheriff of Midland County, Tex., the sum of $204.30 as reimbursement of expense incurred in connection with the apprehension of William Dunn Reiger, a fugitive from justice wanted by the Federal Government.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

E. B. ROSE

The Clerk read the title of the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 2749, for the relief of E. B. Rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not object. I have personal knowledge of this claim, and I believe it is meritorious.

Some years ago we had a law that permitted stock people to take their livestock to Mexico for temporary pasturage. We had a bad drought situation in that country along the Mexican border. This man, George D. Miers, took a herd of sheep to Mexico where he later sold them to the claimant, E. B. Rose.

These sheep, or their offspring, were brought back to the United States prior to the expiration of the law. The law expired on December 31, 1925.

A careful reading of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, Ogden Mills, will disclose that the objection was on account of the fact that they did not believe that Mr. Miers went to Mexico for a temporary residence.

Now, I know that both Mr. Miers and Mr. Rose are American citizens with permanent residence in Texas. There are a number of affidavits in the case which have been filed since the report of Secretary Mills. There are affidavits or statements of 11 citizens of Del Rio, including the mayor, postmaster, district judge, district attorney, and other prominent citizens to the effect that Miers resided in Del Rio, Tex., and was in Mexico only for temporary business reasons.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I notice that he took the sheep to Mexico in 1921 and did not return them until 1925.

Mr. THOMASON. That makes no difference for he was within the law. The law did not expire until December 31, 1925. The sheep were returned February 2, 1925, nearly a year before the law expired.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The question turns on the fact whether he went to Mexico for a temporary purpose.

Mr. THOMASON. A number of the most prominent citizens of Del Rio, Tex., make statements which the gentleman will find at the bottom of page 7 in the report, and all to the effect that both of these men were permanently residing in this country.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And during all the time from 1921 to 1925 they were residents of Del Rio?

Mr. THOMASON. Yes; they lived there, and they live in that section now, and they have not lost their residence. It is a common practice for stockmen along the border to move their livestock into Mexico to pasture them and go into Mexico to trade, ranch, mine, and conduct other forms of business for several months at a time.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The gentleman has made out a good case. Will he accept the usual attorney-fee amendment?

Mr. THOMASON. Certainly.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remit the payment by Burke Rose, of Del Rio, Tex., of the sum of $1,230, being amount of duties demanded and collected by the Treasury Department on certain sheep returned to the United States from Mexico in the month of October 1925.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the bill insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

E. G. DOTY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2750, for the relief of E. G. Doty.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $146.03 to E. G. Doty as reimbursement of expense incurred in line of duty as a United States deputy marshal.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert "That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to allow Scott C. White, United States marshal, western district of Texas, credit in the amount of $146.03, being the amount advanced by the said marshal to E. G. Doty, a deputy marshal, covering expense incurred by the said Doty in attempting to serve certain process placed in his hands for service."

The committee amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: "A bill for the relief of Scott C. White."

E. C. WEST

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7437, for the relief of E. C. West.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to E. C. West, of Dunn, N.C., the sum of $201.59 as reimbursement of substitute-clerk hire paid by him from December 31, 1921, to September 30, 1922, while acting as postmaster at Dunn, N.C.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ELSIE SEGAR

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2763, for the relief of Elsie Segar, administratrix of C. M. A. Sorensen and of Holger E. Sorensen.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ESTATE OF HARRY F. STERN

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2764, for the relief of the estate of Harry F. Stern.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This bill seeks to pay Mr. Stern $18,704.89 out of the people's tax money. The Treasury Department reports against it, and I am constrained to object.

Mr. TURPIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but in the meantime I call the gentleman's attention to this part of the report from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury:

It has been the policy of Congress to include in the revenue acts limitation provisions by the operation of which after a certain period of time it becomes impossible for the Government to assert additional liabilities, or for the taxpayer to assert a claim for a refund. It not infrequently happens that a taxpayer finds himself barred by the operation of the statute of limitations from securing a refund of an amount of tax paid in excess of what was due. In such cases the taxpayer often feels that he is entitled to get back the amount overpaid, notwithstanding that the statute of limitations has run, and bills are often introduced into Congress seeking such relief.

They go on to show that if they once go behind the statute of limitations, there is no end to such claims. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. TURPIN. Harry F. Stern and his wife died about the same time. Their estate paid a heavy inheritance tax.

Mr. BLANTON. Which it should have done.

Mr. TURPIN. Which it should have done.

Mr. BLANTON. Because people who get the protection of the Government and have the protection of our flag all through their lifetime ought to pay for it when they die.

Mr. TURPIN. At about that same time the State of Pennsylvania had passed a recapture law in which 80 percent of the tax was to go to the State of Pennsylvania. The attorney paid the money to the Government. The recapture act of the State of Pennsylvania was attacked and was in the Supreme Court for some time. Eighty percent of the money was paid to Pennsylvania and 60 percent of the money was paid to the Government, which made practically a 50-percent payment which had been made twice. The Government admitted that it was not entitled to the money, but stood behind the statute of limitations. That came about because the law which the State of Pennsylvania passed was in the Supreme Court on the matter of its constitutionality, and the Stern estate was not asked for the money by the State until 3 weeks after the time had elapsed to re-collect it from the Government. Had they asked before that, within 3 years, the Government would have paid the money without protest.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I have a constituent who is entitled to a refund of $24,000, but he waited too long, and the statute of limitations has run against him. He cannot get his money. If we were to pass a private bill going behind the statute of limitations there would be thousands of claims against the Government.

Mr. TURPIN. Does the gentleman hold that a man should have to pay his taxes twice because of an error?

Mr. BLANTON. I am a strong believer in the statute of limitations.

Mr. TURPIN. I bring to the attention of the gentleman the fact that the Claims Committee has taken this up carefully and recommended it favorably. The Senate Committee did the same thing. There is a humane side to this. The Senate passed the bill on March 29 without objection. It is a case where a man had to pay $18,000 twice.

Mr. BLANTON. The Committee on Claims usually "recommends favorably." If I ever have to go back to the practice of law, I should like very much to practice my cases before the Committee on Claims instead of before juries and courts, because I could always get a judgment from the Committee on Claims, when sometimes I could not get one from the court.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. WALTER. In this particular matter I sent for the attorney who represented the estate and he explained that he had made a mistake. He was very frank about it. He paid $18,000 to the Federal Government instead of to the State of Pennsylvania, and for that mistake of his the estate must pay twice.

Mr. BLANTON. When a doctor makes a mistake it is buried in the graveyard. When a lawyer makes a mistake his client must pay for it. If we do not stop asking the Government of the United States to pay for every mistake that the people of the Government make, God only knows what is going to become of the Treasury.

Mr. WALTER. I agree with what the gentleman says——

Mr. BLANTON. There must be a stop somewhere, where the Government is not liable for everything.

Mr. WALTER. This is not a case of where the statute of limitations applies as it ordinarily does, because in this case the money was actually paid.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry, but I shall have to object.

Mr. TURPIN. May I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice until I can talk with the gentleman?

I wish the gentleman would withdraw his objection. This is a case where the money was paid to the Government, and the Government was not entitled to the money. Does the gentleman think the Government ought to keep it?

Mr. BLANTON. I am thinking of the bad precedent the passage of this bill would establish. It would cause thousands of new claims to be filed and would cost the Government millions of dollars. I have my duty to perform here, and I am trying to perform it. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

POWELL & GOLDSTEIN, INC.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2997, for the relief of Powell & Goldstein, Inc.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Reserving the right to object, I should like to be assured by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HAINES] of some of the details with respect to this bill.

Mr. HAINES. This is a claim for revenue stamps for cigars, supposedly lost in the mail. I want to assure the gentleman that these stamps were never lost in the mail. The fact of the matter is, these revenue stamps were never put into the envelop. We convicted the stamp clerk in the revenue office in York and collected over $4,000 which this stamp clerk paid, and he also served 90 days in jail. I am rather confident that is where those stamps went.

Mr. BLANCHARD. That is the very point I wanted to raise in connection with this claim. As I understand the departmental regulations, if you order revenue stamps and make no provision for insurance or for registering the stamps, then the purchaser of the stamps takes his own risk. Unless I can be assured definitely that these stamps were never placed in the envelop, I certainly would have to object.

Mr. GRISWOLD. It is not the amount involved, but it is the principle that a purchaser of stamps has always been required, if he wanted to insure delivery of the stamps, to advance the cost of registering the envelop containing the stamps.

Mr. BLANCHARD. That is perfectly right.

Mr. GRISWOLD. And in this case he did not advance this cost. He took the risk whether the stamps were put in there or not. He did not protect himself or seek to protect himself under the regulations. If we allow this bill to pass, we are in the position in the future on all revenue stamps, of simply saying that they do not need to insure the delivery.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I differ with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRISWOLD] to this extent, that if a Government employee never put the stamps in the envelop, then, of course, the purchaser who did take his own risk as to delivery after they were once placed in the mail has no chance of ever receiving the stamps.

Mr. GRISWOLD. He would have protected himself, because the envelop would have been properly sealed.

Mr. HAINES. This is the general practice. There is only a distance of about 18 miles between the two points. The revenue stamps were handled by employees of this Government, and it seems to me we are going pretty far if we say we cannot trust our Government employees, and that when our people put up their money and do not receive that for which they pay, we deny them that which rightfully belongs to them.

Mr. GRISWOLD. They are entitled to it, provided they take the ordinary means under the regulations to protect themselves, which this purchaser did not in this case.

Mr. HAINES. I do not like to see this poor foreman of a cigar factory lose this $100. I say to you upon my reputation as a Member of this House that I am rather confident these revenue stamps never went into that envelop, because that revenue-stamp clerk made retribution and paid back to the Government over $4,000, and in addition he served 90 days in jail.

Mr. GRISWOLD. The gentleman says there is proof that they were placed in the envelop.

Mr. HAINES. Oh, it is supposed so.

Mr. GRISWOLD. We can only go by the report. I must object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HAINES. I am very sorry.

HENRY HARRISON GRIFFITH

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3161, for the relief of Henry Harrison Griffith.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is another one of those bills where we are asked to waive the statute of limitations. The claim has been outlawed for 15 years. I do wish we could adopt some uniformity of policy. Personally, I do not like to object to these bills. If the gentleman can give me some assurance that this is a meritorious claim, I do not intend to object.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, this is a very meritorious claim. This man was an old mail carrier. He came into the world right after the close of the War between the States. He received no education. He carried mail in the days when they carried it with horse and buggy, over muddy roads, exposed to all the vicissitudes of the elements. He was injured in the service and he did not know that he had a right to present a claim for compensation.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Can it be proven that his injuries arose from the service?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I have no personal knowledge of anything except the fact that this old fellow has been bedridden for the last 3 or 4 years.

He is a helpless cripple. I cannot assure the gentleman that he can establish the fact that his injuries were service connected.

Mr. BLANCHARD. But the gentleman believes there is a question of fact involved.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I think there is a good basis of fact; and I may say to the gentleman, Mr. Speaker, that this bill is in accord with the bill H.R. 2321, which was passed without objection last Tuesday, for the relief of Capt. J. O. Faria, the steamboat captain who did not know his rights and let the year run out. We gave him the right to take up his case, and that is all I am asking be done for this old bed-ridden mail carrier; give him the right to present his claim, even if he does not get anything at all.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I shall not object, but I do wish that we could agree upon a policy as to how far back we are going to permit these old claims to be dug up.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized and directed to extend the benefits of the act of September 7, 1916, entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", as amended, to Henry Harrison Griffith, a former employee of the Post Office Department, in the same manner and to the same extent as if said Henry Harrison Griffith had made application for benefits of said act within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A. RANDOLPH HOLLADAY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3236, for the relief of A. Randolph Holladay.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I shall be forced to object. This is another bill where the statute of limitations has run. This claim is in the amount of $11,172.15, and the Treasury Department has reported against the bill. This $11,172.15 should not be paid out of the Treasury. I shall be forced to object.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that this also is a bill to refund income taxes. I think we ought to stop all refunds of income taxes. I think Congress ought to enact a law making it illegal to refund taxes paid in years prior to 1928. Had it not been for the refunding of $4,500,000,000 over the past 12 years we probably would have no deficit today.

Mr. BLANTON. The statute of limitations has run against this claim. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman withhold his objection to permit me to make an explanation?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. I think perhaps the gentleman is mistaken with respect to the statute of limitations having run against this particular claim.

Mr. BLANTON. There are some things which come from Republican Secretaries of the Treasury which I can believe. A former colleague of ours, Ogden Mills, reported against this bill when he was Secretary of the Treasury, and said it ought not to pass.

Mr. ADAMS. But there have been favorable reports on this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Let us see what Ogden Mills said:

The position which this Department has taken and which Congress has sanctioned is that it is a sound policy to have statutes of limitation, and that the policy upon which statutes are based must be adhered to notwithstanding hardship in particular cases. The closing agreement is in the nature of a voluntary invocation of the statute of limitations.

Very truly yours,

OGDEN L. MILLS,
Secretary of the Treasury.

That is a report against this bill, for he says limitation has run against it, and while I do not usually follow Ogden Mills on matters political, I am following him now in backing up his recommendation respecting this claim.

Mr. ADAMS. I will admit that he is not a very good authority in this particular case. Permit me to call attention to the fact that this bill has passed the Senate and certainly is meritorious.

Mr. BLANTON. Practically all private bills pass in another body. My objection is based more on the general policy of establishing a principle than it is against the amount of the bill, for the amount is only $11,172.15. It involves a big principle, however. When we once go behind the statute of limitations on a claim like this, what is the use of having a statute of limitation? If we waive the statute of limitation for one individual we must waive it for all American citizens. We must treat them all alike.

Mr. ADAMS. I may say to the gentleman that in this particular instance this tax was paid by the son, who at the time of paying the tax acquainted the revenue officer with the fact that, while the proceeds were turned over to him, the stock was registered in the name of his father; and at the time of paying he signed a waiver. The father was afterward taxed, and the father was assured that the amount paid by the son would be refunded.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sure that if our friend were not interested in this particular bill he would say it is a sound policy of government not to waive the statute of limitation; we must have a statute of limitation.

Mr. ADAMS. Will not the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly; but eventually I shall have to object in the end. This bill must not pass.

GEORGE B. BEAVER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3300, for the relief of George B. Beaver.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, just to clear the RECORD. A 4-year period is involved, and the postmaster is disallowed credit for payment, perhaps through ignorance of civil-service rules and requirements, but nevertheless payment over a 4-year period to two assistants. Am I correct when I say two assistants?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. One was a substitute clerk and one a substitute carrier.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask this specific question: Just how could a situation of this kind arise and continue over a period of 4 years? Does this grow out of the audit of a postmaster's account or is it just a disallowance of these payments?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. No. This was checked up by the Civil Service Commission. They claim that these men were not taken from the list, and I think the failure rose from the fact that the postmaster did not know about the list. He says he did not have a list. The office had been raised from the third class to the second class. The Government was not out one cent; it is just a question of putting on the right men.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Then it is not a question of reimbursing him for payments that he made?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. No; but the trouble is that without this bill this amount will be charged against him. The Comptroller has very kindly held this up for 2 years in order to permit me to get it straightened out.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I assumed that such must be the situation.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to credit the account of George B. Beaver, postmaster at McMinnville, Tenn., with the sum of $5,944.41, and to certify such credit to the Comptroller General of the United States. Such sum represents the amount paid by such postmaster during the period from September 16, 1927, to April 7, 1931, as compensation to two persons appointed by him as substitute postal clerk and substitute letter carrier, respectively, which amount was disallowed in his account because such persons were not taken from the civil service eligible list.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOHN MERRILL

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3302, for the relief of John Merrill.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill provides for payment of $2,500 on account of a gunshot wound in the leg. Has the gentleman any idea how serious the injuries were?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes; I have personal knowledge. I saw this man when I was over in his county not long since and he is very badly crippled.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Permanently injured?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. If the gentleman will accept the usual amendment I have no objection.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. There is no one involved in this at all. It is a case where I was trying to render a service to a poor fellow who was absolutely disabled.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $2,500 to John Merrill on account of gunshot wound received in left leg by a shot from a Federal prohibition enforcement officer, in the act of destroying a seized still, on July 19, 1930, in Polk County, Tenn., said Merrill being a deputy sheriff at the time and on a raid near Ocoee, Polk County, Tenn.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 2, after the word "Tennessee", insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for recognition in order to pay tribute to a friend, Arthur Rump, of St. Louis, who passed away Monday.

Mr. Rump was formerly an employee of the St. Louis post office. He was the leader of the post-office band and for years one of the outstanding athletes among the nearly 3,000 Government employees in my city.

While walking through the post office attending to his duties about 32 years ago a bundle of papers fell from an automatic carrier, striking him on the neck, causing paralysis. Later a bone disease of some kind set in that baffled the skill of leading physicians and surgeons all over the country. It was not long before he lost the use of hands and limbs and was required to remain in bed.

Mr. Rump wanted no sympathy nor financial assistance at that time; all he asked was an opportunity to carry on in his own way so that he could make a living for an invalid wife and his mother. He became a notary public accepting acknowledgments, he solicited subscriptions to magazines and newspapers over the telephone, and also wrote insurance. His case soon became one that attracted the attention of newspapers and magazines throughout the country. Known as the "champion optimist", he was an honorary member of the Optimist Club, of St. Louis, a national organization.

Mr. Rump was my personal friend. He did not reside in my district, but I never failed to pay him visits. I would enter his bedroom, say "Hello", ask him how he was, and the same reply was always forthcoming, "Never felt better in my life; sit down and let us have a chat." Over his bed were large signs, "Down but not out" and "Don't worry." He just would not let you sympathize with him.

Arthur Rump was the only man, so far as I have been able to learn, that the Congress of the United States recognized three times by passing private bills granting him relief.

About 10 years after the accident his friends petitioned Congress to extend relief to him. Bills were introduced and Congress allowed him $2,500. Had Mr. Rump been injured while in the employ of a private corporation, any jury in the land, seeing his condition, would have awarded him $25,000 or more.

When the Government employees petitioned Congress for the passage of a law that would provide benefits to them if injured in line of duty, Mr. Rump's case was cited as an example. He personally petitioned every Member of Congress to vote for the measure which created the Employees' Compensation Commission. After that law was passed, a bill was introduced which provided for the placing of his name on the roll. That bill became a law. Later when the Congress increased the amount allowed employees for total and permanent disability, a third bill was introduced after the Commission had ruled they could not recognize Mr. Rump for the increase. That bill also became a law. It was recognition justly deserved, for no one will ever know how he suffered all through those long years, night and day.

Picture, if you will, a man in bed, unable to move an inch one way or the other, deprived of the use of his arms and legs, with a telephone on a special attachment, calling his friends throughout the day and evening, not asking for help but just to say "Hello", and in the end say, "Don't forget me whenever you intend to subscribe to a paper or magazine." No business man in St. Louis, no matter how busy he might be, would refuse to answer the telephone when he was told that Arthur Rump was on the line.

His fellow postal workers never forgot him. Annually they would gather with the post-office band and his friends and celebrate his birthday. Rump always insisted on serving refreshments, some beverage and cake.

One of his best friends, August A. Busch, the brewer, preceded Mr. Rump to the grave a few weeks. Mr. Busch provided his old friend with a truck built specially so that his bed could be wheeled thereon, and Mr. Busch's chauffeur would drive the stricken man out in the country to spend the day. Never once would he go to the city but always to the country, the hills of the Ozarks he loved so well.

After the death of his mother and his wife, Mr. Rump was cared for by his faithful nurse, Miss Agnes Sheets. She never left him over a period of years. Miss Sheets also acted as his secretary, writing his letters on the typewriter.

In order that the House and the country will have an idea of the character of this man I am going to read a letter I received from him after the President's order reducing the compensation paid injured Government employees 15 percent went into effect last year. The letter follows:

ST. LOUIS, MO., July 24, 1933.

Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN,
United States Congress, Washington, D.C.

DEAR FRIEND JACK: I am enclosing herewith a letter from the United States Compensation Commission that I am at a loss to understand, for I entered no protest. If I had had any intention of making a protest, it would have come direct to you.

You will no doubt recall that in a letter a few months ago I mentioned the fact that I was more than willing to accept a reduction in accordance with the President's orders.

Despite the fact that my business has been ruined under present conditions, and, as you are aware, my total disability compels me to employ a constant attendant, I am still willing to do my part to assist President Roosevelt to carry out his program.

I am willing to accept the 15-percent decrease as per the President's wishes. I am in sympathy with his ideas to balance the Budget. It is no more than fair that I join with him to bring the country out of this condition. I am sure he will be able to do so. The people are with him.

With kindest regards, my faithful nurse, Miss Sheets, joins me.

Yours cheerfully,

ARTHUR E. RUMP.

The country has lost a patriotic citizen and the Government employees a real friend. If you knew him as I did, you could not help but mourn his loss as I do. I cherished his friendship. [Applause.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

VETERANS' LEGISLATION

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker: Many veterans in my congressional district are writing me asking for information as to just how they will be affected by the veterans' provisions contained in the independent offices appropriation act. I wish to present this analysis of just what benefits the veterans will receive from this legislation. The independent offices appropriation act not only carries additional benefits to veterans but it also carries the annual appropriations for the Veterans' Administration.

Gen. Frank T. Hines, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, announces that the Veterans' Administration is taking immediate action to make the veterans' provisions of the independent offices appropriation act effective as soon as possible. Consideration will be first given to those veterans who were removed from the rolls by reason of the provisions of the Economy Act of March 20, 1933, whose rights to benefits are automatically reestablished by the new law. In all cases where it is possible to restore pension or compensation without the necessity of an administrative review such action is being taken.

Immediate attention is also being given to those groups of cases wherein a review of evidence will be required to determine what benefits may come from the new law. The adjudication of such cases is to be accomplished with the least possible delay.

According to the Veterans' Administration it is estimated that approximately 330,000 World War veterans, 180,600 Spanish War veterans, and 34,900 dependents will be affected by this legislation. It is further estimated that there will be paid out an additional amount to provide for these increased benefits to our disabled war veterans amounting to approximately $83,000,000 annually.

Section 26 of the new law reinstated the former compensation rates for totally blind World War veterans, except where the veteran is being furnished hospital care by the Government and except as to cases involving fraud, mistake, or misrepresentation.

Section 27 provides for the payment of compensation to veterans who, on March 19, 1933, had established service connection under section 200 of the World War Veterans' Act of 1924, as amended, and reenacted the provisions of that section as to such cases, except where the veteran entered the service subsequent to November 11, 1918, where clear and unmistakable evidence discloses that the disease, injury, or disability had inception before or after the period of service, unless there was aggravation or where the prior service connection had been established by fraud, clear or unmistakable error, or misrepresentation, but as to all cases embraced by these three exceptions, all reasonable doubt is to be resolved in favor of the veteran and the burden of proof is to be upon the Government. Payment in such cases is to be 75 percent of the amount payable in such cases on March 19, 1933.

Section 28 provides for the restoration of the World War rates in effect on March 19, 1933, for service-connected disability, except that reduction is permitted in accordance with regulations pertaining to payment of pension to men in hospitals. It continues the rating schedule in effect on March 19, 1933, under which ratings are based as far as possible upon the average impairment of earning capacity in civil occupation similar to the occupation of the veteran at the time of his enlistment. It further provides for service connection in death cases for the widows and children of those veterans who died prior to the enactment of the new act and who, if living, would be able to reestablish service connection thereunder.

The limitations as to receipt of pension and salary by Government employees and as to the 50-percent reduction of benefits while any person entitled thereto resides outside the continental limits of the United States are not for application in these cases.

Section 29 amends section 6 of the Economy Act of March 20, 1933, as amended, by adding a provision authorizing hospitalization or domiciliary care within the limitations existing in Veterans' Administration facilities of any veteran of any war, not dishonorably discharged, who is suffering from disability, disease, or defect and who is in need of hospitalization or domiciliary care and is unable to defray the necessary expenses therefor, including transportation to and from the hospital. It provides that the statement under oath of the veteran as to his inability to pay for the service sought shall be accepted as sufficient.

Section 30 provides as to those veterans of the Spanish-American War who entered service on or before August 12, 1898, and persons who served in the Boxer Rebellion or the Philippine Insurrection who were on the rolls March 19, 1933, receiving pension for disability or age by virtue of the new law are entitled to receive not less than 75 percent of the pension being paid to them on March 19, 1933, subject to the limitation requiring exemption from Federal income tax and as to Federal employees, the limitation that not more than $6 per month can be paid to such employee if his salary, if single, exceeds $1,000, or if married, $2,500. The provisions pertaining to payment of pension to men in hospitals, as established under Public, No. 2, and the veterans' regulations, are applicable to these cases. The benefits of this amendment do not extend to disabilities resulting from willful misconduct.

The limitations as to the 50-percent reduction of benefits while any person entitled thereto resides outside the continental limits of the United States is not for application in these cases.

Section 31 reestablishes the provisions of section 213 of the World War Veterans' Act, whereby a person who is injured as a result of training, hospitalization, or medical or surgical treatment or examination is awarded compensation on the same basis as if the condition were incurred in the military or naval service. Application must be made within 2 years after the injury or aggravation or death, or after the passage of the act, whichever is the later date.

Section 32 repeals that portion of section 9 of the Economy Act which barred persons in receipt of benefits from participating in any determination or decision with respect to claims for benefits.

Section 33 changes the title of payments to be made in service-connected cases of World War veterans from pension to compensation.

Section 34 provides that payments shall be effective from date of passage of the act.

Section 35 provides for the payment of those insurance claims which have been determined to be payable prior to but in which payment has not commenced on March 19, 1933.

This briefly covers the main points of the veterans' provisions of the new Independent Offices Appropriation Act as interpreted by the Veterans' Administration. Under the Economy Act last year more than 29,000 veterans were removed from the rolls on the grounds that their disabilities were not service-connected; yet, approximately 90 percent of these are tubercular cases. The passage of this legislation restores 75 percent of the former compensation in cases in which the benefits were reduced and brings back to good standing that class of cases designated as "presumptive."

Many veterans' cases have been handled by me during my service in Congress, and I have observed that there are many worthy cases which could not be successfully adjudicated because the veterans were unable to contact either their doctor who treated them during the time of the war or to contact their comrades who might have had some actual knowledge of their condition at that time.

As I just stated, under this new act the burden of proof rests upon the Government rather than the veteran, and this is most fair, because after all these years many veterans have lost the ability to prove their cases. Under the Economy Act more than $486,000,000 had been taken away from the veterans and only $117,000,000 had been restored to take care of special cases. This restoration, however, did not take care of the thousands of worthy cases which the veterans could not sustain through no fault of their own.

My vote for the full payment of the adjusted-service certificate in behalf of the veterans and my vote for the independent offices appropriation act are the only two occasions on which I have not voted with the present administration. While H.R. 1, providing for the full payment of the adjusted-service certificates, has not been made law, I am hopeful that it will be enacted into law at this session of Congress. I sincerely believe, however, if the bonus is paid in full, that, together with the veterans' provisions of the independent offices appropriation act, will do as much to fight the depression and bring back prosperity as any other legislation advanced by the recovery program.

I feel certain that the veterans of my district know that I have always been their consistent friend. My interest in their behalf did not start with the present session of Congress or in the last few months. I have tried to be sympathetic with their interests at all times. I am in receipt of a letter from Hon. John Thomas Taylor, vice chairman, national legislative committee of the American Legion. I also received a letter to the same effect from Hon. James E. Van Zandt, commander in chief, Veterans of Foreign Wars:

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
NATIONAL LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE,
ROOM 625 BOND BUILDING,
Washington, D.C., March 30, 1934.

Hon. CHARLES L. ABERNETHY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: May I take this opportunity to express to you, in clear and unmistakable language, our sincere appreciation of the action which you took on March 27, in voting to make certain that the amendments to the independent offices bill dealing with World War veterans were enacted into law.

In my opinion, this is the most important legislation that has ever come before the Congress, affecting as it did the very life of thousands of disabled World War veterans and the future welfare of their dependents.

Their care is now, and always has been, the chief concern of the American Legion, and it is for this reason that I want you to know, as I know, the deep sense of gratitude the veterans throughout the country have for what you did for them on March 27.

Very sincerely yours,

JOHN THOMAS TAYLOR,
Vice Chairman, National Legislative Committee.

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES,
March 30, 1934.

Congressman CHARLES L. ABERNETHY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I wish to convey to you the sincere thanks of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States for your vote and support which resulted in the return of benefits to so many of our deserving war veterans.

We, of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, who have all served this Nation in actual war zones, are happy to recognize the significant part you played in the above-mentioned restoration. The grim despair and deep sorrow which was written into the lives of so many of the Nation's defenders has been greatly lifted by your sincere consideration.

I am confident that you must feel a sense of gratification to know that thousands of unfortunate war veterans have been made happy in the knowledge that a grateful Nation will not forget their sacrifice in time of war.

Very sincerely,

JAMES E. VAN ZANDT,
Commander in Chief.

I am pleased that my action has met the approval of two of the great veterans' organizations, and I hope the veterans in my district will take the opportunity to write me, so that I may have their views on any legislation that affects them. This will be most helpful to me, as I will no doubt be called upon again to vote on measures of vital concern to them.

Mr. Speaker, while I have been absent from some of the sessions of the House, due to illness, I am pleased to inform the House and the people of my district that I have regained my health and strength and am now in a position to carry on my duties with old-time vigor.

Some are trying to make political capital out of the fact that I have been ill, greatly aggravated by the strenuous work with my heavy duties as a Member of this House. I am sure that this attempt to capitalize my illness, in an effort to build up their own political fortunes, will be condemned by the people of my district and that I will be returned to Congress again by an increased and overwhelming majority. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ABERNETHY. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. May I ask if the gentleman can give us some information as to when the provisions of the independent offices bill affecting veterans will be put into effect?

Mr. ABERNETHY. My understanding is it will be immediate. This is my understanding from the Veterans' Administration.

TREASURER OF THE STATE OF MISSISSIPPI

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3345, to authorize the Department of Agriculture to issue a duplicate check in favor of the Mississippi State treasurer, the original check having been lost.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 3646, as amended, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, the disbursing clerk of the Department of Agriculture is authorized and directed to issue, without the requirement of an indemnity bond, a duplicate of original check no. 534971, drawn April 3, 1929, in favor of the Mississippi State treasurer, for $1,871.02, and lost, stolen, or miscarried in the mails.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

T. J. MORRISON

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3551, for the relief of T. J. Morrison.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to T. J. Morrison, of Elizabethtown, Ky., the sum of $210 for water actually supplied to the post office at Ravenna, Ky., during the period of 9 years and 5 months from November 27, 1922, until April 27, 1932.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$210" and insert in lieu thereof "$195.41 in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States"; and on page 2, after the figures in line 1, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

O. S. CORDON

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3579, for the relief of O. S. Cordon.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to O. S. Cordon, postmaster at Rigby, Idaho, the sum of $17.37 to reimburse him for the amount of postal funds lost as a result of the failure of the First National Bank of Rigby, Idaho.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PAUL BULFINCH

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3580, for the relief of Paul Bulfinch.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I presume the author of the bill will have no objection to an amendment providing that this shall be in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States and also the usual attorneys' fee provision.

Mr. COFFIN. That is perfectly satisfactory, Mr. Speaker.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Paul Bulfinch, postmaster at American Falls, Idaho, the sum of $158.54 to reimburse him for the amount of postal funds lost by him as a result of the failure of the First National Bank of American Falls, Idaho, on February 8, 1923.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOPE: After the figures in line 6, insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States"; and at the end of line 9, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FRANCES E. ELLER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3611, for the relief of Frances E. Eller.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice that all that was ever asked by the claimant in her bill of particulars was $422.50. Will the gentleman agree to reduce the amount to $422.50?

Mr. GAVAGAN. Yes.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. That amount embraces every item of damage asked for in this report, as I read it. I also presume the gentleman will have no objection to the usual attorneys' fee amendment?

Mr. GAVAGAN. I will accept both amendments.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Frances E. Eller the sum of $500. Such sum shall be in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States for damages resulting from an accident involving a United States mail truck.

The Clerk read the amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of New York, as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. HANCOCK of New York: In line 5, strike out "$500" and insert in lieu thereof "$422.50"; and, at the end of line 8, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CLARA C. TALMADGE

The Clerk called the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 3614, for the relief of Clara C. Talmadge.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Reserving the right to object, the party seeking relief has had herself transferred to the Civil Service Retirement Commission and is receiving $121.72 a month. From what I can gather, she has been paid somethink like $2,500 or $4,900. I do not see why she wants a lump sum.

Mr. GAVAGAN. This woman is permanently injured. Her right leg is shortened 1¾ inches and badly deformed. She has a 10-percent disability in her left foot and suffers continuous pain in her hips and spine and is compelled to walk on crutches. The accident happened solely through the negligence of the Government. She has been for 8 long months in a hospital, and she has paid all these bills herself. She is permanently disabled and helpless.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Did not she receive the benefits of the Compensation Act?

Mr. GAVAGAN. No, sir; she did for a time, but they have been discontinued. This is in full settlement of all claims against the Government.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. She would receive compensation from the Civil Service Retirement Commission besides this settlement?

Mr. GAVAGAN. That is correct; but she has been contributing to that fund.

Mr. O'MALLEY. She has been contributing to that fund, and she would get that anyway.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Yes; she has an inherent right to that.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned, I will not object.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $5,000 to Clara C. Talmadge on account of injuries sustained on January 11, 1928, and while in the performance of her duties as a stenographer in the United States Customs Service at appraiser's warehouse building, 641 Washington Street, New York City, N.Y.

With the following committee amendment:

Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, the bill we just passed appropriated $5,000 without any provision being made to raise the revenue. There are 361 on the list today, and if all were passed it will appropriate $1,842,396.95 out of the Treasury.

I think that the question of taxation is going to be the most serious one in this country, and it certainly is in my own State. In my State all public schools are going to need Federal aid soon if they are to remain open.

Last night the Ohio State Legislature defeated a bill proposed by the Governor to levy a 3-percent sales tax on the people of my State. It is the third time that the legislature has refused to enact a vicious, unfair sales tax, as advocated by Gov. George White. Our State has to raise $72,000,000, and it was contemplated by the Governor that the sales tax would raise $52,000,000. Schools will close because the Governor has his long arm of protection around the public utilities, big bankers, and loan sharks. The Governor refused to tax the public utilities. Like all the big bank racketeers, he wants to tax the common people instead of taxing the vested interests, and like all of the millionaire crowd, he chooses the sales tax as the proper vehicle to soak the poor and protect the rich.

Seventy percent of all of the commodities sold in this country are purchased by individuals with $5,000 annual income or less. So you can readily perceive that 70 percent of the revenue derived from a sales tax would fall upon the backs of people with small incomes.

Statisticians in my State of Ohio state that today 80 percent of the State's income is received by only 10 percent of our people. In other words, 90 percent of Ohio's citizens are receiving only 10 percent of the wealth being created.

Yet Governor White, known as " Sales Tax George ", wants to shift an additional burden of $52,000,000 on the backs of this 90 percent of the people who are receiving only 10 percent of the income.

For years past I have fought the sales tax with every ounce of energy and effort at my command. I shall continue this fight, unrelenting and undaunted. In my campaign for the nomination for United States Senator, unalterable opposition to a sales tax in any form whatsoever will be one of the planks in my platform.

He refuses to tax the money in the banks, except a nominal sum of $2 per thousand, which the banks gladly pay in order to get the deposits. He refuses to tax wealth. He refuses to place a tax on the corporations, and our State is in the position of having no revenue with which to keep open its public schools. A protest came in this morning from the town of Dennison, the home of my colleague, Mr. WEST, in which it was stated that the teachers there had been paid for only 5 weeks' salary out of this term of school. We have similar protests from many other towns in the State, all because we have a Governor who is protecting the public utilities, the big bankers, the 36-percent loan sharks. We could raise $10,000,000 a year by taxing the 36-percent loan sharks 10 percent. They are charging their borrowers 36 percent, and we can raise $20,000,000 a year by taxing the public utilities in my State. Yet this man, who represents all of these big interests and is the mouthpiece of them, wants to come to the United States Senate this year as the junior Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Who should come?

Mr. TRUAX. Modesty prevents my suggesting that the gentleman from Ohio who is now addressing the House would be the proper person.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. Is this speech made for the information of the House or for home consumption, or to advance the gentleman's own candidacy?

Mr. TRUAX. I would say to the gentleman that it is for all three purposes. But, Mr. Speaker, when we are appropriating thousands of dollars every day, with no provision made to finance them, it is time for us to pause and consider how it is going to be paid. When we passed the veterans' legislation we were criticized because we did not provide the revenues to finance what it would cost. It is my purpose to correct that by introducing a bill that will tax public utilities in this country enough to pay that $228,000,000. Our present revenue bill just scratches the surface of taxation. In the case of incomes of $500,000 and over, the surtax is raised only from 57 percent to 59 percent. I would make it 95 percent, at least. On all incomes of over $100,000 a year I would tax them 95 percent on the excess, and I think we ought to cut that down to $75,000, because certainly no man in this great country of ours is worth any more per year than is the President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt, worth to the people of this great country of ours. We have not made any attempt to tax wealth, to tax the huge corporations as they should be taxed. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to whatever the gentleman was doing. It is unnecessary for me to inform the House why I did not raise the point of order against the gentleman's speech, which was entirely out of order. The reason ought to be obvious, that while I am really very fond of the gentleman, yet anything that I can do, so long as I have charge of the Private Calendar, to help him on his way to the Senate I should gladly do, even to the point of withholding points of order.

Mr. CULKIN. Does the gentleman think that helping the gentleman on his way to the Senate would help the Private Calendar any?

Mr. BLACK. Well, it might help the Senate some.

THELMA LUCY ROUNDS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3636, for the relief of Thelma Lucy Rounds.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The person for whom relief is sought was in the armory of the ship, an unauthorized part of the ship for visitors, as I gather from the report, and was shot in the leg.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. While inspecting a pistol in the hands of some private?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. She was not inspecting the pistol. The lady was on the ship. It was visitors' day, and she was permitted to go over the ship. The sailor was showing her the ship and displayed a revolver which accidentally discharged, and a bullet went through her leg.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Went through the calf of her leg?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. What is the nature of the permanent injury she suffers now?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I could not tell you how she is at the present moment. She was in bad shape for a good many months after the accident and is clearly entitled to reimbursement. If the accident happened aboard a privately owned ship she would have been able to go to court and secure damages.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. In the matter of an injury like that, I think $1,500 is about all she ought to have.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Cannot the gentleman make it $2,000?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. No; $1,500; and I think that is $500 more than it is worth. With that understanding, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500 to Thelma Lucy Rounds, Fall River, Mass., as full compensation for injuries received while visiting the U.S.S. Bridge at Newport, R.I., on July 12, 1931, when an enlisted man showing visitors a revolver fired a shot through Miss Round's leg, causing injuries which resulted in a long period of unemployment.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "as full compensation" and insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

At the end of the bill insert: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ZIONCHECK: Page 1, line 5, strike out "$2,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JULIA E. SMITH

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3705, for the relief of Julia E. Smith.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,500 to Julia E. Smith.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, after the words "Julia E. Smith", insert "in full settlement of all claims against the United States because of personal injuries sustained by the said Julia E. Smith when struck and injured on or about October 13, 1925, in the city of Boston, Mass., by a motor truck owned and operated by the Post Office Department of the United States: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CAPT. GUY M. KINMAN

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3725, for the relief of Capt. Guy M. Kinman.

Mr. CRAVENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute for the House bill the Senate bill, S. 163.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Guy M. Kinman, captain, United States Army, Washington, D.C., the sum of $1,582.70, in full satisfaction of his loss on account of damage by water to his household goods on August 18, 1931, while temporarily in authorized storage in a Government warehouse at Fort Myer, Va., in connection with authorized change of station.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

MARY ORINSKI

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3748, for the relief of Mary Orinski.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Reserving the right to object, will the author of the bill explain the bill, please?

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, in this case Mary Orinski deposited two $500 Liberty bonds as collateral for a bond executed by one Mr. Loch for the appearance of an alien in deportation proceedings at Detroit. This alien disappeared for awhile, but they located him. In the meantime the bonds had been turned over to the Treasury Department and could not be converted into cash again. The Treasury Department and the immigration authorities are all willing to give this money back to Mrs. Orinski, who put up the Liberty bonds for his appearance.

I might say that Mrs. Orinski, backed by Mr. Loch, the other surety, was responsible in again reaching this alien and delivering him over to the authorities. He was deported, sent to Europe, and is not here any longer. The Department of Labor has given a favorable report on this bill.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Does the gentleman think this is a good bill?

Mr. SADOWSKI. I think so.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000 to Mary Orinski, which sum was paid by the said Mary Orinski to the United States on the bond of Stefan Krync: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HUNTER B. GLASSCOCK

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3749, for the relief of Hunter B. Glasscock.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to credit the account of Hunter B. Glasscock, former postmaster at Springton, W.Va., in the sum of $623.60. Such sum represents the amount due the United States on the final auditing of the account of the said Hunter B. Glasscock covering the period from his resignation on July 3, 1931, to December 10, 1931, both dates inclusive, during which period another person was in charge of the post office at Springton, W.Va. By reason of the failure of such person to file a bond he was not, under the postal laws and regulations, duly qualified as acting postmaster, and the said Hunter B. Glasscock is held responsible for the conduct of the post office during such period.

SEC. 2. The surety on the bond of the said Hunter B. Glasscock, as postmaster at Springton, W.Va., is hereby relieved of any liability on account of such shortage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ARABELLA E. BODKIN

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3868, for the relief of Arabella E. Bodkin.

There being no objection the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to Arabella E. Bodkin, or her executors or administrators, the sum of $28,000 in compliance with the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Arabella E. Bodkin, sometimes named and referred to as "Mrs. Patrick H. Bodkin", against the United States; such findings having been made pursuant to the act of March 4, 1927 (ch. 517, 44 Stat.L., pt. III, 1845), entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Mrs. Patrick H. Bodkin." The payment provided for herein shall be in full settlement of all claims and demands arising out of the subject matter referred to in the findings of the Court of Claims.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

R. A. WILLIAMS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3936, for the relief of R. A. Williams.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Reserving the right to object, is the author of the bill present? It seems to me this is a very far-fetched claim. This rural mail carrier suffered from dysentery and arteriosclerosis. He has just seen the doctor recently about it. He claims that that is incident to his service as a rural mail carrier sometime between 1903 and 1917. It does strike me as a pretty far-fetched claim, and I will have to object unless someone can enlighten me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

GRACE P. STARK

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3952, for the relief of Grace P. Stark.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Grace P. Stark, of Marked Tree, Ark., the sum of $161.58 as full reimbursement for loss by bankruptcy of the First National Bank at Marked Tree, Ark., of postal funds which she was required by the Post Office Department to replace.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Grace P. Stark, postmaster at Marked Tree, Ark., in the sum of $161.58. Such sum represents the amount of a deficit in the accounts of the said Grace P. Stark, caused by the loss of postal funds deposited in the First National Bank of Marked Tree, Ark., which failed November 15, 1926."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may speak out of order and that my time may be extended 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, in the inquiry being held by the select committee into the issues presented by Dr. Wirt there is a patent and obvious determined effort to suppress information and not to obtain information. From the introduction of the second Bulwinkle resolution and until now every turn has been one of suppression of truth rather than a presentation of truth.

This second Bulwinkle resolution which was adopted by the House unduly restricts and narrows the issues. In this respect, it is unlike all other resolutions enacted by the Congress authorizing an inquiry into a particular subject.

The appropriation of $500 as expenses for this inquiry is upon its face an appropriation so low as to be for the purpose of starving the inquiry rather than supporting the inquiry. Within the past few weeks, the House has appropriated $10,000 to investigate the Nazis and $500 to inquire into what is being done in our own Government.

The first official act of the select committee was to adopt a rule of procedure for the first day's hearing. This rule of procedure is unlike any other rule of procedure ever prescribed for a congressional inquiry. This rule limited the inquiry to a few specific questions and answers from one witness. It denied to Dr. Wirt an opportunity to make an opening statement. When by this rule of procedure Dr. Wirt was denied an opportunity to make an opening statement, he was denied a right and a courtesy which has never been denied to the hundreds and thousands of other witnesses who have appeared before congressional committees. When Dr. Wirt appeared as a witness before the committee, there was with him as his counsel the Honorable James A. Reed, of Missouri.

As soon as Senator Reed opened his mouth he was informed by the chairman of the committee that Dr. Wirt would not be entitled to counsel. This conduct on the part of the chairman was so out of keeping with the rights of witnesses appearing before such committees that the committee as a whole sitting before the country did not dare uphold the first ruling of the Chair. It modified this ruling and permitted Senator Reed to remain with Dr. Wirt as counsel, but it placed humiliating restrictions upon Senator Reed as counsel, which restrictions were an affront to the privilege of a counsel in any American judicial or quasi-judicial hearing.

The two minority members of this committee are being humiliatingly denied the rights and opportunities which should be given to minority members of a committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Kansas yield for a question?

Mr. McGUGIN. No; I cannot yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman should yield. He did not advise us of the subject on which he intended to speak.

Mr. McGUGIN. I will yield when I conclude my statement.

Mr. BLANTON. I merely wanted to ask the gentleman whether or not he advised the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] that he was going to make this attack on him.

Mr. McGUGIN. No.

Mr. BLANTON. I think it was due him. I do not think the gentleman from Kansas should take this advantage of him in his absence.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield no further. Mr. BULWINKLE is welcome to come upon the floor and hear these remarks.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] is now here; he can take care of himself, which obviates my making a point of order.

Mr. McGUGIN. We are denied any right to call witnesses.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. I cannot yield.

We are denied any right to call witnesses upon our own responsibility. Furthermore, when we ask the committee as a whole to subpena witnesses we are told that this committee will have to think about that later. Then when we offer a motion to call a specific witness for a given time, we are voted down, 3 to 2.

Until the two minority members of this committee have the right and the privilege to have subpenaed before this committee any and all witnesses whom they may ask for, this inquiry will remain a shameful spectacle of the administration of American justice. What kind of proceedings would it be in a court if only one side were permitted to call witnesses for examination? What would have been the history of and the result of former congressional hearings if minority members had been denied the right to call witnesses before the committee for investigation?

Let us take the Teapot Dome investigation. What would it have amounted to if the late Senator Walsh of Montana, a minority member, had been permitted to call before the committee for examination only such witnesses as the majority members would permit? Senator Walsh was not only permitted to call whomsoever he pleased, but in addition to that he was given sufficient expense money to go to various parts of the country and to compel, under oath, the men to give such information as they possessed. That program constituted an honest, sincere effort to ascertain the truth. It was only from such a procedure that the truth was obtained. In the present instance, a directly opposite procedure is being followed.

There was some dishonest public conduct in former Republican administrations but I call upon anyone to point to the instance when any official conduct was being investigated that the Republican majority denied to the Democratic minority the opportunity to call before an open hearing any and all witnesses for examination, whom the minority had chosen to call. Yes, we have had some dishonest conduct on the part of some officers in our former Republican administrations but a Republican majority has never notoriously and brazenly taken the responsibility of endeavoring to condone and protect the dishonesty by denying to minority Members the right to bring before congressional hearings any and all witnesses they chose to call.

This committee cannot continue with its present procedure of gagging this investigation and tying the hands of the minority Members without the Democratic majority in this House standing before the country as being responsible for a suppression of the truth. There is only one construction which an intelligent American public can place upon such conduct and that is that the majority is not only afraid to have the truth presented to the people but that it has the hardihood brazenly to suppress the truth. I do not think that the majority of the individual Democratic Members in this House are in sympathy with such conduct, however, if this committee is to continue to carry out these policies it can only do so because its conduct is being permitted and condoned by the majority party which is in control of the House of Representatives.

Up to date this committee is being dominated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR]. He is the gentleman who presented and sponsored the gag rule of procedure which has limited the inquiry of this committee to Dr. Wirt and to such people as he may name and as the committee is willing to permit to be called for examination.

Yesterday the committee met. The two minority members requested that every person named by Dr. Wirt be called for an examination before the committee. These names included Rexford G. Tugwell, the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture; Frederick Howe, Consumers' Counsel in the A.A.A.; General Westervelt, former official in the Agricultural Department; and Secretary Wallace.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, my time has not expired; I had 10 minutes altogether.

Mr. BLACK. The request was for 10 minutes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not put such a request. The Chair did not so understand the request of the gentleman.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I asked unanimous consent to speak out of order, and that I be permitted to speak for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas be permitted to proceed for 5 additional minutes, and following him that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes, to afford him an opportunity to reply.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have endeavored to ask the gentleman from Kansas a question, but he does not care to yield. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman from Kansas be allowed to talk if he will yield for some questions.

Mr. McGUGIN. I shall yield for questions after I conclude my remarks, but certainly the gentleman will permit me to finish my remarks.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman asked for an additional 5 minutes. Is it to be granted or not?

Mr. BLANTON. But in connection with that I asked unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes, so that they may have equal time.

Mr. McFADDEN. But prior to that, before the gentleman from Kansas began to speak, he asked that his time be extended 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas that the time of the gentleman from Kansas be extended 5 minutes and that the gentleman from North Carolina be given the same amount of time at the termination of the remarks of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGUGIN. The three majority members informed us that the only ones who will be subpenaed would be the six people who had attended a dinner party in Virginia. When the motion was presented to subpena these six people I offered an amendment to the motion to include a subpena for General Westervelt. It was voted down by the three majority members.

General Westervelt was quoted by Dr. Wirt as having said that Frederick Howe, Consumers' Counsel in the A.A.A., told him, General Westervelt, that their program is being thwarted because too many people are being fed. There is only one interpretation to be placed upon that statement and that is that Mr. Howe's program is completely to destroy our present economic and social structure and that can only be done when the people are hungry.

Such a statement is disloyalty to recovery as is advocated by the administration and as the people of the country understand recovery. Yet the majority members of this committee deny the request of the minority members to bring before the committee General Westervelt, who is the man who can establish the truth or falsity of this statement on the part of Mr. Howe, a high and responsible official of the A.A.A.

The truth is that the political philosophy of the gentleman from New York, who is dominating this committee, is the political philosophy of Tammany. Of course, Tammany is committed to the proposition that the way to run government is to run it rough shod and to suppress all opposition. Tammany from cruel experience has learned that it is sometimes costly for a party in power to permit a sincere and serious investigation of public conduct. It has learned this on more than one occasion. The last occasion was the Seabury investigation. What would the Seabury investigation had been if Mr. Seabury had not had the right to call any witness whom he chose to call, and if Tammany could have dictated the names of witnesses to be subpenaed?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman evidently does not know that Mr. Seabury did the same thing to the Tammany members of the minority that is happening to the gentleman today. It always happens to minorities of committees. I served as a minority member on a committee with Mr. Lehlbach in 1928 and wanted Bishop Cannon subpenaed for the very thing for which he is now on trial, but they would not subpena him for me; they turned me down on every application.

Mr. McGUGIN. They should not have done it.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Did the gentleman approve of that?

Mr. BLACK. Not then.

Mr. McGUGIN. Dr. Wirt quoted a statement from Professor Tugwell as follows:

> It is, in other words, a logical impossibility to have a planned economy and to have business operating its industries, just as it is also impossible to have one within our present constitutional and statutory structure. Modifications in both, so serious as to mean destruction and rebeginning, are required.

I want Professor Tugwell called before this committee. I want to know if in the administering of his official duties he is proceeding upon the theory that in inaugurating the present planned economy that it is a logical impossibility to have this planned economy with business operating its own industries, and likewise if it is a logical impossibility to have the planned economy under our present constitutional and statutory structure. I want to know in the carrying out of his present official duties if he is proceeding upon the theory that we must have modifications so serious in both our business structure and our constitutional and statutory structure as to mean destruction and rebeginning.

Dr. Wirt quoted Professor Tugwell as follows:

> The next series of changes will have to do with industry itself. It has already been suggested that business will logically be required to disappear. This is not an overstatement for the sake of emphasis; it is literally meant.

I want to know from Professor Tugwell if in his administering the agriculture act he is doing so in the light of this statement when he said that business will logically be required to disappear and that he made the statement not as an overstatement for the sake of emphasis but that it was literally meant.

I want to call the three directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority before this committee to ascertain by what authority of law they are setting up subsidiary corporations which are authorized to engage in the business of farming, selling and distributing farm products, manufacturing and selling goods and wares of every description, to lend money to any person, firm, or corporation with or without collateral, to borrow money and issue evidences of indebtedness without limit as to amount, and also to deal in and purchase stocks or other securities of any person, firm, associations, or corporation.

These directors of the T.V.A. have organized two of these subsidiary corporations. In one of them, Harry Hopkins, from emergency relief funds, is reported to have purchased stock. Harold Ickes, Public Works Administrator, is reported to have taken a million dollars of public-works funds to purchase the stock in the other subsidiary corporation. I want Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Ickes called before this committee to tell the committee and the country by what authority of law they are taking Public Works funds and purchasing the stocks of corporations, which corporations are authorized to engage in the business of farming, processing, and selling farm products and livestock, to engage in the business of manufacturing and selling goods and wares of every description, to lend money or endorse the obligations of individuals, firms, and corporations with or without collateral security, also to borrow money and issue evidences of indebtedness without limit as to amount and also to deal in and purchase the stocks and bonds of any corporation.

If it develops that there is no authority in law for the organizing of these two subsidiary corporations and for the using of Public Works funds for the purpose of purchasing stock in such corporations, then it stands that here are five men in the executive department of the Government who are operating without regard to the statutory and constitutional structure of the Government of the Republic under the Constitution.

If it is so established, then the issues presented by Dr. Wirt are proved, namely, that there are those in control of the executive department of the Government who are proceeding in a manner which amounts to an overthrow of the Republic under the Constitution, obviously not an overthrow by violence but an overthrow by a complete disregard for the laws and the Constitution of the Republic.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to finish his remarks.

Mr. McGUGIN. One minute will be all the time I need.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman's time will be extended for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. McGUGIN. This hearing will not be an open, fair American proceeding of which the American people may look upon with pride until the minority Members are permitted to call before the committee any and all witnesses they choose to call, and until the Honorable James A. Reed, as counsel for Dr. Wirt, is permitted to exercise all the rights and privileges of counsel in such proceedings. The rights of counsel in an American sense mean that Senator Reed as counsel for Dr. Wirt will have the right to cross-examine in open hearing any witness who appears before the committee to refute any statement made by Dr. Wirt.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. Certainly.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman wants to subpena everybody but the President of the United States in his inquiry; why not include the President?

Mr. McGUGIN. If we were shown some reason why he should be subpenaed, I would have no objection to the President being subpenaed.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman is trying to turn this investigation into a pow-wow for Republican campaign purposes, and it is a perfectly ridiculous effort.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] is recognized for 11 minutes.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I, with others possibly, cannot understand the procedure that we have witnessed just now. I know that it is not proper for a member of a committee of this House, before a decision is made, for the purpose of publicity and publicity only, to make a statement on the floor with reference to the proceedings of the committee. The rules of common decency require that the gentleman and I, and every man in this House serving on a committee, wait until the decision of the committee has been rendered before we criticize its conduct.

Wrong? Why, of course, the gentleman is wrong, as I stated yesterday, and the gentleman is usually wrong. The committee did not say yesterday that they would not call General Westervelt.

Mr. McGUGIN. Did not the committee vote down my request for General Westervelt to be subpenaed?

Mr. BULWINKLE. No. They said for the first hearing they would have these six. That is what they said. Oh, I know that the gentleman is sore because he thought Dr. Wirt was going to say something for him to work on. Dr. Wirt was a flop, just like some of the remarks that the gentleman from Kansas makes. It amounts to nothing else; just that. Why, the gentleman himself as a Member of this House on Saturday, March 24, made a statement, and I tell you that the committee has followed what the gentleman suggested to the letter.

Mr. McGUGIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Not now. I quote:

If the gentleman will keep quiet, that is what I am coming to. That is a strong statement that has come to the attention of the committee of this House—and I say that the obligation is on the committee to bring Dr. Wirt before the committee and under oath make him tell who the man is that made the statement to him.

The statement about Roosevelt being a Kerensky—

The gentleman knows or should have known that yesterday the chairman allowed and permitted Dr. Wirt to go on with his statement about General Westervelt, and that what General Westervelt said happened after the publication even of the Rand statement.

Mr. McGUGIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. McGUGIN. The speech the gentleman is talking about was made before even this committee was being considered. The committee I was talking about there was the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and obviously that committee could not go any further than Dr. Wirt, but now that we have a select committee, which is investigating the matter, they should go into it fully.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I cannot help it if the gentleman now tries to crawl out of his statement.

Mr. McGUGIN. Will the gentleman quote my other speeches?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I cannot quote them all. They run from one extreme to the other. Again quoting the speech of the gentleman—

The President of the United States, the Congress, and the people of this country have a right to know whether Dr. Wirt told the truth.

Is that not what the gentleman wants to find out?

Mr. McGUGIN. Certainly.

Mr. BULWINKLE. That is what the gentleman said.

Mr. McGUGIN. I want all witnesses called.

Mr. BYRNS. Why is it necessary to have present one of the most-distinguished lawyers in the whole of the United States in order to tell the truth before this committee, which is simply conducting an inquiry as to the source of this information?

Mr. BULWINKLE. The gentleman from Kansas knows we are not prosecuting or persecuting Dr. Wirt, not in the least. He was not here to be investigated. If he had been, I would have gone into his private character. If he had been, I would have brought out from him the fact that during the war, whether or not on account of his pro-

German activities, he was confined in the jail at Gary, Ind. I did not bring any of that before the committee. There was not the least bit of persecution of Dr. Wirt. The investigation was just simply to find out who it was in the Government that made certain statements shown in the Rand testimony. I cannot help it if the gentleman did not get out of Dr. Wirt what he expected to get. I know the gentleman is disappointed. I could see it all day yesterday that the gentleman was disappointed because he thought he was going to get some great hullabaloo that he could go before the people of this country with, and he could not say a thing after it happened.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Probably the gentleman and some Members on his side, as a result of the returns in Illinois yesterday, are even more panicky for a campaign issue than before they got hold of Dr. Wirt.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to advise the gentleman from North Carolina that before he came from the cloakroom to the floor the gentleman from Kansas prefaced his remarks with the statement that every move the chairman of this committee made had been to suppress the truth. He should make proper reply to that charge.

Mr. McGUGIN. No. I will tell the gentleman exactly what I said. I said that every move that had been made since this committee was organized was to suppress the truth. I did not single out the chairman.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Suppress the truth?

Mr. McGUGIN. Yes.

Mr. BULWINKLE. We are bringing before the gentleman next week 5 of the Government employees and 1 news' reporter mentioned by Dr. Wirt.

Mr. McGUGIN. Will the gentleman bring General Westervelt?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Is General Westervelt a Government employee?

Mr. McGUGIN. Will the gentleman bring him before us, or any other person that Dr. Wirt mentioned?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Can the gentleman not read what Professor Tugwell said? We had the man before us yesterday that the gentleman thought he was going to get so much out of, and he did not get a thing. All he could do was to give some quotations from Professor Tugwell or Dr. Tugwell, whoever he is.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. Is this not a way to get at the administration because they are enforcing the N.R.A. and giving labor of the United States a break? Dr. Wirt comes from Gary, which is controlled, body and soul, by the United States Steel Corporation.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I do not like to say anything on this floor that I do not know exactly. I do know, however, that some of the Republicans thought that having statements like Rand's in the record would be a wonderful thing to use this fall in the elections, and they are disappointed because it is going to be an absolute flop.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I may say to the gentleman that I was one of the members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that tried to stop Mr. Rand from reading that letter in the record, but the Democratic membership of the committee seemed very anxious to have it in there, so that they could probably call this investigation.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I am speaking of the time after they got it in there. I refer to some of the gentlemen on the gentleman's side.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. There were not any of the Republicans that wanted the letter in the record.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I am not talking about that committee. The gentleman did not know what was in the letter. That had been sent out before, and you did not know about the matter.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. We heard enough.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Take the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN]; he would like to have used that this fall.

Mr. McGUGIN. I am not a member of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. I am only a member of this select committee.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I know it. I said the gentleman would like to have had it in there.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. Did the evidence really disclose that Dr. Wirt was from Indiana?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes; from Gary, Ind.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. Did it disclose that he was a native of Indiana?

Mr. BULWINKLE. No.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will yield, how can the chairman reconcile the difference that apparently exists between our friend from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] and our friend from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN]? There seems to be a domestic difference in the party ranks among the brethren over there.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I will tell the gentleman the difference.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is not speaking for me.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I decline to yield further now, Mr. Speaker.

I am not speaking for the gentleman from Ohio, because the gentleman did not see the political significance of this when it was walking down the road, but the gentleman from Kansas did. That is the difference between them.

The gentleman from Kansas, of course, is sore about it—absolutely sore—because he would have gone out this fall and would have talked about the terrible things these Democrats are doing. Now, when the gentleman goes out he will have to say that there were two great discoverers in this century—one, Dr. Cook, who discovered the North Pole; and the other, Dr. Wirt, who discovered the Communists in the Government service. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

GRACE P. STARK

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion that was made by the gentleman from Kansas, and which is still pending, to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I am here to defend the last word. I think we should have the last word on this committee and on this investigation. I never thought the hearing should have been held, but I do not want any misunderstanding about the conduct of the legislative committee to go out to the country by the gentleman from Kansas. I have served on legislative committees, and I know just what minority representation means on any legislative committee. I have squawked just as loudly as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN] has squawked today about a denial of rights, and I looked just as indignant and I was just as furious, apparently, as the gentleman is. It did not mean anything.

No witness before any legislative committee at any time has ever had the right to have counsel. No witness in any court, under any conditions, has ever a right to have counsel, and any lawyer knows this. So there is no point to be made of that at all.

Now, as to the general proposition of the Democrats not giving them the right to call witnesses: I served on a committee in 1928, and I tried to get the committee to meet before the press. It was purely grand stand on my part, just as the gentleman is performing today—a little spring practice for the fans. I tried to get them to perform before the press; but no, Mr. LEHLBACH——

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I cannot yield now—I am doing too well. [Laughter.]

But Mr. LEHLBACH took me into his sanctified chamber back here in the Capitol, where he has a nice fireplace, and I thought they were going to apply the rack and thumbscrews to me. They voted down my motion to call Bishop Cannon and several gentlemen connected with organizations opposed to Smith. I was doing this for campaign purposes. I was using the committee for campaign purposes. I did not say so then—I say so now—the statute has expired. [Laughter.] I was doing just as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MCGUGIN] is doing today, but Mr. LEHLBACH, as czaristically as possible, made me a revolutionist, a Red, for the time being, and voted down everything I wanted done about calling witnesses. We went down into Texas, and I tried to have witnesses called there.

And, by the way, I nearly got caught. There was one witness on the stand who said, "A national organization is operating in this district", and right away I thought I was going to bring the Klan into the picture. There I was, a little New York man down in Texas, and I was going to challenge the Klan on its home grounds, and I said to this witness, "Was it the Ku-Klux Klan?" and LEHLBACH banged the table and said, "You can not ask that question." It was a perfectly legitimate question, so I asked it again, and they took a vote and the committee voted it down. So I went to the witness afterward and asked him what would have been his answer, and he told me it was the American Legion. [Laughter.] I was saved by Mr. LEHLBACH and was grateful to him.

Now, do not get excited. There is nothing in this investigation. It is not important to us whether there is anybody connected with the administration who is tainted with communism. What we should be disturbed about is what is happening in the minds of the people. Are the people in a state of mind tending toward revolt? If they are, it is our fault. This is what we ought to be thinking about and not what some economist or some writer on economic subjects connected with the administration is thinking about—but what are the people thinking about.

So far as I am concerned, I am no Presidential spokesman, but I can say this for the "brain trust": They have brains. They got on the pay roll when politicians could not. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from New York. Mr. Speaker, I have a statement here from a gentleman in my State, who asserts that:

This man Wirt, Professor Wirt to you, who has been raising all the hell with our Democratic administration, is a bought and paid for creature of the Steel Trust and his recent exposure of the Democratic Party is a last desperate effort of this unpatriotic outfit to defeat the wage policy of the N.R.A. and the recovery program as a whole.

I was in Gary when I was old enough to cast my first vote and Professor Wirt was responsible for my vote going to Eugene V. Debs.

The reason?

Gary was and is a city built in a region of sand dunes so poor that nothing but a steel trust could exist on the spot. The site of the city then was a plot of sand 10 miles square. The trust bought all of this with the exception of a small bit afterward called the "patch" which the owner refused to sell and which afterward became the hell hole of the Chicago district.

I suppose that legal procedure was followed in the erection of the schools, but there might be some doubt of this. At least construction on the schools kept pace with construction of the mills and the concrete apartment houses for the Gary steel workers.

These schools have been widely copied in spite of the fact that their educational features are practically nonexistent, but have been replaced by a trade-school system designed to furnish a surplus of semiskilled labor for the masters of the infamous Professor Wirt.

The male graduates of Professor Wirt's schools cannot spell, read, write, or express themselves intelligently, but all are somewhat familiar with various trades to the extent that craftsmen in these trades in the Gary mills receive less than the prevailing wage in these trades and there is always a surplus of labor in the trades taught in the Gary schools. These facts can be established by your investigating committee by correspondence with the Central Labor Councils of Gary, Hammond, and Chicago.

Your committee would also find that the male graduates of the Gary schools are not as well educated, in the ordinary sense, as 10- or 11-year-old children who attended the country schools of Pennsylvania. That is, if the Gary graduates were picked at random and the more intelligent of the Pennsylvania children were chosen.

Professor Wirt has graduated numerous boys who can lay bricks, repair machinery, do iron or steel molding, and bits of other trades, but who are entirely unfamiliar with English, history, arithmetic, or other studies that Members of Congress would consider fundamental in the education of a child.

Anything that I can say as to the lack of educational facilities in the Wirt schools would not serve to paint the picture as bad as it actually is or would be in the eyes of the members of your body.

Professor Wirt's sole purpose in life has been to educate the youth in his charge so that they knew just enough to be loyal employees of the Steel Trust.

Now it happens that the employees of the Gary mills have taken advantage of section 7a of the Recovery Act and are organizing. This, in the estimation of Professor Wirt, is a combination of lese majesty, treason, and a few lesser crimes.

I ask Members of Congress, Who raised the money, who will produce the money, to finance Dr. Wirt in his campaign of slander and vilification of President Roosevelt and the new deal? Why does he need any defense if the charges are true and if he is not, as alleged, simply the mouthpiece of the Steel Trust, that gigantic institution that has bled the American people of millions?

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. I have an impression, and I think the gentleman has, too—I do not mean the committee that has been appointed for the purpose of an investigation—that the whole idea is to get Dr. Wirt before the committee and then try to give out to the country that the tendency of the Democratic administration is towards communism and socialism, and to discredit its efforts to give labor a break.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman is correct. Continuing with the letter:

Professor Wirt has the entire resources of the Steel Trust behind him in his effort to smash the Democratic program. If called to Washington to testify before your committee he will furnish more manufactured evidence than the Steel Trust can manufacture steel.

Now, gentlemen of this Congress, this man, Professor Wirt, has charged the distinguished Speaker of this House with being a radical, with fostering the principles of communism, with fostering the idea of the State taking over private industry. I want to say that the distinguished Speaker has been one of the most progressive men we ever had in this country. Away back in 1922, when we held a big Jackson Day rally in Marion, Ohio, when Warren Harding was President, we could find only one Democrat in this House or the other body who had courage enough to come out and uphold the principles of democracy, and that was your illustrious Speaker. [Applause.] It was then that he first exposed the machinations of Secretary of the Treasury Mellon. He told us about Mellon's ownership of the Aluminum Trust Co., and he told us about refunds that were being made by millions and which have had much to do with bringing on the depression that we have had.

I say to you without fear of successful contradiction that the whole Wirt testimony is merely a frame-up and an attempt to discredit the Roosevelt administration and the new deal. [Applause.]

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. As positive proof that this whole Wirt propaganda was built up by big business, the fact is that the reactionary capitalistic-controlled press has given 10 times as much space to Dr. Wirt and his charges as have the independent press, sympathetic with the Democratic administration.

Mr. TRUAX. That is true.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. My colleague from Ohio decried the calling of this investigation, and he says that it was a frame-up. I ask the gentleman, Who started the investigation, who introduced the resolution in Congress for the investigation? It was not a Republican, but it was a Democrat.

Mr. TRUAX. I would say to my colleague from Ohio that I am not accusing the Republican Members of Congress nor the Republican Party. I am accusing the United States Steel Corporation, owned by Morgan & Co., and I am sorry that certain Members on the gentleman's side have seized upon this opportunity to obtain campaign material for some hopeless causes this fall.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, if I had my own way about it, the investigation of Dr. Wirt would not have been called by Congress. When the letter of Dr. Wirt was read before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which I am a member, I tried to stop it from going into the record. It has been intimated here today that the Republicans insisted on calling this investigation. I deny that. The resolution for the investigation was introduced by a prominent Democratic member of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, and I am getting sick and tired of trying to mix this matter into partisan politics every day on the floor of the House when we should be devoting ourselves to things more worth while and working for those principles which we believe will be for the best interest of our country instead of playing politics. [Applause.] For more than 3 years our people have stood with backs to the wall fighting economic depression. I wish we, the Members of Congress, would forget partisan politics at this time and try and direct our efforts to legislation which will be of some benefit to our country and its citizens. [Applause.]

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. When these 2 minutes are concluded, if any other further requests are made to speak, I shall object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I feel a good deal like the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER]. Every day and every minute of time that we devote to Dr. Wirt costs the American taxpayers a lot of money. My private impression was that this investigation should never have been held, because it was cheap partisan politics, and the only object it seems to have had is to make a comic opera campaign issue for Members on both sides of the House, to discuss for hours and hours at great expense to the taxpayers. Every day this Congress runs costs the taxpayers a lot of money. Every minute we use, either in committee hearings or in session in the House, costs the taxpayers scores of dollars, when the bill is finally rendered to them. Personally I have not taken up much time on the floor of this House for any partisan speeches, and from now on I am impelled to object to unanimous-consent requests to discuss Dr. Wirt, that nervous little fellow from Gary, Ind., who does not yet realize that when we had an election in 1932 we did have a revolution, which the people were in favor of. That bloodless revolution against organized greed and exploitation is going on right now with the help of the Democratic administration, and it is returning this country to where it should have been if the Republican Party had given the people the same kind of a planned program for recovery that the Democratic administration has done. I do not think we ought to waste any more time on Dr. Wirt or any of his charges. He has disclosed by his statements that he has been doing the work of some people who have private profits and special interests at stake in this new deal, which they do not want to give up, even if their special privileges destroyed the welfare of millions of the common people.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for half a minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I notice the gentleman from Wisconsin again attacks the Republican Party.

Mr. O'MALLEY. That is practically impossible to avoid since your colleagues started this time-wasting argument today.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Why can we not leave partisanship out of the deliberations of this body for awhile and get down to the things that are of vital importance to the country?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I shall be glad to do that, if the gentleman can persuade members on his side, like the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MCGUGIN], to desist. I would be glad enough to never mention the gentleman's party again, because I do not think it is strong enough in the country or in the House to be worth mentioning. The RECORD shows this argument started today on the Republican side.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

C. A. BETZ

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3992, for the relief of C. A. Betz.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to ask the author of the bill for some information. The bill purports to appropriate an amount in payment of expenses of an individual for making a trip from San Francisco to Bremerton Navy Yard. There is nothing in the bill or report to indicate the items of expense, whether the money was actually expended.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I introduced the bill (H.R. 3992) for the relief of C. A. Betz. It carries an appropriation of $103.34 for the relief of Mr. Betz, who is a boilermaker by trade.

In 1930 Mr. Betz received the following letter, from which I read, from the Navy Department:

> You are hereby tendered employment as a boilermaker in the industrial department. You are requested to report at the office of the labor board at once and bring this letter with you.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Betz made the trip from San Francisco, Calif., to Bremerton, Wash., in response to this tender. Prior to his arrival at Puget Sound Navy Yard, however, conditions had so changed that his service as a boilermaker were not required. He was employed for a period of 8 days and was then discharged. It is 956 miles from San Francisco to Seattle. He was promised, as the report states, 4 months' employment. May I read briefly from the report of the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Adams, who was Secretary at that time:

> Under the circumstances existing in this case, however, where the claimant was led to believe that he would be given about 4 months' work and was discharged after a period of 8 days, thus depriving him of an opportunity to secure reimbursement for the expenses incurred by him in responding to the Government's call, the Navy Department considers that the claimant is equitably entitled to relief, and therefore recommends favorable action on the bill.

I know that Mr. Betz is a dependable man. He is not asking any more than his actual expenses from San Francisco to Seattle, where, as I said, he was promised by the Government at least 4 months' employment, which was reduced, by a slacking up of a department over which he had no control, to 8 days. Inasmuch as he is a hard-working mechanic, I feel, and I believe the gentleman from Kansas will agree with me, that he is entitled to the expenses incurred for his trip from San Francisco to Seattle and return.

Mr. HOPE. Does the gentleman think this is a reasonable amount? The gentleman is familiar with conditions and the distance and the rates either by rail or steamship. Does the gentleman regard this as a reasonable amount? I ask that question because there is nothing in the RECORD to indicate what this amount covers. I should like to have the gentleman's opinion.

Mr. WELCH. It is my opinion that it is not unreasonable. On the other hand, it is a reasonable amount. I have made the trip a number of times, and I can place myself in the position of this mechanic. I feel that the small sum of $103.34 provided for in the bill is only reasonable to pay the cost of his expenses from San Francisco to Seattle and return.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection the Clerk read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to C. A. Betz the sum of $103.34. This sum represents the actual expenses incurred by Mr. Betz in making a trip from San Francisco to Bremerton Navy Yard in response to a summons issued by the Navy Department.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the usual attorney's fee amendment, and also after the figures "$103.34" to insert "Provided, That this shall be in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOPE: Page 1, line 5, after the figures, insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

At the end of the bill insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ELLEN GRANT

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4060, for the relief of Ellen Grant.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 8, strike out "$303" and insert in lieu thereof "$200, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States." On page 2, after the word "Grant", insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GEORGE L. STONE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4475, for the relief of George L. Stone.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

B. EDWARD WESTWOOD

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4516, for the relief of B. Edward Westwood.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I will reserve the objection.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. We have passed a great many bills like this today. The situation is that in 1931 the Federal Government started to construct a new post-office building at Youngstown, Ohio. Therefore it was necessary to change quarters. Temporary quarters were rented one block away from the old post office which was torn down. The facilities in the rented building were not very good; that is, the facilities for taking care of the money and the stamps. On Christmas day burglars broke into the office, pried open the money and stamp drawers, and stole $891.17. The postmaster was not responsible for that. It is a matter of record in the police court. The postmaster was helpless to prevent this crime, with the facilities he had, and to properly take care of the cash receipts and stamps, and yet he was forced to do it, because it was the building which the Government had rented.

I do not think the postmaster should be held responsible for $891 when he was not at fault at all.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I notice that the Post Office Department in its report does not recommend the passage of this bill, taking the position that a proper degree of care was not taken by the postmaster for whom the gentleman now seeks relief.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. No. The position that the Post Office Department took was that the money and stamps should have been kept in the safe; but there were 6, 8, or 10 people in this office all of whom had charge of money drawers and stamp drawers. It was a big office and there were no facilities inside the safe for each clerk to put his amounts in a separate drawer and lock it up. The safe did not accommodate that situation. Under this condition the postmaster would have had to have given the combination of the safe to 8 or 10 clerks and in case of trouble there would have been no one whom he could hold responsible for the safety of the money.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Does not the gentleman think that the Post Office Department was advised of the facts of which the gentleman speaks, before they made an adverse recommendation?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I do not know whether the Post Office Department understood the situation or not. They rented this building and put the post office in there during the construction of the new building.

During the 12 years this postmaster has served he never had one black mark against his record. He has one of the finest records of any postmaster in the United States. I do not think it is fair that he should be held responsible for this money under circumstances where the office was burglarized.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. If the gentleman can get such a report from the Post Office Department today with regard to the lack of negligence of which he speaks, I shall be willing to have this bill pass over without prejudice to be called the next time the Private Calendar is called.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I think the Post Office Department in their report states just what the situation is.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I have a contrary notation here.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. The Post Office Department informed me that it would be impossible, under the law, for them to recommend it.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice and that it may be called up the next time the Private Calendar is called.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

C. W. MOONERY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4519, for the relief of C. W. Moonery.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $256.77, to compensate C. W. Moonery, of Lenapah, Okla., for actual financial loss sustained by him, without negligence on his part, through refund already made to the Post Office Department wherein postal funds for which he was responsible as postmaster of Lenapah, Okla., were on deposit in the First National Bank of Lenapah, Okla., where said bank failed under date of November 19, 1923, and was liquidated, none of said sum being repaid from the assets of said bank.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "Moonery" and insert the word "Mooney."

"Amend the title so as to read: 'A bill for the relief of C. W. Mooney.'"

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ORVILLE A. MURPHY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5299, for the relief of Orville A. Murphy.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine, in the same manner and to the same extent as if application for the benefits of the Employees' Compensation Act had been made within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof, the claim of Orville A. Murphy on account of disability due to tuberculosis alleged to have been proximately caused by his employment in the service of the United States between April 6, 1920, and December 1, 1932: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the enactment of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HERALD PUBLISHING CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5940, for the relief of the Herald Publishing Co.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection to permit me to make an explanation?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDS. The claim before the committee was $446 for the injury and damage done a boiler owned by the Herald Publishing Co., of Rock Hill, S.C., while the Government occupied the premises. I hope the gentleman will consider this fact.

There was a contract between the Herald Publishing Co. and the Treasury Department whereby the Treasury Department leased from the Herald Publishing Co., of Rock Hill, S.C., a building for temporary use as a post office. There was a boiler in the building. The Government went into the building during the spring or summer months, and wishing to destroy certain papers that were not valuable and other trash they built a fire in this boiler. The position taken by the Herald Publishing Co., which I think is overwhelmingly established by the facts, was that there was negligence on the part of the Government employees.

The Treasury Department wrote a letter instructing the Herald Publishing Co. to go ahead and get a new boiler. Although they did not say they would pay for the boiler, it was implied that they would, and the company went ahead and got a new boiler, paying for it $446. The bill is for this amount on the ground that the explosion was caused by the negligence of the Government employees. The committee reduced the amount from $446 to $243, considering the latter amount to represent the value of the boiler at the time it was destroyed.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I understand that the Government leased this building as temporary quarters for the post office. They moved into the building on the 28th of May. On the 29th and 30th they burned some old papers, whereupon the boiler cracked wide open. It would seem to me that the boiler must have been defective.

Mr. RICHARDS. But the gentleman overlooks the fact that the contract provided that the Herald Publishing Co. should not be responsible for the negligence of the Government itself.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. How could there have been negligence on the part of the Government employees in burning papers in the furnace? Such use does not crack a boiler in proper condition.

Mr. RICHARDS. It was undoubtedly due to the fact that there was not water in the boiler. This was the summertime, the off season when there was no reasonable expectancy on the part of the Herald Publishing Co. that the boiler would be used. If the Government employees wished to start a fire in the boiler at this time of the year it was incumbent upon them to see that there was water in it, or they certainly would be guilty of negligence.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. An inspector was sent up there by the Post Office Department, and reported that the cracks were old and rusty; that some attempt had been made to calk them; and that the boiler was old and much worn. If that evidence is not disputed, I cannot reconcile myself to the fact that the Government is in any way responsible for the explosion of this boiler. I am sorry, but I feel I must object.

Mr. RICHARDS. Will the gentleman withhold his objection and pass this bill over without prejudice?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDS. I should like to say to the gentleman that anyone who knows anything about boilers knows that in an off season anyone who builds a fire in them should use at least reasonable care before doing so.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I do not know anything about the competency of this inspector, but he reports that the cracks were old and rusty and that some attempt had been made to calk them. They were amateurs, at least they were unsuccessful, and the inspector further reports that the boilers were old and worn.

Mr. RICHARDS. That is true, but the committee passed on this matter. We have affidavits of three employees working in the office and other very strong evidence that the boiler had been in good shape previously.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Those are what might be called self-serving declarations.

Mr. RICHARDS. They are contradictory to other evidence on file, I will admit, but the committee passed on this matter.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I feel I must object for the time being at any rate.

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Speaker, I will let the bill go over with the objection of the gentleman instead of passing it over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7026, to credit certain services as cadets at the United States Military Academy.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ALFRED W. KLIEFOTH

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7064, for the relief of Alfred W. Kliefoth.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JOHN P. SEABROOK

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5310, for the relief of John P. Seabrook.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire of the author of the bill if this is similar in character to the one that was passed and vetoed by the President recently?

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. Speaker, I am not sufficiently familiar with the record to answer the question. This is the case of a member of the Marine Corps having a bad-conduct discharge, but since that time reenlisted and has an honorable discharge. He has really been cited for meritorious service, and he wishes this blot removed from his record.

Mr. TRUAX. Does the Secretary of the Navy recommend this in a report?

Mr. BURNHAM. No; I presume not, because they never do.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BURNHAM. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. I find the concluding paragraph of the report of C. F. Adams, Secretary of the Navy, is as follows:

In view of the foregoing, the Navy Department recommends against the enactment of the bill H.R. 12193.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BURNHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. We have passed a great many of these bills, and the Navy Department and the War Department usually object.

Mr. TRUAX. I am willing to give the President the opportunity to veto another one of these bills, so I withdraw the objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers and sailors John P. Seabrook, who was a member of the United States Marine Corps, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 20th day of September 1920: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FREDERICK L. CAUDLE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5689, providing for the advancement in rank of Frederick L. Caudle on the retired list of the United States Navy.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. On what basis does the gentleman object? The Navy Department has recommended the passage of the bill.

Frederick L. Caudle was stricken with tuberculosis after having served in the Navy from 1923 to 1926. He saw active service in Shanghai and at other places. In 1925 he was sent to Mare Island and was found to have pulmonary tuberculosis at the time he was summoned in for examination. The Navy Department at a later date found him incapacitated for service. It happened that 2 months after this finding he would have been eligible for advancement. He was forced to retire, whereas if he could have gotten 2 months' leave to which he was entitled, he would have automatically been retired as a lieutenant (junior grade). This man was incurably ill with tuberculosis. He has had it since 1925. It involves only $450 difference a year in retirement cost with which he may continue his fight for health and life. He may never be cured of tuberculosis. The bill was passed in the Senate some years ago and died in the House through an objection.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. This young man was commissioned as an ensign in the Navy in 1923?

Mr. O'MALLEY. That is right.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. And 2 years later, in 1925, he contracted tuberculosis?

Mr. O'MALLEY. That is right.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. He was placed upon the retired list and is now receiving retirement pay. If he had been retired later, he would have received an increase in pay. He would have received a higher pay?

Mr. O'MALLEY. If he had been retired 2 months later, he would have had the advance in rank that would have given him this increased retirement pay, but the Navy forced his retirement through their findings as to his health.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. How could the Navy promote a man to a higher rank when he is confined in the hospital suffering from tuberculosis? Is it not necessary that a man pass a physical examination in order to be promoted?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Yes; but they could have given him 2 months' leave so that his eligibility for advancement would have occurred. His automatic advancement was due in June. He was retired early in May. His retirement was forced because of his disability and through his failure to insist upon the leave then in vogue under Navy regulations.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. He was disabled in 1925?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Yes.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. That was a full year prior to this time?

Mr. O'MALLEY. No. He was not found incapacitated for service until April 1926.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. If bills of this kind are to be passed, we will be setting a precedent. There is no reason why a man should be advanced a grade with retired pay under these circumstances.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Here is what the Navy Department said in a letter when the bill was under consideration in the Senate:

On the other hand, however, Ensign Caudle's retirement was effected immediately upon receipt of the recommendation of the Retiring Board and without the grant of any leave, in accordance with the then existing policy of the Navy Department. Since that time, however, the Navy Department has adopted the policy of granting officers a slight postponement in date of effect of retirement upon receipt of the recommendation of the Retiring Board. This postponement not to exceed their accrued leave and in no case to exceed 2 months. If this present policy had been in effect at the time of Mr. Caudle's retirement, his date of retirement would have been automatically set as in June 1926, rather than April 1926; which, thus set without regard to his impending date of promotion, would have carried the date of his retirement beyond the date he would have become due for promotion and would therefore, under the law, have entitled him to retire in the grade of lieutenant (junior grade).

All I am asking is that he be retired as a lieutenant instead of an ensign.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It seems to me this young man is being pretty generously treated by the Government. He served only 2 years. He is now retired for life on a reasonable amount. I do not know just what the amount is. Can the gentleman enlighten me as to what his retirement pay is now?

Mr. O'MALLEY. It is about $100 a month. He did not get hospitalization except for 1 year. He was not sent to a hospital after his retirement because for some unknown reason the retirement order overlooked the fact that this man's case was pulmonary tuberculosis.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Of course, it is not pleasant to object to any of these bills, but I have objected to several that were exactly like this one.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. One hundred and six dollars a month less 5 percent would be the retired pay of an ensign.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I think that is being fairly generous to a young man who served 2 years.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Would the gentleman withdraw his objection if I offered an amendment to strike out "with 3 years of service", which would give him at the Navy pay rate his retirement as a lieutenant junior grade, but would not give him any more retirement pay than his present status? This would at least give him the rank and at no additional cost to the Government. This young man did not want to retire but was forced to as a result of disease contracted while serving his country.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I feel I must object, Mr. Speaker.

ANNIE BRUCE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6246, granting 6 months' pay to Annie Bruce.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the appropriation "Pay of the Navy, 1932", to Annie Bruce, widow of the late Lt. Frank Bruce, United States Navy, an amount equal to 6 months' pay at the rate said Frank Bruce was receiving at the date of his death.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 5, strike out "1932" and insert in lieu thereof "1935."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

W. B. FOUNTAIN

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6863, for the relief of W. B. Fountain.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged enlisted personnel of the United States Navy W. B. Fountain, aviation chief rigger, United States Navy, late of the Naval Operating Base, Hampton Roads, Va., until May 1925, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged under honorable conditions from the naval service of the United States on the 4th day of May 1925: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUSTIN L. TIERNEY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6871, for the relief of Austin L. Tierney.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Austin L. Tierney, who served as a fireman, third-class, United States Navy, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States as a fireman, third class, on April 25, 1918: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or allowances shall be held as accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CARLETON-MACE ENGINEERING CORPORATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4659, for the relief of Carleton-Mace Engineering Corporation.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of Carleton-Mace Engineering Corporation, of Boston, Mass., on account of the extra cost of installing fire-protection system at the naval ammunition depot, Hingham, Mass., under contract no. 3808–B, which extra cost was occasioned by an embargo placed on freight by the United States Railroad Administration, thereby preventing the completion of the work under the above contract before cold weather set in, and to allow in full and final settlement of said claim such amount, not exceeding $32,726.14, as the Comptroller General may find from the facts and the evidence submitted to him to be the actual amount of the extra cost occasioned by the said embargo. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $32,726.14, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the amount herein authorized to be allowed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MOSES ISRAEL

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4793, for the relief of Moses Israel.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Moses Israel the sum of $10,000 for damages suffered by reason of being struck and injured by a Government automobile which was driven by an employee of the Post Office Department.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,500"; and at the end of line 8 insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EDGAR SAMPSON

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4832, for the relief of Edgar Sampson.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no objection, possibly, to the bill if it can be amended so as to provide that no benefits shall accrue prior to the passage of the act, and also the bill should be drawn up in the regular approved form that we have been using in measures of this kind.

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman states he would not object if we provided there should be no benefits accruing prior to the passage of the act. Just what does the gentleman mean by that?

Mr. HOPE. Just what the language says. It would include any benefits that accrued after the passage of the act and the action of the Employees' Compensation Commission in determining whether the claimant is entitled to relief.

Mr. CELLER. It seems to me it would be rather unfair to do that, because, due to a faulty reply by a Government official, this man was deprived of making his claim in the proper time. This bill only removes the bar of the statute of limitations.

Mr. HOPE. I have no objection to this man's being permitted to file a claim at this time without regard to the fact that the 1-year period is up, but I think the precedent we have always followed is that no benefits shall accrue prior to the passage of the bill.

Mr. CELLER. But if there is justice in the claim, I cannot see why the gentleman should want that provision in the bill. The man ought to be entitled to the benefits of the legislation from the time he was ill. It is now almost 5 years, and I think it would be very unfair to put on such a limitation.

Mr. HOPE. Of course, it is not the fault of the Congress or the Employees' Compensation Commission that the claim was not filed within the proper time. I think there are some equities in this case, but, strictly speaking, the man has no rights. We are giving him something when we pass this legislation, and I think we should follow the precedents that have been established in such cases.

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman will understand that this man is very old.

Mr. HOPE. I do not think there is any reason why we should not follow the precedents in this case. We ought not to go behind the passage of the act.

Mr. CELLER. It will not amount to very much, and if there is any justice at all this man should have it.

Mr. HOPE. If it does not amount to very much, the claimant is not losing very much. I see no reason for departing from the precedents, and I shall have to object.

Mr. CELLER. This claim was in Congress a year ago and someone objected to it, on what grounds I do not know, and so this man had to wait a year.

Mr. HOPE. I do not want to object, but if the gentleman will allow the bill to go through with the amendment, I will not object.

Mr. CELLER. I will accept the amendment.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, in view of the gentleman's statement, I will withdraw my objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 15, 17, and 20 of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended (U.S.C., title 5, pars. 765, 767, and 770, on p. 79), are hereby waived in favor of Edgar Sampson, who claims disability as a result of his employment under the Post Office Department in December 1927. The United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to accept formal notice of claim, now informally numbered Lf–17426, and to consider and act upon his claim under the remaining provisions of said act, as amended, in the same manner as if his claim and notice had been filed within 60 days after the said disability was incurred.

With the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine the claim of Edgar Sampson arising out of disability and illness resulting in the involuntary removal to a hospital of said Edgar Sampson on December 24, 1927, in the same manner and to the same extent as if said Edgar Sampson had made application for the benefits of said act within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act, but any favorable award under this act shall be based upon physical condition of said Edgar Sampson of current date."

HARDSHIP ON PHILIPPINES

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an article in the Washington Herald of April 10, 1934, on Hardship on Philippines.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article from the Washington Herald of April 10, 1934:

HARDSHIP ON PHILIPPINES

Manila dispatches report that consternation has been created among the Philippine people by the threat of Congress to impose a prohibitive tariff on copra and coconut oil.

Philippine leaders have appealed to the President and the Congress for protection against such an indefensible injustice to a dependent people, who are wholly at the mercy of a Congress in session 10,000 miles distant.

These Philippine leaders point out what American opponents of such a prohibitive tariff admit:

That to impose a prohibitive tax, which the House has voted and the Senate is considering, on copra and coconut oil would subject the Philippine people to the following hardships:

It would wipe out coconut plantations, which represent $150,000,000 of the Philippine Islands' wealth.

It would throw out of employment one third of the population of the Philippines, living in seven Provinces.

It would reduce to destitution and threaten with starvation 4,000,000 Filipinos, whose only means of support comes from the coconut trade that are to them in very truth "a tree of life." * * *

President Roosevelt is against this outrage. Secretary Dern has urged upon Congress the cruel consequences and the utter unfairness of inflicting upon the Philippine people an excise tax which would destroy one of their chief industries and nullify the traditional tariff policy under which the Philippine Islands have long been treated as an integral part of the United States.

Congressman WELCH, of California, has put the case convincingly against this iniquitous betrayal of America's solemn trust in the Philippine Islands when he said:

"This proposal strikes at the very vitals of the Philippine economic situation. Coconut oil has only had a 2 cents per pound duty since 1921 from other countries, but under the terms of reciprocity with the Philippines has been admitted free of duty from them.

"This embargo, for it is just that, means that these products will have to compete in the already oversupplied world market, which they cannot successfully do."

It is hard to believe that the Congress will ignore the protest of the President, the admonition of the Secretary of War, or turn a deaf ear to the desperate appeal for justice that comes from a dependent people across the Pacific, who look to the American flag for the same protection and give it the same loyal allegiance that is received and given by the people of continental United States.

What will honorable men the world over think of a Congress that stoops to oppress, by such a betrayal of trust, 4,000,000 helpless Filipinos whose only security lies in the sense of justice that ought to quicken every Senator and Representative in a Congress that calls itself American?

Is there no limit to the contempt for American honor, and the subserviency to the greedy demands of special privilege which seems to contaminate this Congress, where American responsibility to the Philippine people is involved?

VETERANS' LEGISLATION

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the adjusted-service compensation was to equalize wages of the soldier with those who stayed at home and made money. It should have been paid in cash, as the task was finished, and the laborer is entitled to his hire. Every other unfinished contract, like munition makers, were paid in cash. The doughboy was given an endowment policy payable in 1945. He had no option but to accept. Now he needs the money, and our country can pay it without incurring any interest. Instead of issuing bonds the bill passed by the House proposes to issue Treasury notes which will have the full credit of the Government behind them. One billion dollars in gold could be ear-marked as a reserve to this issue. This would create as sound security as any that backs our Nation's currency. This two and one half billion would be equally distributed over every township of our country. It is a fixed and regulated inflation badly needed to help bring us back. Your Representative has three times voted to pay the bonus in cash, and hence continued to support the measure that recently passed the House and is now pending in the Senate.

Much criticism has been lodged against Congressmen for voting for the economy bill last year. This act is the keystone to the arch of our recovery program. Without the balancing of the Budget covering current expenditures of the Government, we could not have refunded former bonds nor borrowed money to carry out the lines of relief work of the last few months. We had to find jobs for the unemployed and to feed the hungry. The Economy Act is the basis for this program which has been promoted upon borrowed money. It was for the whole Nation to bring us back out of the desperate and tragic plight into which we had fallen. The Members of Congress, all Federal employees, and soldiers took their cuts for good of all.

In carrying out the provisions of the Economy Act, the President issued Executive orders making reductions in both World War and Spanish War veterans' compensations, that went much deeper than any Member of Congress anticipated the cuts would be made. Most unexpectedly and unjustly, your Representative believes, were Spanish War pensioners required to prove service connection for their disabilities. It is now more than 30 years since they served. There were scarcely any hospital records kept, their comrades are scattered or dead, and their doctors cannot be located. It is unjust to require the soldier to furnish a proof that cannot be found because the Nation kept no record of their illness nor their wounds. The recent bill cures this injustice and places Spanish War veterans back in their former pensionable status at 75 percent of their former pensions. I voted for the measure when it passed the House of Representatives but was in Indiana when it came up for action on the veto.

The recent bill passed over the President's veto also returns the presumptive cases of tuberculosis and mental disorder cases arising within the presumptive period after the World War back to 75 percent of their former compensation. This is also a just modification of the Economy Act and Executive orders arising therefrom. There are other needed changes provided in the recent amendment. It is a moderate adjustment of inequalities. Some belittle Congress for overriding the President's veto because of pressure from home. I believe that the true motive of Congress was to do justice to the soldier. There is no official in public life who has presented to him the ills and problems of the people like a Member of Congress. He is the bumper for their appeals and protests. The Representatives have had presented some most aggravating and appealing cases of injustice. The Veterans' Bureau is often cold, unsympathetic, and unjustly technical. The Congressman appeals for these veterans for justice, but often to no avail. Eventually Congress takes matters into its own hands and rewrites the law so that advantage cannot longer be taken of the veterans by hard-boiled Veterans' Bureau doctors. This is a part of the new deal to do justice to those who fought our country's battles and suffered disabilities from the service.

The recent bill was the result of months of appeal to remedy these injustices. Many worthy cases were arbitrarily rejected and ignored. The administration of these Executive orders was not in the hands of the President but to Veterans' Bureau appointees who decided many just claims against the soldier. Congress has conscientiously endeavored to right the wrongs of the administration of the Economy Act. Most of the four-point program of the American Legion has been enacted. A fair measure of justice has been done the Spanish War veteran. The new law will be more in keeping with justice than the former act. This country cannot afford to be unfair, not even miserly with those who fought our country's battles when our future was hanging in the balance. The tragedies of war must be compensated. Not everyone who claims a pension is entitled to one, but those who have disabilities of service connection and their dependents are entitled to compensation by ancient and well-established precedents and accepted policies of our country.

We feel when fully understood these amendments will be approved, not alone by the soldier but also the people generally.

RECORD ON SOLDIER LEGISLATION ENACTED BY CONGRESS

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, the discussion of soldier legislation carries us back to the beginning of the World War and vividly recalls the days of hurried preparation, quick mobilization, and heroic action. The ex-service men joined the colors after the war resolution was passed on April 6, 1917. They upheld the fine traditions of our country. They are entitled to sympathetic consideration, legislation, and administration at the hands of a grateful Nation.

For the RECORD I want to briefly and frankly review some of the history of the legislation with reference to soldier benefits, and particularly that enacted during the Seventy-second Congress.

A committee was appointed at the previous session to make a comprehensive study of the entire subject of reduction of Government expenses and a bill was reported, but the drastic features with reference to soldiers were eliminated.

It was then urged that the Veterans' Administration was reviewing each case to determine what, if any, benefits each individual was entitled to receive, and the amount.

When the appropriation bill for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1933, was in course of preparation before a subcommittee, of which I was a member, an effort was made, which I assisted in defeating, to drastically reduce the appropriation. An appeal was taken to the full committee, where I continued my opposition and where I urged that the Veterans' Administration was reviewing all cases, and that every case should stand on its own merits, and that if there were any undeserving cases the Veterans' Administration could correct and eliminate them.

I also invited attention to the fact that a joint committee had been continued to study the legislation and that that committee had not at that time reported. As a result, the appropriation bill was passed without the drastic reduction. This bill met with the veto of President Hoover upon the alleged ground that the appropriation was excessive. However, this was not correct because the amount carried in the bill was within and less than the Budget estimates.

Therefore when the present administration took charge on March 4, 1933, there was no appropriation for the Veterans' Administration or soldier benefits for the current year beginning July 1, 1933. An appropriation therefore had to be made.

The first message which President Roosevelt submitted to Congress on March 10, the day after he convened it in extra session, called attention in detail to the Government revenues and expenditures, showing that the expenditures for the preceding 3 years had exceeded the revenues by more than $5,000,000,000, insisting that no recovery was possible without a balanced Budget, which so vitally affected the Nation's credit, and urged that he be given broad powers to reduce Government expenses, including soldier benefits, salaries of all Government employees, including Members of Congress, and the transfer, consolidation, and elimination of bureaus and commissions, in the interest of economy and efficiency. He closed his message by stating:

> If the Congress chooses to vest me with this responsibility, it will be exercised in a spirit of justice to all, of sympathy to those who are in need and of maintaining inviolate the basic welfare of the United States.

An emergency was upon us. Every bank, national and State, had been closed by moratorium orders of the President and the Governors of the several States; factories were idle; some 10 or 15 million men and women were being supported from public or private funds.

The President had been elected by a tremendous popular vote. He carried 42 of the 48 States of the Union.

The chairman of the committee reporting and in charge of this bill, the economy bill, after quoting the above paragraph from the President's message, assured the Members of the House that the authority would be sympathetically exercised and administered. He said:

> This bill, if enacted, will not be an act on your part to take a dime from a single worthy ex-service man.

The majority leader of the House, in a fervent effort to support the President, gave a like assurance. Accepting these assurances, the bill afterwards known as the "Economy Act" was passed, with the support of many ex-service men.

However, the rules and regulations prepared for and approved by the President were admittedly too drastic, and many cases were brought to the attention of Members of Congress which showed there were injustices and inequalities in them.

Upon our bringing these to the attention of the President, the rules and regulations were from time to time amended. Congress sought further to correct the abuses in the law and the regulations.

The Connally amendment to the new appropriation bill was first adopted in the Senate. This, among other things, provided for a horizontal reduction of 25 percent. Later the Steiwer-Cutting amendment was adopted as a Senate substitute for the Connally amendment.

The President authorized himself to be quoted as being against both of these amendments and the House adopted a substitute correcting many abuses, and these amendments were thrown into conference between the two Houses.

At this juncture the House steering committee, of which I was a member, was called to make a study of how to secure the most concessions in the interest of the soldiers and to assist the conferees of the two Houses, of which I was a member, to iron out their differences.

Everyone knew it was impossible then to override the veto of the President.

The committee invited many ex-service men, Members of the House, including WRIGHT PATMAN, Capt. GORDON BROWNING, and LAMAR JEFFERS, and also called in consultation Watson Miller, representing the World War veterans, to study and interpret the various amendments proposed in the House and the Senate, the regulations and the law, and to devise plans how most effectively to present all phases of the proposed legislation to the President, in the interest of the ex-service men.

As a result of these conferences, the steering committee appointed a subcommittee, of which I was a member, and enlarged it to include Capt. GORDON BROWNING, WRIGHT PATMAN, and LAMAR JEFFERS, to confer with the President. This we did at a number of prolonged conferences. The President expressed repeatedly the same views he gave utterance to at the Chicago convention.

We succeeded, however, in securing many modifications, including boards to review the presumptive cases, with their compensation continued until October 31, 1933, unless adverse action was taken before that date by the board, with the burden of proof upon the Government. There was reported to be 154,843 of these cases.

These conferences resulted in securing protection for 36.325 widows and dependents.

Non-service-connected World War veterans who are permanently and totally disabled were retained on the rolls. The Spanish-American War veterans, over 55 and under 62 and in need, were provided for. The hospital provision was liberalized. Regional offices were retained and appropriated for. In the meantime the regulations were further amended. In all, it was estimated that the objections of the President had been met and overcome and changes secured resulting in additional benefits for the soldiers of from one hundred to one hundred and fifty million dollars. All members of the committee agreed, as did Capt. GORDON BROWNING and WRIGHT PATMAN and LAMAR JEFFERS, representing the ex-service men, that it was better to accept this compromise than to lose all through a veto, and they earnestly urged the House to accept it.

Such, briefly, is the history, frankly stated, of the enactment of this legislation.

As the representative of the Second Oklahoma District, my constituency, and particularly the soldiers of all wars, are entitled to know my views and my record on soldier legislation while I have represented them in Congress. I do not hesitate to state them. I have outlined them more in detail in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 15, 1933.

In addition to supporting all appropriations and legislation during and since the World War recommended for the benefit of the ex-service men, permit me to state:

First. I supported and voted for the Gordon Browning amendment in the caucus which provided that the reduction in no event in the allowance to any soldier should exceed 25 percent. This passed the caucus, but not by a two-thirds binding vote, and the rules of the House did not permit its being offered when the bill came up for consideration.

Second. I did not favor the dropping by groups of the names of soldiers receiving benefits but urged that each case should be re-examined and decided upon its own merits.

Third. I favored the retention on the rolls of all those placed there under the law unless shown to be fraudulent or without merit, with the burden of proof upon the Government.

Fourth. I favored the retention of the presumptive cases on the rolls, both to nurse them back to health and as a matter of justice and humanity, because these cases should for the good of society be segregated from the public for its protection.

Fifth. I urged the President to retain on the rolls all those granted pensions under the act of July 3, 1930, reducing the amount not to exceed the proportion of the reduction to other soldiers, urging that the law could be amended as to future applicants, and in support of it I pressed these two arguments: First, that their cases had been settled; and second, many had incurred financial obligations since they had been granted pensions, based upon the amount of these Government allowances.

Sixth. I think the care of all of our soldiers is a national problem and that the obligation rests with the Government to hospitalize all soldiers to the extent of its facilities, giving first preference to cases of service origin, but to all soldiers to the extent of the Government facilities.

Seventh. I favored the retention of the local regional offices for the convenience of the ex-service men.

Eighth. I favored placing the widows and dependents of World War veterans on a par with the soldiers of all wars.

During the present session of Congress the independent offices appropriation bill was reported to the House under a special rule authorizing certain legislative amendments dealing with soldier legislation. When the bill reached the Senate amendments were added by many Senators, some of which were adopted, which, for the most part restored to the soldiers benefits enjoyed by them before the passage of the Economy Act of March 20, 1933, except as to Spanish-American War veterans who joined the service after the close of the war, August 12, 1898, and who did not participate in the Boxer Rebellion and the Philippine Insurrection, and as to certain World War veterans whose disabilities were not of service origin. The 29,000 presumptive cases, mostly tubercular and mental cases, were restored to the rolls except those who enlisted after the war and the disability is shown to have occurred before or after service. All entitled to hospital facilities and in need were directed to be hospitalized. In fact, except as to the precentage reduction, and except as to Spanish-American War veterans who joined the service after the close of the war on August 12, 1898, and to certain World War veterans whose disabilities were not of service origin, soldier benefits were restored, in substance, to what they were prior to the passage of the Economy Act.

Every effort was made to adjust the differences between the House and the Senate. I was a member of the conference committee and cooperated in every way in an effort to secure the enactment of legislation which would correct the inequalities and injustices done by the Economy Act of March 20, 1933, and did not hesitate to vote to override the President's veto, when I was convinced that he was in error over slight differences between himself and Congress.

It is estimated that approximately 330,000 World War veterans will be affected by this legislation, the annual increased cost of which is estimated at $83,000,000.

I introduced the bill (H.R. 7092) embodying the four-point program, sponsored by the American Legion, but the substance of this bill was embodied in the legislative amendments attached to the independent offices appropriation bill.

I also supported and voted for the bill providing for the payment of adjusted compensation or bonus certificates:

First, because I thought the compensation—compared to what was being paid to those in civil life—received by the soldiers during the war was inadequate.

Second, because it only provides for the remission of the interest from now until 1945.

Third, because it would greatly aid in relieving the depression. The money would be distributed to beneficiaries in every township and to members of almost every family in the country.

We must constantly keep in mind that there was no appropriation for the Veterans' Administration and for the soldiers of all wars when the new administration came into power March 4, 1933, and the President had the opportunity to urge his views either through the Economy Act or by limitation in the appropriation bill which had to be passed by Congress before funds would be available for the soldiers after July 1, 1933.

Having been privileged to represent the Second Congressional District during the fateful days of 1917 and 1918, I have always keenly felt my responsibility in connection with the World War. I am glad to have the opportunity in the RECORD to review the legislation enacted by Congress, and my own record in detail in connection with it. I am glad also to have the opportunity to frankly submit my views on soldier legislation, confident when they are known and understood that they will meet with the approval of those whose records have added additional laurels to the flag of our beloved country and whose good opinion I prize.

EDGAR SAMPSON

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment. The Honorable James A. Reed, former United States Senator, has just called me on the telephone and requested me to state to the House that the charge made a few moments ago by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] that Dr. Wirt had served a term in jail during the World War is wholly malicious and wholly false; that Dr. Wirt's record is clean, and that he has never been arrested.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. I thought we had decided this afternoon to stop all further discussion of that matter. The gentleman himself started it. I though we had agreed to quit and attend to the business of the House and not play petty politics on this floor while there is important business to attend to.

Mr. McGUGIN. Does the gentleman say it is petty politics to stand here on the floor of the House and correct a statement which slanders a man, which charges that he served time in jail for disloyalty to the country, when it is not true? Is that petty politics?

Mr. BYRNS. I do not say that; but I say the gentleman's speech which started this discussion a while ago was nothing more nor less than petty politics.

Mr. McGUGIN. It was not petty politics. Petty politics does not warrant anyone to defame the character of an American citizen, be that citizen Dr. Wirt or any other citizen.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOSEPH DUMAS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4846, for the relief of Joseph Dumas.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to ascertain, if it is possible, the present condition of Mr. Dumas, if the author of the bill is present.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Speaker, the information that I get is that he is still extremely lame, as it is stated he would be in the last sentence of the report.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have examined the report, and on the basis of the report and the indications of the man's injuries, I think the sum of $2,500 is altogether too high.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. One thousand and five hundred dollars ought to be satisfactory.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If the gentleman will agree to accept an amendment reducing the amount to $1,500, I have no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. MORAN. I am obliged to accept.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $5,000 to Joseph Dumas, of Waterville, Maine, for injuries received by said Dumas on September 9, 1927, at said Waterville, through the negligence of an employee in the United States Railway Mail Service.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$2,500."

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out "$2,500" and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,500."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLANCHARD: Amend the committee amendment by striking out "$2,500" and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,500."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the remaining committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "Maine", insert "in full payment and settlement of all claims against the United States", and at the end of the bill insert: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FREDERICK L. CAUDLE

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 304, H.R. 5689, providing for the advancement in rank of Frederick L. Caudle, on the retired list of the United States Navy. The gentleman who objected and I have worked out an amendment satisfactory to both of us.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Ensign Frederick L. Caudle, United States Navy, retired, shall have the rank and receive the pay and allowances on the retired list of the United States Navy as a lieutenant (junior grade) with 3 years of service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'MALLEY: Line 6, after the word "with", insert "less than."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GALEN E. LICHTY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4847, for the relief of Galen E. Lichty.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to ask the author of the bill if he has any objection to the usual amendment providing that this shall be in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States, and also the attorney's fee amendment.

Mr. MOREHEAD. Mr. Speaker, this county came into my district under the new redistricting of the State. This claim has been approved and passed here, as the gentleman will notice, by the House, and also has been twice to the Senate, but failed to be enacted. I have no objection to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $554.70 to Galen E. Lichty, stamp clerk of the post office at Beatrice, Gage County, Nebr., to reimburse him for funds stolen from the Beatrice post office by unknown persons on the day of November 17, 1928.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HOPE: After the figures in line 5, insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States", and at the end of line 9 insert "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendments were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

THE REAL CAUSE OF THE DEPRESSION

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, disease is the result of the violation of the laws of health, the disregard of some natural law. Many governmental diseases are the direct result of a maladministration of our benign system of government and the penalties we pay for having abandoned the high ideals that underlie, permeate, and vitalize our free institutions. The great depression through which we have been passing is the result of too little government of the right kind and too much government of the wrong kind, under the Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover administrations.

For 12 years big business was in the saddle, booted and spurred, recklessly riding over the so-called "common people" and "middle classes." The beneficiaries of special-privilege legislation unconscionable augmented their unearned and undeserved bounties, and mercilessly exploited the masses. Class legislation was the order of the day. Powerful plunderbunds stabled their richly caparisoned horses of special privilege in the corridors of the Capitol to browbeat the Representatives of the people and punish all who refused or even hesitated to register their bidding. Predatory wealth and organized greed exacted and obtained their pound of flesh. Control of our currency, credits, and national wealth was in the hands of a few masters of finance and big-business buccaneers, who ruthlessly manipulated markets and depressed commodity prices, flooded the country with worthless stocks and bonds, overcapitalized industry, turned the stream of commerce from its natural channel, ushered in an orgy of speculation, staged a frenzied big-business carrousel, and inaugurated an era of legislative favoritism, economic greed, and social injustice.

And what was the result? Intermittent financial fevers, industrial malaria, unemployment flux, agricultural palsy, transportation anemia, bankers' chills, and strange as it may seem, at the same time, both high and low economic blood pressure. These maladies were the inevitable consequences of our having abandoned safe and sane methods in the management of our business and governmental affairs under the last three national Republican administrations.

In harmony with the false and pernicious political philosophy of the Republican Party prior to the inauguration of President Roosevelt, our Government became so entangled with business, and business became so interlocked with Government, that whatever influenced the one inevitably affected the other. Big business and the Government became as closely related as Eng and Chang, the Siamese twins, so that if either took snuff the other sneezed. Unbalanced budgets, reduced revenues, wasteful expenditures, corruption in high places, and a virile brood of vexatious political and governmental problems followed in the wake of economic, industrial, financial, and agricultural maladjustments.

Whether our economic, civic, and social problems are primarily governmental or economic, they undoubtedly flow from an improper relationship between the Government and the people. For 12 years, from the advent of the Harding administration to the end of the Hoover regime, something, yes, nearly everything, was out of balance.

The relationship between the several vocational groups has been artificially influenced and maladjusted by legislative favoritism or by unwise intermeddling by the Government in matters entirely within the sphere of private initiative. Favorable or unfavorable conditions were stimulated because of too much or too little government, and frequently highly artificial and exceedingly unsound economic conditions were created with either the express or implied sanction of the Government.

Under the last three national Republican administrations, a few powerful and well-organized groups applied irresistible pressure to our executive and legislative departments, and habitually dictated the language of the laws under which they plundered the people and recklessly disregarded the natural political and economic rights of the unorganized masses. Unfavorable and radical reaction from these artificially created conditions was inevitable.

What is the relationship between the Government and big business? Why should the Government suffer from the same distemper that afflicts agriculture, industry, transportation, banking, and commerce? When the manufacturer, the banker, the merchant, and the farmer eat sour grapes, why are Uncle Sam's teeth set on edge? In my opinion, the efficiency and usefulness of our Government were materially impaired as a direct result of our abandonment under Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover of many of the ideals, principles, and policies on which our governmental structure rests. We fell into the pit of depression because we did not walk in the old paths and because we strayed far from the landmarks established by the men who founded and bequeathed to us the best system of government so far devised by man.

Our Republic was set up by men who had just emerged from a successful rebellion against a paternalistic nation, under which there was an inequitable distribution of the burdens and benefits of government. Our constitutional fathers endeavored to establish and believed they had established a Nation, the activities of which would necessarily be confined exclusively to questions which had to do with personal and political liberty, social order, and the maintenance of a wise, stable, and benevolent Government, untouched by the filthy finger of privilege and unawed by the arrogant and greedy demands of predatory wealth and organized pillage.

It was never contemplated by the men who founded our free institutions that our Federal Government would be called upon to enrich one class of people at the expense of other classes, or to grant special privileges in one section or to one group, and deny similar privileges to other sections and other vocational groups; or that the Government would invade the domain of private business and allow certain favored classes to use its agencies and instrumentalities to accomplish their selfish, cynical, and sordid purposes.

Having won their freedom at the point of the sword, our forefathers had no thought of establishing a government like that against which they had rebelled. The men who charted our national course never would have sanctioned class legislation which under Republican administrations became a malignant cancer fastened to our body politic and gnawing at our vitals; nor would they have looked with tolerance on the creation of favored groups, who, under solemn legislative mandate, are permitted to use our governmental agencies for their own enrichment, at the expense of more numerous but less-favored classes.

If those intrusted with the conduct of our public affairs had steadfastly steered a straight course and not deviated from the letter and spirit of our organic law, and had not yielded to the seductive appeals of certain powerful and efficiently organized groups, and had refused to enact class legislation of any kind or character, we would not now be plagued with a multitude of embarrassing governmental problems, and the economic life of the American people would have been less spectacular, but more balanced, stable, virile, and equitable.

We are confronted by these so-called "governmental problems", because in an hour of weakness we sanctioned the enactment of class legislation, which is contrary to the genius and spirit of our institutions. Having once opened the door to class legislation for the enrichment of one group at the expense of another, we are now seemingly powerless to close it. Having once enthroned special privilege, it insolently declines to abdicate or surrender its unearned bounties.

If we had not established the policy of enacting laws to supplement individual initiative and to create an artificial prosperity in certain lines of business, we would not be confronted by the unemployment problem, the industrial problem, the tariff problem, the transportation problem, the farm problem, the financial problem, and numerous other problems that threaten our industrial peace, social order, and economic life. And may I add, we have an agricultural problem, because, by legislative enactments extending over a long period of years, the Government destroyed the economic equality or balance that previously existed and should always exist between agriculture and industry. The Government has stabilized industry by high-tariff laws and given the American manufacturer a monopoly on the American market which enables him to sell his commodities to the farmer, laborer, and unprotected masses at unconscionable profits, thereby destroying the proper balance between the vocational groups, especially between agriculture and industry.

By legislative action the Government has come to the rescue of the manufacturer, the banker, the railroad, and big business. By legislative fiat these callings have been stabilized and their incomes and profits substantially increased. It would be futile at this late day to complain of the help which the Government has extended to these other favored classes, but I am convinced that agriculture should be given the same kind of help that has been so unstintingly granted to other industries. The business of practically every other great industry has been artificially stimulated, stabilized, and safeguarded by congressional action. This has materially strengthened and enriched these other vocational groups at the expense of agriculture. Our Government should either cease legislating for the stabilization and enrichment of other industries and activities, or it should extend the same treatment to agriculture.

But you say the Government has legislated for the benefit of the farmer, to which I reply that the farmer has been denied the only kind of legislation that can afford him substantial relief, legislation that will restore his purchasing power, stabilize the market price of his farm products on higher levels so as to enable him to balance his budget and sell his commodities at a price that will not only return the cost of production but yield a fair profit over production costs; legislation that will narrow the spread between what the farmer gets for his products and what he pays for his supplies.

In the last analysis the prosperity of all other vocational groups depends very largely on the prosperity of the agricultural classes, and until agriculture is restored to the list of profitable occupations, we will continue to flounder in the pit of depression.

C. J. HOLLIDAY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4927, for the relief of C. J. Holliday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Will the gentlemen withhold objections for a moment?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Yes. I am willing to reserve the objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. This is a case where a man went on a surety bond, without any pay or any fee, just as a friend. He signed a bond for another fellow who was in jail. He got out and absconded, and the bond was forfeited. Subsequently to that time, the man at his own expense apprehended the man and returned him to court, and satisfied the sentence. This is to reimburse the man for his bond. He received no fee whatever. This is not a professional bondsman.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The United States district attorney and the Department of Justice are opposed to paying back this money, are they not?

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. I think they are in favor of it.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I believe the gentleman is wrong about that.

Suppose we pass the next four bills for the time being.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the next four bills be passed over for the time being, and that we may return to them later. They are numbers 313, 315, and 316 on the calendar.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Number 314 involves a different principle.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. I just want to conserve time and check up on the point asked by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK].

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Private Calendar bills numbered 313, 315, and 316 be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PALMETTO COTTON CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4928, for the relief of the Palmetto Cotton Co.

Mr. HOPE. Reserving the right to object, I wish the author of the bill would explain the circumstances under which this remittance appears to be made.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, this involves a mortgage given by a Mr. Tribble. A mortgage was given to the farmers' seed loan, a branch of the Government. Prior to that a mortgage was given to the Patrick Motor Co. The cotton was sold to the Palmetto Cotton Co., and they sent the money to the Government, disregarding the prior lien that was on the record in the court, in the proper place. The Government recognizes in this report that it is not entitled to this money, but under their machinery they cannot refund it, and this is the only way the man can be recompensed.

Mr. HOPE. This bill is to reimburse the party who bought the cotton, and apparently it was through his own negligence that the money was paid to the junior lien holder instead of the first lien holder.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Yes; but it was an oversight. He should not be penalized for paying it to a man who was not entitled to it. The person to whom it was paid wants to refund it, and the only machinery by which it can be done is by this bill.

Mr. HOPE. Does the Government have any security by which it will get its money if this is refunded?

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. I do not know; but certainly the Government will not be in any worse position by reason of passing this bill than it was when it took a second mortgage, when it should have exercised the precaution of taking a first mortgage. There is no use making this man the victim because of the Government's negligence in not properly protecting itself against a prior mortgage.

Mr. HOPE. Of course, it was due to the negligence of the party we are trying to relieve that the money was paid to the Government; but in view of the fact that the Department is willing that this bill should be enacted, and has no objection to it, I shall not object.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. I appreciate that on the part of the gentleman.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $140, which sum represents a part of the remittance to the farmers' seed loan offices of the Department of Agriculture by the Palmetto Cotton Co. in payment of a loan of Hollock Tribble to the said farmers' seed loan office. upon which amount a prior lien or mortgage existed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HELENA C. VONGRONING AND STEPHAN VONGRONING

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4958, for the relief of Helena C. VonGroning and Stephan VonGroning.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ALFRED HARRIS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4990, for the relief of Alfred Harris.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SOPHIE CARTER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5000, for the relief of Sophie Carter.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the proponent of this bill some questions. I have no objection except that it should contain certain formal amendments. I will withdraw my objection with the understanding that those amendments may be agreed to.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

NICOLA VALERIO

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5405, for the relief of Nicola Valerio.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask that this bill be passed over.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, Mr. Speaker, it is double the amount that is customary, as a maximum allowed in a death claim.

Mr. BLACK. I am willing to have the amount reduced.

Mr. BLANTON. I think possibly the bill ought to be passed, but for only half the sum.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

Permit me to call to the attention of the gentleman the fact that we have been passing quite a number of bills for the relief of surviving relatives of individuals who have been killed because of the reckless driving of mail trucks. I think the Post Office Department should take some action to curb the reckless and careless driving of mail trucks by its employees.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I think our colleague should go down to the Post Office Department and get every one of their employees on wheels admonished. For that matter I think he ought to get the Post Office Department to admonish also every postmaster and every custodian of a post office that hereafter they better be careful to adhere to the regulations with regard to locking safes and protecting the property of the United States Government, because we are going to be mighty careful in future about granting these reimbursements.

Mr. TRUAX. I suggest that the gentleman from Texas take the matter up himself.

Mr. BLANTON. I have been trying for 10 years to get that done. Let this be our insistent request upon the Post Office Department that it shall warn all employees to be extremely careful so that we may stop these numberless claims against the Government. I think maybe the very active senatorial aspirant from Ohio may be very helpful in bringing this notice from Congress to the Post Office Department.

Mr. TRUAX. I may say to the gentleman that as I have no post-office patronage, possibly it would be a good idea for me to do it.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, there should be inserted in the bill a formal statement that it is in full settlement of all claims against the Government.

Mr. BLANTON. And the amount should be reduced from $10,000 to $5,000.

Mr. HOLLISTER. If that is inserted, I shall have no objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Nicola Valerio, father of Joseph Valerio, deceased, the sum of $10,000 on account of the death of the aforesaid Joseph Valerio, which was caused by his being struck by a post-office mail truck: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOLLISTER: Page 1, line 6, after the "$10,000", insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 1, line 6, strike out "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ROBERT R. PRANN

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H.R. 6585) for the relief of Robert R. Prann, Private Calendar No. 117, be laid on the table.

The reason I submit this request is that a similar bill has passed the Senate. This bill was one of those objected to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] during the early part of the session when we had trouble with regard to inserting the Lindbergh telegram in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

DR. WIRT

Mr. SWICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWICK. Mr. Speaker, several days ago I called upon the Members of this House to awaken from the hypnotic trance resulting from the monotonous rhythm of a one-man band sounding the paternalistic notes of the "brain trusters."

This morning in the caucus room of the new House Office Building, a committee composed of Members of this body convened for the purpose of inquiring into certain charges against these supermen, who have been drafted into Federal service for the purpose of national recovery, by a distinguished educator.

Leaders of this House and of the administration have seen fit to discredit this accuser, even to the extent of claiming it is all a partisan political move; and yet, to the consternation of the minority members of the committee, there appeared in the role of counsel for Dr. Wirt none other than Jim Reed, of Missouri, who is undoubtedly one of the outstanding Democrats, if not the outstanding, in the United States.

There seems to be a well-defined determination on the part of the committee, of the majority members I should say, to bring the hearing to a quick determination, even though it becomes necessary to resort to unprecedented and un-American practices to do so, by denying the man whom they have summoned the right to make a statement unhindered.

It is not my purpose to say whether the charges are true or untrue. I do believe they are of sufficient gravity to merit a very thorough investigation. The fact that Senator Reed has associated himself with the accuser is to any patriotic American proof that the situation is a serious one.

If there is an organized effort on the part of men and women now within the heart of our Federal Government to substitute the atheistic doctrines of communistic Russia for the constitutional rights of Americans, they should be exposed.

I believe the patriotic sense of Americans will demand that this matter be given the same thorough investigation as is given other questions of much less importance. If the charges are false—and let us hope they are—they should be proved so beyond a doubt; otherwise, they will hang like a dark cloud over us, and do much to hinder recovery.

CHARGES OF DR. WIRT

Mr. FOULKES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOULKES. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to the fact that certain Congressmen are being flooded with letters—all of them mimeographed form letters or copies from such forms—that seem to smack of Nazi propaganda and that coincide with the charges of Dr. Wirt. They are plainly the work of some propaganda organization bent on painting the administration as "red" and inflaming the passions and prejudices of people.

This is the form that is followed in letters coming to me and to one other Congressman:

Much is being said in the daily press about communism existing in the Roosevelt "brain trust." As a citizen of your State, I join with others in requesting you to use your powers in having these charges investigated to the very limit. And if they are found to be true, I plead with you to do your utmost to purge official Washington of these subversive influences. We should not go to atheistic Moscow for ideas on how to run the government of a Christian nation.

The letters come from certain cities in Michigan, including Detroit, Benton Harbor, and Niles, and some in central New York—Johnson City, Oneonta, Glen Aubrey, Union, and Laurens. I am withholding the names of the signers for the present.

PLAYA DE FLOR LAND & IMPROVEMENT CO.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 108, the bill H.R. 5284, for the relief of the Playa de Flor Land & Improvement Co., and that said bill be now considered. I objected to it in the first place not understanding the bill. I understand, however, that it is urgent that the bill be passed.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. It gives the right to certain land companies in Panama to have their claims for land adjudicated by the Federal court in Panama. It does not authorize any appropriation, and Congress will pass upon any amount the court allows, if it should allow any.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the District Court of the Canal Zone to hear and determine, without intervention of a jury, but subject to the provisions for appeal as in other cases provided by the Panama Canal Act, as amended, the claim of the Playa de Flor Land & Improvement Co. against the United States on account of property taken by the United States in the Canal Zone.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATURALIZATION PROCEEDINGS

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Concurrent Resolution No. 35.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the House concurrent resolution, as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 35

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President is requested to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H.R. 3521, 73d Cong., 2d sess.) entitled "An act to reduce certain fees in naturalization proceedings, and for other purposes", for the purpose of correcting an error in said bill.

The House concurrent resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BULWINKLE, for 3 days, on account of personal business.

To Mr. DOUTRICH, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. NESBIT, for 1 week, on account of death in family.

To Mr. KNUTE HILL, for 2 weeks, on account of illness of sister.

WILLIAM L. JENKINS

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the consideration earlier today of the bill (H.R. 1939) for the relief of William L. Jenkins, in answer to the question of the gentleman from Ohio, I made the statement that the bill had passed the Seventy-second Congress. I wish to correct that statement. It was favorably reported, but it was not passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BYRNS. In order that Members may be advised, if the House is willing to acquiesce in the unanimous-consent request I am going to submit, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, in the event the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] is unable to be present to take up the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia, it may be in order to continue the call of bills unobjected to on the Private Calendar, beginning where the call left off this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and an enrolled joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 193. An act to amend section 536c of the act entitled "An act to amend subchapter 1 of chapter 18 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia relating to degree-conferring institutions", approved March 2, 1929;

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H.R. 1451) granting a pension to Cornelia M. Campbell, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BLANTON: A bill (H.R. 9061) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. BACHARACH: A bill (H.R. 9062) to regulate the expenditure of public moneys heretofore and hereafter available for expenditure in carrying out the act of May 18, 1933, known as the "Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933", and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. REED of New York: A bill (H.R. 9063) to provide for preliminary examination and survey of Barcelona Harbor, Chautauqua County, N.Y.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. SCHULTE: A bill (H.R. 9064) granting the consent of Congress to the State of Indiana to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Grand Calumet River at or near a point suitable to the interests of navigation, east of Clark Street, in Gary, Ind.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. TREADWAY: A bill (H.R. 9065) granting the consent of Congress to the Department of Public Works of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Connecticut River at Turners Falls, Mass.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SUMNERS of Texas (by request): A bill (H.R. 9066) to provide for the taxation of manufacturers, importers, and dealers in small firearms and machine guns, to tax the sale or other disposal of such weapons, and to restrict importation and regulate interstate transportation thereof; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. VINSON of Georgia: A bill (H.R. 9067) to amend the act approved February 15, 1929, entitled "An act to permit certain warrant officers to count all active service rendered under temporary appointments as warrant or commissioned officers in the Regular Navy, or as warrant or commissioned officers in the United States Naval Reserve Force, for purpose of promotion to chief warrant rank"; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 9068) to provide for promotion by selection in the line of the Navy in the grades of lieutenant commander and lieutenant; to authorize appointment as ensigns in the line of the Navy all midshipmen who hereafter graduate from the Naval Academy, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CELLER (by request): A bill (H.R. 9069) to provide for the establishment of unemployment and social insurance, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. FITZGIBBONS: A bill (H.R. 9070) relating to the eligibility of persons for appointment in the classified civil service; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

By Mr. ARENS: Joint resolution (H.J.Res. 319) to investigate corporations engaged in the manufacture, sale, or distribution of agricultural implements and machinery; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BROWN of Georgia: A bill (H.R. 9071) granting a pension to Clarence Allen; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 9072) for the relief of the legal representatives of the estate of John H. Christy; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BURNHAM: A bill (H.R. 9073) granting a pension to Robert Fuller; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mrs. CLARKE of New York: A bill (H.R. 9074) granting a pension to Sarah W. Chisholm; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FOCHT: A bill (H.R. 9075) granting a pension to Minnie G. Jones; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRIFFIN: A bill (H.R. 9076) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of Edward A. McCormack; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KINZER: A bill (H.R. 9077) granting a pension to George Newton Groff; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 9078) granting an increase of pension to Lydia A. Stuard; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 9079) granting an increase of pension to Sarah C. Wiley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KURTZ: A bill (H.R. 9080) granting a pension to Susan Maude Hall; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 9081) granting a pension to Angeline Roudabush; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mrs. McCARTHY: A bill (H.R. 9082) for the relief of Charles W. Cole; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PARKS: A bill (H.R. 9083) for the relief of R. K. Garfield; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. RANDOLPH: A bill (H.R. 9084) to authorize the Comptroller General to settle and certify for payment the account of M. M. Smith as de facto United States commissioner for the northern district of West Virginia from May 1, 1933, to October 1, 1933; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHANNON: A bill (H.R. 9085) for the relief of Dory Cleo Arnold; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WOLFENDEN: A bill (H.R. 9086) for the relief of Stewart A. McDowell; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JONES: Joint resolution (H.J.Res. 320) authorizing suitable memorials in honor of James Wilson and Seaman A. Knapp; to the Committee on the Library.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

3772. By Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts: Petition adopted by the General Court of Massachusetts, favoring the making of loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation directly to industry instead of through the agency of mortgage-loan companies; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

I regret to announce the absence of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], occasioned by illness.

Mr. HEBERT. I wish to announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a memorial of several citizens of Muskogee, Okla., remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. 2926) to equalize the bargaining power of employers and employees, to encourage the amicable settlement of disputes between employers and employees, to create a National Labor Board, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. WALSH presented a petition of sundry citizens of Springfield, Mass., praying for such amendment of the pure food and drug laws as will assure the public of the continued professional protection of legally responsible registered pharmacists wherever drugs and medicine are supplied, distributed, or offered for sale, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Manufacturers' Textile Association, Worcester, Mass., protesting against the passage at the present time of the so-called "Wagner bill", being Senate bill 2280, providing for unemployment insurance, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Massachusetts State Council of Carpenters, favoring a speedy termination of the C.W.A. relief program, and that in place thereof the original P.W.A. program be immediately expedited, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Worcester, Mass., being members of the congregation of the First Church of Christ, praying for the prompt ratification of the World Court protocols, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the memorial of the Massachusetts Indian Association, Boston, Mass., remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H.R. 7902) to grant to Indians living under Federal tutelage the freedom to organize for purposes of local self-government and economic enterprise, to provide for the necessary training of Indians in administrative and economic affairs, to conserve and develop Indian lands, and to promote the more effective administration of justice in matters affecting Indian tribes and communities by establishing a Federal Court of Indian Affairs, which was refered to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the City Council of Revere, Mass., favoring the passage of the bill (H.R. 7986) to amend the Radio Act of 1927, approved February 23, 1927, as amended (44 Stat. 1162), which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Manufacturers' Textile Association Worcester, Mass., protesting against the passage of the so-called "Capper truth-in-fabric bill", which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented the petition of members of Pioneer Lodge, No. 238, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Springfield, Mass., favoring amendment of the Railway Labor Act and the passage of legislation providing for the 6-hour day and other matters for the benefit of trainmen, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Woman's Home Missionary Society of Watertown; the Worcester Better Films Council, of Worcester; and the Woman's Christian Temperance Unions of Springfield, Spencer, and Worcester, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the passage of the so-called "Patman motion-picture bill", being House bill 6097, providing for higher moral standards for films entering interstate and foreign commerce, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Central Political and Social Club, of Boston, Mass., favoring the adoption by the House of Representatives of a resolution submitted by Representative DE PRIEST, of Illinois, to prevent alleged racial discrimination in a restaurant operated in the House wing of the Capitol, which were referred to the Committee on Rules.

RECIPROCAL TARIFF AGREEMENTS—DUTY ON LACES

Mr. HEBERT. I send to the desk a memorial signed by about 500 lace operatives of Rhode Island protesting against the reciprocal tariff bill now pending before Congress. I shall not ask that it be embodied in the RECORD, but I wish to have it noted therein.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be received, noted in the RECORD, and appropriately referred.

The memorial presented by Mr. HEBERT from about 500 citizens, being lace operatives, of the State of Rhode Island, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H.R. 8687) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, especially as it might affect the tariff duty on laces, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

PAYMENT OF ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask leave to insert in the RECORD some petitions, numerously signed, sent me by the United States Veterans and Civilians, Inc., of the State of Minnesota, praying for the immediate cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates of ex-service men, and ask that they be referred to the appropriate committee.

There being no objection, the petitions were referred to the Committee on Finance, and the body of one of them was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, without the signatures, as follows:

UNITED STATES VETERANS AND CIVILIANS, INC.,
Minneapolis, Minn.

Petition to Seventy-third Congress of the United States of America:

We, the undersigned veterans and civilians of Minnesota, do hereby petition the Seventy-third Congress of the United States for the immediate cash payment of the adjusted-service certificate, or so-called "bonus bill." We, the undersigned, believe that the immediate passage of this bill will not only greatly aid and stimulate industries throughout the Nation, but will also cause a general resumption of employment, which will greatly benefit the agricultural sections. The immediate payment of the bonus bill will automatically take many thousands of men now on C.W.A. and on State and Government relief off of this form of Government aid, which has been such a great strain on State and National treasuries.

HOME FINANCING

Mr. OVERTON. I send to the desk a resolution adopted by the executive committee of the United States Building and Loan League at a meeting recently held in Washington, D.C., and ask that it may be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution

Whereas the resumption of home-financing activities is a necessary part of the business recovery program of the country; and

Whereas the bulk of the funds for such activities must come from the thrift and savings of the American people to finance the buying, repairing, maintaining, owning, and building of homes; and

Whereas the United States Building and Loan League represents approximately 4,000 thrift and home-financing institutions which in their existence have financed over 8,000,000 American homes, and which today hold on behalf of their members 65 percent of the small home loans in the country; and

Whereas the executive committee of the league, including representatives of 42 States, are formally assembled in Washington, D.C., in response to the call of President Lieber; and

Whereas it is the judgment of the committee that a comprehensive program is desirable, looking to a resumption of activity on the part of thrift and home-financing institutions: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the committee propose and offer its complete cooperation to the President of the United States in carrying out the following program:

(1) A guarantee of the principal of Home Owners' Loan Corporation bonds, with a clear-cut legislative definition of policy as to the citizens entitled to this relief financing, which should be confined to economically unfortunate persons involuntarily in default. (Item covered in S. 2999.)

(2) Additional capital in the aid of employment should be allocated to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to completely modernize and maintain properties upon which it has made advances. (Estimated at $100,000,000.) (Item covered in S. 2999.)

(3) In the further stimulation of employment growing out of home repairs, home maintenance, and home building provision should be made for the liberal purchase of shares in Federal savings and loan associations and in institutions affiliated with and under the supervision of the Federal home loan bank system. (Estimated at $300,000,000.) (Item partially covered in S. 2999.)

(4) Additional funds should be provided for the Federal home loan banks in order that they may continue their expanding services. (Estimated at $200,000,000.) (Item covered in S. 2999.)

(5) Insurance of savings and loan shares for such institutions affiliated with the Federal home loan bank system as desire to purchase this protection for their investing members. This proposal would result in an increased confidence in thrift and home-financing institutions and divert at least a portion of the savings of the people into these institutions by giving them similar protection to that enacted for banking institutions. One of the reasons for the scarcity of home-mortgage capital has been large inactive savings in banks which do not make home-mortgage loans. (Estimated at $100,000,000.)

(6) Establishment of a system of boards of conciliation to serve without pay as a part of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to increase its services to home mortgagors and home mortgagees. (No cost.)

(7) A small fund to be used by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board in encouraging home maintenance, home buying, and home owning under sound supervision and planning. (Estimated, $500,000.) (Item adequately covered in S. 2999.)

This program, involving $600,500,000, could begin to operate broadly in every part of the country without encouraging speculative building excesses. Carrying on the program through existing institutions would be both timely and efficient, especially where advances are made leading to the employment of labor. The program would also put thousands of local institutions into activity and the funds made available by the Government would be substantially augmented by thrift savings. The projects, being self-liquidating, would repay the Government, amply secured, its entire cost of capital.

I hereby certify that the above is a true and correct copy of a resolution adopted by the executive committee of the United States Building and Loan League at a meeting held in the city of Washington, D.C., on the 27th day of February 1934.

H. F. CELLARIUS,
Secretary-Treasurer.

THE STEEL CODE

Mr. DUFFY. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and to lie on the table a very brief letter pertaining to the steel code. The writer has given a great deal of attention to social and industrial problems and, I think, presents an interesting viewpoint.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ALLIS-CHALMERS MANUFACTURING CO.,
Milwaukee, Wis., March 29, 1934.

Senator F. RYAN DUFFY,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR RYAN: We understand that Senator BORAH has recently introduced a resolution directing the Federal Trade Commission to investigate the steel code with reference to the subject of effect of the code upon the "little fellow."

In code experience I have come to the conclusion that a proper definition of a "little fellow" is one who is smaller than a competitor. Thus, although we are regarded as a large corporation in the Wisconsin picture, nevertheless we are distinctly a little fellow in the national picture.

In view of that fact it seems proper for us to advise you that the steel code has not worked to our disadvantage in competition with our larger competitors. On the other hand, we feel we have the assurance that we are on a parity with all competitors in the purchase of materials covered by the code in question.

With best regards, I am very truly yours,

H. W. STORY, General Attorney.

Mr. McCARRAN submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3170) to revise air-mail laws, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

COMMITTEE TO GREET THE PRESIDENT

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is detained from the Senate because of illness in his family. He has asked me to announce, in his absence, that the President will return tomorrow from his vacation, and an informal committee has been appointed to make arrangements to meet the President at the Union Station at 9:30 a.m., a committee on the part of the Senate as well as one on the part of the House. It is composed of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. LONERGAN], and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY], together with the Sergeant at Arms and the Secretary of the Senate. On the part of the House, an informal committee has been named consisting of Representatives GREENWOOD, WOODRUM, BYRNS, DICKSTEIN, and LOZIER, and the Sergeant at Arms.

It is suggested that such Senators as desire to join in welcoming the President—and we hope the minority will be represented by those Senators who can be present—meet in the President's room at the Union Station tomorrow morning at 9:30 o'clock, simply to greet the President on his return. Then they may retire to their offices or to the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator read again the committee appointed from the Senate?

Mr. CONNALLY. I undertook to say that it was not an official committee, that it was purely unofficial. I will read the names if the Senator desires. It is not a committee appointed by the Senate at all, but simply an unofficial company to make arrangements.

Mr. BORAH. I do not understand why the Senator should appoint a committee to meet the President and confine it exclusively to the Democratic side.

Mr. CONNALLY. I had nothing to do with the composition of the committee. As I understand, the Senator from Arkansas selected this informal committee, not giving it the sanction of appointment by the Senate, and there is nothing official about the welcome. I undertook to point out that the committee was to be at the station and that other Senators who desired to come would be welcome.

Mr. BORAH. I still do not understand where this committee comes from. Who appointed it?

Mr. CONNALLY. I said that the Senator from Arkansas selected it.

Mr. BORAH. I do not understand why the Senator from Arkansas should select a committee of this kind composed entirely of Democrats to greet the President on his return.

Mr. CONNALLY. So far as I am concerned, I will be very glad to include the Senator from Idaho as a member of the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield to me?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I am quite sure the Senator from Arkansas meant to show no discourtesy to anyone. He merely requested the three Senators named to be sure to be at the station to meet the President and asked the Senator from Texas to extend an invitation to other Members of the Senate who could be there. It does not seem to me that the Senator from Arkansas has shown any discourtesy at all.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I was not present when the statement was made by the Senator from Texas, but in fairness to the Senator from Arkansas I may state that he spoke to me yesterday about the return of the President, and to me he expressed the desire that the Republican Members of the Senate should cooperate in the welcome. I say this in fairness to the Senator from Arkansas, and I thought that he would probably mention it in person today on the floor of the Senate. I am sure that I can say for him that no discourtesy was intended to this side of the Chamber.

Mr. BORAH. I did not suppose any discourtesy was intended, but it seemed to me rather extraordinary to read in the Senate the names of a committee appointed to meet the President, composed entirely of Senators from the Democratic side.

Mr. McNARY. I am not conversant with any committee that has been named, that matter was not discussed, but I can say, in fairness to the Senator from Arkansas, that he did notify me yesterday of the plan to welcome the President on his return.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I am acting simply in the absence of the Senator from Arkansas, and I desire to confirm what has been said by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY]. My understanding is that the Senator from Arkansas conferred with the Senator from Oregon before these arrangements were at all undertaken. It was clearly understood that it was not the appointing of a Senate committee, it was purely a voluntary matter, to notify the Senators to be present. The Senators named were simply requested to see that the arrangements were made for such Senators as desired to be present.

I am sure the Senator from Arkansas did not contemplate or intend any discourtesy to Senators. On the other hand, he expressly requested that Senators on both sides of the aisle be invited to be present, and asked that they be asked to cooperate. That is as clear as I can make it.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. By whom were they to be invited, may I ask? If this is purely a private matter, and a private committee, what I want to know is why it is referred to in the Senate at all. Has the Senate appointed anybody?

Mr. CONNALLY. No.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senate has nothing to do with it, and as I understand, the Senator from Texas is merely making an announcement of what has been done by individuals.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true.

Mr. LOGAN. Inasmuch as there was no action of the Senate, I do not see any occasion for referring to it in the Senate. Anybody who desires can get up a committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator from Kentucky that, instead of sending engraved invitations to each Member of the Senate, I thought it not inappropriate simply to make an announcement of the fact. If that has offended anyone, or if anybody has had his feelings disturbed or ruffled, I am very sorry about it.

Mr. LONG. A point of order.

Mr. LOGAN. I am not offended. I simply did not see why it should be referred to in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana will state his point of order.

Mr. LONG. Where does all this "hurrally" come in on account of the President coming back to the city? What have we to do with it? Let him go and come when he gets ready.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I ask for a moment of order while I make an announcement.

Unhappily, this matter has been confused for lack of a complete understanding. I think it is quite evident that some of us can speak knowingly, that the object of the Senator from Arkansas was that in the event of some of the Democratic Senators wishing to go to the station to welcome the President, there should be no uncertainty, each thinking the other might go, and he designated certain Senators on the theory that they possibly would have time. He left to the leader of the opposition, the distinguished Senator from Oregon, to make such suggestion as he chose to his fellow Senators, to determine which ones would find it agreeable and convenient to joint those who had been designated by the leader on the Democratic side. There was nothing more than a suggestion along that line. I assure the Senator from Idaho that it was only on the theory that both sides would find what Senators could find it possible to go to greet the President without inconveniencing themselves in their engagements. That was the only object the Senator had in making the suggestion.

LIMITATION OF COTTON ACREAGE

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, during the discussion of the bill for the compulsory reduction of cotton acreage, some of us raised the question whether it would be of any particular benefit to the American cotton grower, but we did not have much doubt that it would be beneficial to the foreign cotton grower.

There appeared in the New York Times of Sunday last an article with the date line of Buenos Aires, commenting upon this legislation as it will affect favorably the cotton growers of South America. The article is about a quarter of a column in length, and if there is no objection I should like to have it read at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the article will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

[From the New York Times of Sunday, Apr. 8, 1934]

ARGENTINA URGES BIG COTTON CROP—WANTS ACREAGE INCREASED IN EFFORT TO BUILD UP NEW TEXTILE INDUSTRY—INTERESTED IN OUR PLANS—FARMERS TOLD CURTAILMENT HERE MEANS BROADER MARKET FOR THEIR CROPS

By John W. White

BUENOS AIRES, March 30.—Argentina is watching with enthusiastic satisfaction the efforts made to reduce cotton acreage in the United States. News of every move in that direction is accompanied by editorials urging Argentine farmers to raise more cotton and assuring them that new markets are theirs for the asking.

Cotton is a new crop in Argentina and 96 percent of the production comes from the northern territory of the Gran Chaco, which is the southern portion of that vast Chaco area for which Bolivia and Paraguay are fighting north of the Pilcomayo River. Argentina is already producing nearly enough cotton to supply its textile mills, and it exported 28,000 tons of unginned cotton in 1932, most of it going to Great Britain and Germany.

TEXTILE INDUSTRY GROWING

The textile industry is rapidly becoming one of the most important manufacturing activities in Argentina. As part of the country's recovery plan, the Government is urging farmers to grow more cotton, at the same time urging the public to use more locally manufactured textiles. This is only one branch of importation which the national government is trying to curtail in its effort to preserve the trade balance needed to pay the services on the public debt.

But it is as a phase of awakening industrial consciousness that the newspapers are urging increased cotton production to feed more mills, to the end that Argentina may even export cotton textiles. They believe that this country can compete successfully in the sale of textiles to the Pacific coast republics. The following editorial from La Opinion, of Resistencia, capital of the Chaco territory, is typical:

"The recent abundant and opportune rains have been extremely beneficial for the cotton fields. Unless there are unforeseen difficulties these rains will produce an abundant crop. Certain plagues often cause widespread ruin for the producers, sometimes even destroying most of the crops. But unless these plagues appear this year, there is every reason to expect a fine crop. The outlook is very promising, especially as cotton is being sold at prices much higher than former years.

OUR CROP CUT A BENEFIT

"The optimism of growers is all the more well founded in view of the plan of the United States Government to reduce that country's cotton production by about 25 percent. This reduction will have a favorable effect on our country and must necessarily be of benefit to the cotton growers of our northern territories.

"This logical and desirable recompense for the efforts of the Chaco cotton growers is certain to be a stimulus for those planters who for several years have been working to improve the quality of their cotton. In view of the progress which the textile industry is making in our country, and also in view of the fact that there are markets on the Pacific coast which could be supplied with our cotton goods, our cotton production must be increased, by both extensive and intensive cultivation. Argentina has a magnificent future as a manufacturing country. Therefore it is necessary to increase the cultivation of our textiles on a much vaster scale."

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the reason why I desired to have this dispatch from Buenos Aires read is that it bears upon our discussion as to who would benefit from legislation that would, in a compulsory manner, reduce the American production of cotton. I was concerned—though not because of any particular interest in cotton, except as an American product—as to how the reduction of our product, in view of the fact that so much of it is exported, would benefit the American grower. I could understand how anything that would stimulate the production of cotton in other countries would tend to supply the markets of the other countries, and to that degree take away those markets from us; and for that reason I had feared that the legislation would be beneficial to the foreign grower, while it seemed to me it might operate in exactly the opposite way as to the American grower.

This article appears to me to evidence the judgment of the foreign growers of cotton that our legislation is greatly for their benefit rather than of our own producers.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 163. An act for the relief of Capt. Guy M. Kinman; and

S. 3209. An act limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in the case of United States of America against Weirton Steel Co. and other cases.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 2416. An act for the relief of Mrs. George Logan and her minor children, Lewis and Barbara Logan;

H.R. 2541. An act for the relief of Robert B. James;

H.R. 2561. An act for the relief of G. Elias & Bro., Inc.;

H.R. 2682. An act for the relief of Bonnie S. Baker;

H.R. 2689. An act for the relief of Edward Shabel, son of Joseph Shabel;

H.R. 2692. An act for the relief of Lula A. Densmore;

H.R. 2748. An act for the relief of A. C. Francis;

H.R. 2749. An act for the relief of E. B. Rose;

H.R. 2750. An act for the relief of Scott C. White;

H.R. 3161. An act for the relief of Henry Harrison Griffith;

H.R. 3300. An act for the relief of George B. Beaver;

H.R. 3302. An act for the relief of John Merrill;

H.R. 3345. An act to authorize the Department of Agriculture to issue a duplicate check in favor of the Mississippi State treasurer, the original check having been lost;

H.R. 3551. An act for the relief of T. J. Morrison;

H.R. 3579. An act for the relief of O. S. Cordon;

H.R. 3580. An act for the relief of Paul Bulfinch;

H.R. 3611. An act for the relief of Frances E. Eller;

H.R. 3614. An act for the relief of Clara C. Talmadge;

H.R. 3636. An act for the relief of Thelma Lucy Rounds;

H.R. 3705. An act for the relief of Julia E. Smith;

H.R. 3748. An act for the relief of Mary Orinski;

H.R. 3749. An act for the relief of Hunter B. Glasscock;

H.R. 3868. An act for the relief of Arabella E. Bodkin;

H.R. 3900. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay certain subcontractors for material and labor furnished in the construction of the post office at Las Vegas, Nev.;

H.R. 6871. An act for the relief of Austin L. Tierney;

H.R. 7437. An act for the relief of E. C. West; and

H.J.Res. 315. Joint resolution granting consent of Congress to an agreement or compact entered into by the State of New York with the Dominion of Canada for the establishment of the Buffalo and Fort Erie Public Bridge Authority, with power to take over, maintain, and operate the present highway bridge over the Niagara River between the city of Buffalo, N.Y., and the village of Fort Erie, Canada.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H.Con.Res. 35) requesting the President to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H.R. 3521), for the purpose of correcting an error in said bill, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

DR. WILLIAM A. WIRT

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD certain telegrams from Gary, Ind., relative to the reputation of Dr. William A. Wirt, with reference to whether or not Dr. Wirt was ever confined in jail. The communications are from the Commercial Club, from a Catholic rector, from an editor, and from other distinguished citizens.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"Any charge that Dr. William A. Wirt was in jail in Gary for un-American acts or utterances during the World War period is utterly unfounded. I was mayor of Gary in 1917 and am the present mayor. No man stands higher in the esteem of the people of Indiana than Dr. Wirt." (Signed by R. O. Johnson.)

"I have been a resident and banker in Gary for 19 years, actively identified with the Democratic Party. Was a member of a conscription board during the war. Have known Dr. Wirt since I came here. He was neither imprisoned nor interned during the war or at any time during my residence in Gary. He is a true American." (Signed by Harry L. Arnold.)

"I have known William A. Wirt for 24 years and can say there is no more patriotic American than he. He was not under arrest during the war nor was his name ever brought under suspicion. On the contrary, he served his country as fearlessly during the war as he does in times of peace. I have complete confidence in Mr. Wirt's patriotism and sincerity, and I believe I have been so placed as to be a competent judge of both." (Signed by H. B. Snyder, editor of Post Tribune.)

"I have been Dr. Wirt's personal attorney for 27 years. Was mayor of Gary during the World War. Dr. Wirt was neither imprisoned nor interned in the Gary jail during the war for pro-Germanism nor any other cause. His Americanism has never been questioned by anyone here. He is regarded as an outstanding educational and intellectual leader throughout Indiana and the Nation as well as in our community." (Signed by William F. Hodges.)

"I have been a resident and Catholic parish leader of Gary for 27 years, intimately identified with social, civic, and religious activities of this community. Never heard of Dr. William A. Wirt's being imprisoned or interned for any cause during the war period or any other time." (Signed by Rev. Father Thomas Jansen.)

"The charge made on the floor of the House yesterday that Dr. Wirt because of pro-German tendencies during the war was interned, or even under suspicion, is entirely unfounded and unjust. As a Gary member of the Lake County Council of National Defense during the war I have full knowledge of any charge made during those trying days against any resident of the county, and more especially of Gary, of suspected disloyalty. Dr. Wirt took an active part in every patriotic endeavor during the war." (Signed by H. S. Norton, president of Gary Commercial Club and Chamber of Commerce.)

"I have known Dr. William A. Wirt intimately for 27 years. I was connected with many war activities during the war, and served with Dr. Wirt on the war-stamp drive, he being the chairman for our section. Dr. Wirt is an exceptionally conscientious, painstaking gentleman, and is held in very high regard by our citizens in all walks of life." (Signed by Harry Hall.)

REMOVAL OF TRADE RESTRICTIONS

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Removal of Trade Restrictions Best Way to Recover Prosperity", by Hon. John W. Hester, of Durham, N.C., which article was published in the Washington Evening Star of several days ago.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Evening Star]

REMOVAL OF TRADE RESTRICTIONS BEST WAY TO RECOVER PROSPERITY

The action of the House in voting to give the President the power to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements is, according to my way of thinking, one of the most encouraging pieces of legislation that has come from either branch of the Congress during this administration. I hope it makes the grade in the Senate.

Now, I am quite familiar with the stock argument as to the delegation of legislative power to the Executive. And, frankly, it is a delegation of the legislative function to the Executive. However, the history of the exercise of that function on the part of the Congress has been such as to convince the average man that it is useless to expect any sensible legislation on the subject from the Congress. It is known of all that tariff legislation has long since been reduced to the low level of a mere horse-swapping performance, with the outcome depending upon the trading instinct plus the political power of the interest affected.

But there is much to be said now for the delegation of such power that could not be said heretofore. Since the United States saw fit to enact its present tariff law over the protests of practically all of the trading nations of the earth there has been developed a radical change in the machinery for handling tariff matters. There has been a general delegation of the power to make trade agreements to the executive departments in response to the new nationalistic idea that every nation has to go it alone. This change in the general tariff-making machinery on the part of other countries makes it imperative that like machinery be set up in this country, otherwise we are likely to see the trade areas of the earth pre-empted by the countries possessing the more facile and flexible machinery. Hence, it is now a matter of practical necessity that the President be given the trade treaty-making power.

However, I am not primarily interested in the mechanics of the situation. Quite to the contrary, I am more interested in giving nature a chance to overcome man's follies. Furthermore, I am tremendously interested in making it unnecessary for this Government to follow in the wake of the tottering and crumbling European democracies, which becomes the more unavoidable and inevitable in the degree and to the extent that the spiritual and physical forces of the American people are cramped and restricted. A free people and a controlled economy are contradictory in thought and mutually exclusive in fact. I am unwilling to surrender the former for the latter until I am convinced by actual trial that nature's economy is not superior to any man-made, artificial economy. I know that the American people can do hundreds of things more efficiently and more cheaply than any other people on earth. I want to major those activities and ease out of the inefficient and the comparatively more costly activities.

For instance, I can't see any sense in our going counter to nature in trying to produce sugar in this country. Nature gave Cuba and the Philippines the moisture, the soil, and atmosphere or climate in which to grow sugarcane. We had better buy the land involved here in the growth of beets and cane from which sugar is made, give it back to its present owners, their heirs, assigns, and successors in perpetuity and pension their progeny for all time. It would certainly be a saving in dollars and cents. And, on the other hand, the industrial life of America is shot through and through with similar inefficient and unduly costly activities. This acting the wet-nurse to the inefficient and abnormal—yes, unnatural—activities here and abroad is what has caused the dislocation of trade and commerce and the resultant fall of democracies and republics. Republics and democracies are the agencies of free peoples only, and a free people can't be regimented or strait-jacketed. Consequently, republics and democracies fall in direct ratio to the extent of the adoption of coercive and restrictive agricultural, industrial, and commercial measures.

And the theory that overproduction is the cause of our present troubles is inconsistent with the fact that 80 percent of the peoples throughout the earth are undernourished, poorly clad, and inadequately housed. On the contrary, production is not and has never been equal to human needs. We have foolishly obstructed the distribution of what we produce, which has resulted in an overflow at the various points of obstruction.

The United States, with its people regimented and subjected to a controlled economy, is but a giant animal forced to feed upon its own flanks, with the sure prospect that sooner or later a vital part of the body will be reached and death will ensue. You can't obtain Russian objectives without the application of Russian methods. You can't imprison the spirit of America or shackle her activities and at the same time preserve her institutions.

For the foregoing reasons I want to see adopted every device that tends to the removal of trade restrictions. America can make her way in competition with the rest of the world if she is permitted to major those activities in which she excels and be relieved of the load of carrying the inefficient and unnatural. Furthermore, I favor at the earliest opportunity the adjustment of our foreign debts by the payment thereof in goods, the only way in which any substantial foreign debt has ever been paid. We developed this country very largely upon foreign capital and we paid our foreign obligations in goods. At the beginning of the World War we were paying a debt service charge in the sum of $200,000,000, not in money, but in goods.

At the close of the war the tables had turned and a debt service charge was running in our favor in the sum of $500,000,000 annually. Did we change our trade policy accordingly? No; we tried to make a debtor-nation trade policy fit a creditor-nation position. This was as impossible as the eating of the cake and having it, too. We must permit the payment of these obligations owing us in goods or cancel the same. The sooner we do one or the other, the better for all concerned.

WAR AND PROFITS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR NYE

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] on April 10 on the subject of "War and Profits." The address was delivered over an eastern radio hook-up.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WAR PROFITS—THE PROFITS OF WAR AND PREPAREDNESS

A restless mind exists throughout the world today. One naturally is concerned about our Nation's preparedness for war. The cause of preparedness, however, has lent itself to abuses which amount to national scandal, and in time will cause nations to bow their heads in shame of the frightful things done in its name.

To provide an adequate national defense is a positive duty of government. But what constitutes an adequate defense? Is it preparation to defend ourselves against aggression? Or is it preparation to go to all quarters of the earth to carry on warfare? If the questions were left to the people, there is not serious doubt as to what the answers would be. If the people, unhampered by interests with selfish purposes, had their way, adequate defense would involve alone preparation for war at home. Then, with no nation preparing to leave its own borders to make war, there would quickly dawn a golden opportunity and invitation to further prune the expense of defensive preparation.

The sad facts are, though, that the people do not have their way upon matters involving ultimate war. Influences are constantly at work which disarm people of a feeling of security in what was once thought to be an adequate defense. These influences are by men who hold positions of great influence in our social and political order, men who have been highly successful in inducing others to accept as truth the baseless assertions of their false though profitable propaganda.

Americans left to their good sense and judgment will declare that never again will our country engage in war away from home. But never at any time is there let-up of that propaganda intended to convince us that other nations are more adequately prepared for war than are we. And the propaganda so effective with us is equally effective when used in other lands. The result is an increasing competition between nations in providing military strength; a competition so insane in its accomplishment that the world finds itself completely forgetting what really is adequate in the way of national defense; a competition which witnesses nations launched upon preparation programs on a scale never known to the world in peace times. Already the race is one which causes nations, including our own, to spend two and three times more money now than before the late World War. And here we are, only 15 years removed from that war, with its painful and expensive economic and physical consequences still upon us.

Under these circumstances it is fair to ask: Where does preparedness and national defense end? Viewing the insane trend of competition between nations it is equally fair to answer: It ends in war, war more terrible than any yet known; war, no one knows just where, when, or for what cause, but war nevertheless. And to whose profit and satisfaction, pray tell? Certainly not to that of the men and boys who will be called upon to carry on; not to that of their loved ones. Certainly not to the profit of the Nation, for now, while still bleeding from the last war, we see that war gives not profit but debt—burdensome, crushing debt.

Is our civilization helplessly insane and laboring under a complex utterly suicidal? Who profits, who gains any satisfaction from this mad race of so-called "preparedness"?

The answer is not difficult of finding for those who will face facts.

Many studies are being made, resulting in published articles on the subject of War and Profit. One of the most notable of these is to be found in the current number of Fortune Magazine. Here we find a most sordid tale of the scheming of European manufacturers to create a market for their instruments of war, of the perfect will of these manufacturers to supply the material to be used by enemy governments against their own, perhaps against the very factory workers whose labor created the munitions. These patriots have no prejudices. They perfect new death-dealing instruments and sell to whichever or however many governments will buy. There has been recorded the fact that French soldiers were mowed down by French-made guns in the hands of the enemy. German soldiers moving westward were killed by German-made guns sold to Belgium, while German-made machines sold to Russia visited death and destruction upon the men fighting for the Fatherland on the eastern front. Mounted in monumental fashion in a small English community is a great gun captured from the Germans in an engagement which cost the lives of many of the young men of that British community. On one side of the gun are engraved the names of the sons of Britain who gave up their lives in that engagement before the machine was captured; on the other side is engraved the name of the British munitions maker who sold the instrument to Germany. The story of the commercialism of war and preparation for it is ugly, gruesome. It does no credit to European munitions makers or to the countries which permitted these merchants to ply their trade.

But who are we to pity the poor souls with whom these European manufacturers play as with toys? Look at ourselves in America and the history of our own munitions makers, who supply Uncle Sam's needs in an adequate defense program and rush their supersalesmen off to foreign lands to ply their trade at peace conferences.

Last Friday was Army Day, and past the Capitol and down the city's parade avenue there marched and rode 5,000 of America's finest—America's defenders—strong, splendidly uniformed men, beautiful, well-matched steeds, shining steel helmets, rifles, and mounted guns. All this, with the proudly waving colors, is at once inspiring. Hats off to these well-trained men prepared at a moment's notice to rush to the defense of country and flag. Yet, even in that inspiring moment, I could not fully restrain myself and be blind to the fact that those glistening steel helmets, for example, were the profit-returning products of American manufacturers, a product intended to protect those fine heads under the helmets against the shrapnel and shells which the same manufacturers had sold to the military departments of other nations which might some day be our foe in war. What madness. What rotten commercialism. Name a more inhuman trade. Was ever a more insane racket conceived in depraved mind or tolerated by an enlightened people?

After the adequate defensive needs of the American Government have been provided for by the annual appropriations, it is said, off to South America go these manufacturers, breeding there suspicion and fear between countries while American statesmen strive to accomplish understanding and maintain peace. Incidentally, order books are carried along to record the orders for military needs which always grow out of suspicion and fear. China and Japan likewise seem to offer a fine market for our American merchants of death and destruction.

Just before the Civil War a leading financial figure conceived the idea of buying at auction thousands of rifles which the American Army was casting aside. The purchase was at a price of just over $3 per gun. The following year, when the Union forces desperately needed guns, this financier sold these same guns to the Government at $22 each, a 700 percent profit. When Fremont's soldiers tried to fire these guns, they shot off their own thumbs. But Morgan finally got his money, through court action, the court holding the contract was sacred. Is there profit for anyone in war?

But look out for Japan! we are cautioned.

If we should, by some unbelievable chance, find ourselves at war with Japan, it is safe to wager that our soldiers and sailors will find their enemy armed with and mowed down by instruments produced by American manufacturers—at a profit, of course.

In the name of adequate defense our American costs of maintaining the Army and Navy are now more than $700,000,000 annually, compared with $343,000,000 just before we entered the World War, the war that was going to end war. From 1913 to 1930 Great Britain's cost of national defense increased 42 percent; France, 30 percent; Italy, 44 percent; Japan, 142 percent; Russia, 30 percent; while your Uncle Sam rushed to a 200 percent increase in his defense costs.

When will we cease this mad game? But, let us remember that the surest way to maintain peace is to prepare for war, we are urged.

I deny that there is any foundation in fact or historical experience for the claim that preparation for war maintains peace. The claim is a myth, sponsored and nursed by those whose unclean profits would vanish if ever they permitted the world to know that preparation for war is marvelously profitable for a few.

Between the United States and Canada there stretches a boundary of thousands of miles. During the lifetime of these two neighbors there has never been stationed a soldier, a mounted gun, or any evidence of military defense. It is encouraging to know that today fine minds in both countries are conceiving the establishment of a monument to commemorate these years of peace without demonstration of armed strength.

This monument is to take most unusual form. On each side of the boundary, in the Turtle Mountains of my State of North Dakota and Canada, hundreds of acres are being set aside to be developed and made known as the "International Peace Garden." These acres will be landscaped and made a beautiful spot in commemoration of the peaceful relationship that has existed through all of these years without that common demonstration of adequate defense.

Oh, that there could be more such monuments.

There is a book about to come from the press which would save our Nation billions and our people much suffering if it could be read by every American. It is the story of profits and methods of munition makers, written by Engelbrecht and Kanighen, published by Dodd, Mead & Co., and chosen by the Book of the Month Club for May. And what a title this work has. Merchants of Death is its name. It is packed full of worth-while facts about our munition makers. To this book I must credit some of the information I have offered tonight, and to it I am indebted for a reminder of that advertisement once published by an American munitions manufacturer. This manufacturer had developed a death-dealing instrument which it was anxious to sell, and it advertised its accomplishment to the world as follows:

"The material is high in tensile strength and very special. The timing of the fuze of this shell is similar to the shrapnel shell, but it differs in that two explosive acids are used to explode the shell in the large cavity. The combination of these two acids causes a terrific explosion, having more power than anything of its kind yet used. Fragments become coated with the acids in exploding and wounds caused by them mean death in terrible agony within 4 hours, if not attended to immediately.

"From what we are able to learn of conditions in the trenches, it is not possible to get medical assistance to anyone in time to prevent fatal results."

This is not a pleasant story with which to close my remarks. There ought to be something a little more cheering, and I think that cheer is to be found in the prospect, which is large, that within the next few days the Senate will pass the resolution which has been offered by Senator VANDENBERG and myself, calling for a sweeping investigation of the activities and methods resorted to by our munitions makers to fatten thin bank accounts in the name of preparedness.

I am sure that such an investigation will develop facts which will let people know how they are made monkeys of by profit-hungry, soulless madmen, who are making lunatics of the people of the world by their incessant propaganda for ever-larger appropriations in the name of an adequate defense. Truth always produces worth-while results. Truth concerning the methods and programs of our munitions makers might fetch an awakening which would demand the removal of the element of profit from national defense and war. I am sure such action will not necessitate additional relief camps to accommodate those gentlemen, who profit most largely when millions of men are giving their lives to the cause of flag and country. And it most assuredly will reduce the danger of more war and the terrific burdens of expense now required in the name of adequate defense.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] in the nature of a substitute for the amendment reported by the committee on page 196, beginning in line 13.

The amendment of Mr. LA FOLLETTE is as follows:

On page 196, after line 12, to strike out:

"SEC. 405. Estate tax rates: (a) The last 14 paragraphs of section 401 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1932 are amended to read as follows:

"'$126,000 upon net estate of $1,000,000; and upon net estates in excess of $1,000,000 and not in excess of $1,500,000, 20 percent in addition of such excess.

"(d) The amendments made by this section shall be effective only with respect to transfers of estates of decedents dying after the date of the enactment of this act."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the pending amendment proposes to raise the rates prevailing under the existing law and those proposed in the bill as reported from the committee insofar as taxation of estates is concerned. At the time the amendment which I offered relating to increasing income taxes was under consideration I debated at some length the whole question of graduated taxation and the need of increasing the revenues to meet the extraordinary expenditures made necessary by the economic crisis.

Whatever may be said concerning the repressive effects upon business of high income-tax rates, no such argument can be advanced effectively when we come to deal with the question of the rates of taxation upon estates when they pass at the time of death. In my view, graduated taxation upon estates or inheritance is the most justified form of taxation which can be levied. I recognize that Senators may differ as to the relative merits of an estate tax as distinguished from an inheritance tax. With some of the arguments advanced in support of the inheritance tax I am in complete sympathy. Nevertheless it has become the established policy of the Government to levy the tax against the estate. It is obvious that at this time and in this situation it is impossible to consider a change in policy in that regard.

I think practically everyone is in complete agreement that it is necessary to increase the yield from taxes in order to meet the expenditures made necessary in order to relieve distress and to provide some employment. It is my view that it will be necessary not only to continue these expenditures over a considerable period of time but I am likewise of the opinion that the Government will find it necessary to increase rather than to diminish these expenditures.

But whether or not the view which I hold proves to be correct, it is clear to all that insofar as paying for the expenditures which have already been made the economic crisis is not over, and it will be necessary over a long period of time for the Government to raise revenue to meet the obligations which have been incurred in order that those expenditures might be made.

With a concentration of wealth such as has taken place in this country, and confronted with a situation where it is necessary for us to increase our revenues, the justice and the equity of levying increased taxes upon estates are beyond argument.

Let me say just a few words concerning the provisions of the particular amendment. It reduces the exemption upon estates from $50,000, as provided in existing law, to $40,000. By a series of brackets the rates are increased under the amendment until upon an estate in excess of $10,000,000, 60 percent would be levied upon such excess. Senators should not fall into the error of assuming that the amendment provides a rate of 60 percent upon estates in excess of $10,000,000. Under the amendment the composite rate upon estates of $10,000,000 will be approximately 44 percent. Until an estate reaches $100,000,000, 60 percent will not be collected.

I desire to refer briefly to the rates, comparing those in the existing law with those proposed to be levied under the pending amendment. Upon net estates before exemption of $50,000 the existing law does not levy any tax. Under my amendment, and assuming the estate of a married person, all of which passes to the widow, an estate of $50,000 would pay a tax of $100. Under the rates in Great Britain such an estate would pay $2,500.

Upon an estate of $100,000 under the existing law such an estate would pay $1,500 of tax. Under my amendment it would be required to pay $1,600, and under the British rate $9,000.

An estate of $500,000 under the existing law would pay $42,500. Under my amendment such an estate would pay $60,200, and under the British rate $105,000.

An estate of $1,000,000 under the existing law would pay $117,500; under my amendment $170,800, and under the British rate $270,000.

An estate of $5,000,000 under the existing law would pay $1,149,500; under the amendment $1,696,600, and under the British rate $2,050,000.

An estate of $10,000,000 under existing law would pay $3,094,500; under the amendment $4,392,600, and under the British rate $5,100,000.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I am sure the able and industrious Senator from Wisconsin recognizes that Great Britain, of course, is a single land not divided into separate States such as ours. I ask the Senator what would be the effect upon those States which have an income tax law if the Federal estate taxes are increased as he proposes? Will the amendment of the Senator operate in effect to exhaust the estate insofar as it could be taxed by the State?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I do not think so, I will say to the Senator from Illinois, because, as the Senator knows, in those States which have estate or inheritance taxes the rates of necessity have been very low for the reason that excessive rates would tend to induce individuals to move from a State which levied an excessively high inheritance-tax rate into a State which did not levy any tax or which levied lower rates. If the Senator is familiar with the situation which existed at the time the State of Florida adopted a constitutional amendment prohibiting the levying of inheritance or estate taxes, he will know that many individuals with large estates established residences in Florida in order to avoid the estate tax or the inheritance tax in their States. We had a very spectacular case of that kind in Wisconsin within recent years, the Beggs case.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. DUFFY. I recall the Senator's attention also to section 802 of the Revenue Act of 1932, which gives an 80-percent credit against the Federal tax for inheritance taxes paid in the State. I intend later to offer an amendment so that the same thing can be done, at a very much lower rate, as to income taxes; so the 80-percent provision would in a large measure offset that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is correct so far as the regular estate-tax rates are concerned; but this amendment applies to the additional rates which were imposed in the act of 1932.

Mr. President, under all the circumstances with which we are confronted, I think Senators will recognize that the rates I have proposed in the pending amendment are not severe. They are not excessive. They are very much lower than those imposed in other countries employing the estate or inheritance taxes as a means of raising revenue.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] mentioned the fact that Great Britain is one governmental entity, and that there are not in that country other divisions or other entities of government levying taxes. Nevertheless, so far as the problem of raising revenue for the Federal Government is concerned, we must apply, it seems to me, the justice and the equity of the graduated system of taxation in order to collect the revenues which are essential.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator's amendment, as I understand, now provides for a tax on net estates of $40,000 instead of $20,000.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The original amendment provided for a tax upon a net estate of $25,000; but after consultation with the chairman of the committee and other members of the committee I raised the exemption so that it would apply upon net estates of $40,000 and upward.

Mr. GEORGE. One further question: The Senator's amendment does not interfere with any credit for like tax paid to the State?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I want the Senator to get the amendment clearly in mind. This amendment is directed to the additional rates upon estates which were levied in the 1932 act, to which the credits do not apply. The Senator will remember that we had rates in the law before the 1932 act to which an 80-percent credit applied. Then in the 1932 act we levied additional rates to which the 80-percent credit does not apply.

Mr. GEORGE. And this is an additional levy to which it does not apply?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Under the unanimous-consent agreement we are to vote in about 2 minutes. I understand that the Senator from Wisconsin has modified his amendment as he has suggested, so as to provide for an exemption of $40,000 instead of $25,000, as the amendment was originally drawn?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator's statement is correct.

Mr. HARRISON. I may say to the Senator that I shall offier no objection to the adoption of the amendment, and shall vote for it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I very much appreciate the support and attitude of the chairman of the committee and other members who have given this matter further consideration.

Mr. HARRISON. May I say to the Senator, if he will yield for a moment——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I have directed the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation to make a study of the question of changing the estate tax to the inheritance tax.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am very glad the Senator has directed the study to be made, and I think the results of it will be well worth the consideration of the Congress.

Mr. President, just a word as to how much this amendment is estimated to yield. The Treasury Department estimated that the original amendment would yield $100,000,000 annually more than is now being derived from estate taxes the first full year that the rates were in effect. I have not resubmitted this amendment to the Treasury Department for an estimate; but after consultation with experts who are here upon the floor I think I am very conservative in stating that upon the basis of the Treasury Department estimates, this amendment as now drawn should yield $90,000,000 annually in addition to the amount now being collected from estate taxes the first full year that the rates are in effect, if they shall prevail.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at the end of my remarks the table of comparative rates to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Comparison of death taxes—estate of married person—all passing to widow

[1] Same as 1932 rates.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to the committee amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE and Mr. HARRISON called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am not advised as to how he would vote. Therefore, I shall have to withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. WAGNER (when his name was called). On this question I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], and announce the existence of a general pair between them.

I also desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. DIETERICH], were he present and voting, would vote "yea."

I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT]; and

The Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] with the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE].

I desire further to announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON] are necessarily absent. Their pairs have already been announced. I am authorized to say that, if present, both those Senators would vote "nay" on this question.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] is detained on committee work.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to announce that if the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH. My colleague [Mr. COOLIDGE] is detained from the Senate on official business. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. HATFIELD (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I do not know how he would vote on this question. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], and will allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 65, nays 14, as follows:

YEAS—65

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment to the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK subsequently said: Mr. President, when the vote on the La Follette amendment was had I was detained in committee. Since no announcement was made as to how I would have voted if present, I desire to say that had I been present I would have voted for the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH obtained the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in view of the increase in the rates upon estates, and in conformity with the differential provided in the existing law between the estate-tax rates and the gift-tax rates, it now becomes necessary to modify the gift-tax rates and to increase them so as to make them commensurate with the rates upon estates.

To refresh the memories of the Senators, the gift-tax rates under existing law are three fourths of the rates of taxes upon estates, and the amendment which I now send to the desk will increase existing rates on gifts to three fourths of the rates which have just been adopted upon estates.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield for the purpose of the Senator from Wisconsin presenting his amendment?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to make a brief statement concerning this amendment. The amendment is drawn to go into effect upon gifts after the 1st of January 1935. This provision is incorporated in the amendment in order to obviate the very difficult and technical problem of drafting an amendment which would take effect upon the signing of the bill insofar as the rates upon gifts are concerned.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield for one moment?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, it is always the policy, as stated by the Senator from Wisconsin, that, according to the estate-tax rates, there should be some differential between the gift tax and the estate tax, and it would seem to me, in view of the action of the Senate in increasing the estate tax, that the rates incorporated in the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin should be adopted.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. Will the Senator state what the difficulties are in putting the gift tax into effect at the same time?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish the Senator from Michigan would confer with Mr. Beaman about that. I went over the whole matter with him and with other experts from the Treasury, and the difficulty, as I understand, is due to the fact that we have the regular rates, the additional rates, and compute them on a calendar-year basis. It would be very difficult to apply the increase to the gift-tax rates at once.

Mr. COUZENS. Does not the estate tax take effect immediately upon the signing of the bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The estate-tax rates will take effect, but the gift tax presents a very much more difficult problem. After consulting with the legislative counsel and the experts from the Treasury I became convinced that the technical problem of drafting the amendment was more difficult than any advantage which would accrue from attempting to make the gift tax apply at once.

Mr. COUZENS. Of course, that leaves a loophole for the disposition of a great deal of wealth between now and the effective date of the estate tax.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. True; but, of course, we will get the revenue under the existing rates if that takes place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 212, following the amendment by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] and the amendment by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], heretofore agreed to, after line 15, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 519. Gift tax rates: (a) The gift-tax schedule set forth in section 502 of the Revenue Act of 1932 is amended to read as follows:

"Upon net gifts not in excess of $20,000, three fourths of 1 percent.

"$150 upon net gifts of $20,000; and upon net gifts in excess of $20,000 and not in excess of $30,000, 1½ percent in addition of such excess.

"$300 upon net gifts of $30,000; and upon net gifts in excess of $30,000 and not in excess of $40,000, 2¼ percent in addition of such excess.

"$525 upon net gifts of $40,000; and upon net gifts in excess of $40,000 and not in excess of $50,000, 3 percent in addition of such excess.

"$825 upon net gifts of $50,000; and upon net gifts in excess of $50,000 and not in excess of $60,000, 3¾ percent in addition of such excess.

"$1,200 upon net gifts of $60,000; and upon net gifts in excess of $60,000 and not in excess of $80,000, 5¼ percent in addition of such excess.

"$2,250 upon net gifts of $80,000; and upon net gifts in excess of $80,000 and not in excess of $100,000, 6¾ percent in addition of such excess.

"$3,600 upon net gifts of $100,000; and upon net gifts in excess of $100,000 and not in excess of $200,000, 9 percent in addition of such excess.

"$12,600 upon net gifts of $200,000; and upon net gifts in excess of $200,000 and not in excess of $400,000, 12 percent in addition of such excess.

"$36,600 upon net gifts of $400,000; and upon net gifts in excess of $400,000 and not in excess of $600,000, 14¼ percent in addition of such excess.

"$65,100 upon net gifts of $600,000; and upon net gifts in excess of $600,000 and not in excess of $800,000, 16½ percent in addition of such excess.

"$98,100 upon net gifts of $800,000; and upon net gifts in excess of $800,000 and not in excess of $1,000,000, 18¾ percent in addition of such excess.

"$135,600 upon net gifts of $1,000,000; and upon net gifts in excess of $1,000,000 and not in excess of $1,500,000, 21 percent in addition of such excess.

"$240,600 upon net gifts of $1,500,000; and upon net gifts in excess of $1,500,000 and not in excess of $2,000,000, 23¼ percent in addition of such excess.

"$356,850 upon net gifts of $2,000,000; and upon net gifts in excess of $2,000,000 and not in excess of $2,500,000, 25½ percent in addition of such excess.

"$484,350 upon net gifts of $2,500,000; and upon net gifts in excess of $2,500,000 and not in excess of $3,000,000, 27¾ percent in addition of such excess.

"$623,100 upon net gifts of $3,000,000; and upon net gifts in excess of $3,000,000 and not in excess of $3,500,000, 30 percent in addition of such excess.

"$773,100 upon net gifts of $3,500,000; and upon net gifts in excess of $3,500,000 and not in excess of $4,000,000, 32¼ percent in addition of such excess.

"$934,350 upon net gifts of $4,000,000; and upon net gifts in excess of $4,000,000 and not in excess of $4,500,000, 34½ percent in addition of such excess.

"$1,106,850 upon net gifts of $4,500,000; and upon net gifts in excess of $4,500,000 and not in excess of $5,000,000, 36 percent in addition of such excess.

"$1,286,850 upon net gifts of $5,000,000; and upon net gifts in excess of $5,000,000 and not in excess of $6,000,000, 37½ percent in addition of such excess.

"$1,661,850 upon net gifts of $6,000,000; and upon net gifts in excess of $6,000,000 and not in excess of $7,000,000, 39 percent in addition of such excess.

"$2,051,850 upon net gifts of $7,000,000; and upon net gifts in excess of $7,000,000 and not in excess of $8,000,000, 40½ percent in addition of such excess.

"$2,456,850 upon net gifts of $8,000,000; and upon net gifts in excess of $8,000,000 and not in excess of $9,000,000, 42 percent in addition of such excess.

"$2,876,850 upon net gifts of $9,000,000; and upon net gifts in excess of $9,000,000 and not in excess of $10,000,000, 43½ percent in addition of such excess.

"$3,311,850 upon net gifts of $10,000,000; and upon net gifts in excess of $10,000,000, 45 percent in addition of such excess."

(b) Section 505 (a) (1) of the Revenue Act of 1932 (relating to the specific exemption for gift-tax purposes) is amended by striking out "$50,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$40,000."

(c) The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) of this section shall be applied in computing the tax for the calendar year 1935 and each calendar year thereafter (but not the tax for the calendar year 1934 or a previous calendar year), and such amendments shall be applied in all computations in respect of the calendar year 1934 and previous calendar years for the purpose of computing the tax for the calendar year 1935 or any calendar year thereafter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I move to strike out section 141, beginning on page 110 of the bill. That is the section which provides for consolidated returns. If the motion should prevail, all corporations would make their separate and individual reports.

I wish I might have the serious consideration of the Senate with respect to this motion. I am sure the consolidated-returns provision results in very great advantage in the matter of taxes to the holding companies throughout the United States. I have talked with practically all the experts as to the advantage which the consolidated returns gives to large corporations and I am informed that it is an advantage in the matter of taxes which, under the provisions of this bill would amount to some $300,000,000 a year.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that above all things tax laws should be fair, they should be just to all alike, and that the consolidated returns giving the advantage to these large holding companies is a great disadvantage to all independent corporations paying taxes. It puts the small corporations—the independents—under a handicap which, when added to the disadvantage which the small corporations have in other respects, makes it impossible for small corporations to continue in business. The result is that day by day and year by year the small independent corporations are compelled to accept merger—another word for extinction. Why should the Government, through its tax laws, favor the large corporations?

I called attention yesterday evening to a matter which I want to call to the attention of the Senate again. It is an illustration of how consolidated returns work to advantage of large holding companies. I am reading from the House debates under the date of April 9, and the speaker, Mr. McFarlane is speaking alone, in this particular instance, of the holding companies of aviation corporations. He says:

> We find that the Bendix Aviation Corporation has saved, through the filing of consolidated returns, and in the change of income-tax laws which have been changed since the law of 1918, the sum of $625,863.49 in money they would have been required to pay to the Government had the law not been changed and had they been required to file separate returns rather than consolidated returns.
> The Curtiss-Wright Corporation saved $101,709.31 in the same way. The North American, or the General Motors Corporation, has saved $150,980.75. United Aircraft & Transport Corporation has saved $854,959.29. The Aviation Corporation of America has saved $313,454.44.

All told these five or six corporations had an advantage under the tax laws by reason of filing their consolidated returns of $2,046,967.28.

Taking, as an illustration, the small number of corporations just mentioned, we can well understand the tremendous advantage which the consolidated-returns provision gives to the large corporations of the country. It gives not only an advantage in the matter of taxes, but it gives a very decided advantage in the business world.

I call attention, Mr. President, to the kind of conditions which we are proposing to favor by this act. I am reading from a volume entitled "Power and the Public." In this volume, on page 16, it is said:

> Here is the Central Gas & Electric Co. of Delaware. That is a holding company, and either directly or indirectly holds and operates 57 companies in furnishing power and light to about 350 or 400 communities. Because it is a large concern and controls 57 operating companies, it has large credit, can employ the best engineering brains, and can operate these companies more intelligently and more efficiently for the community and for the investor than these separate 57 operating companies could do by themselves.

Under those conditions, why should the Government add to the advantage of the holding companies by lessening the amount of taxes which they pay? Again, it says:

> But now, to whom does the Central Gas & Electric Co. belong? To another holding company, the Central Public Service Co. And to whom does that belong? To the Central Public Service Corporation. That owns and controls the stock in the Central Public Service Co. And to whom does this Central Public Service Corporation belong? It belongs to the Public Utility Holding Co., which I believe does not hold all the stock in this company but enough to exercise a controlling influence in its affairs. And to whom does the Public Utility Holding Co. belong? It belongs to a concern which it is very difficult to define, a kind of hybrid holding-financing-trading-investment trust company, the American Founders.

> The United Founders owns three other investment trusts, which in turn are holding companies also—the American Founders Corporation, the American General Corporation, and the Investment Trust Associates. There are a great many others, but it controls these outright, owning from 70 to 90 percent of the stock. These holding companies in turn own another holding company, called United States Electric Power Corporation, or they have a large interest in it, which I will explain later. This United States Electric Power Corporation owns the Standard Power & Light Co., and that, in turn, controls the Standard Gas & Light Corporation. There are five layers of holding corporations. Then come the operating companies, of which I think there are 17 subsidiaries. I think one of them is an engineering company, which supplies management. There may be another company or two of that kind, but most of them are operating utility companies.

In another provision of this bill there is an express provision that the holding company may exempt from its income-tax return dividends received upon stock held in other companies, and thus in an intertwining, as it were, of these two provisions, the holding companies, the large companies, have a distinct advantage over the independent corporations in the matter of tax burdens.

I asked the tax experts to give me a statement upon this matter a few days ago, and I read the concluding paragraph of that statement. It is found upon page 6305 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 10. The figures are now in the RECORD, and the experts, commenting on these figures, say:

> The foregoing statistics disclose some very interesting phases of the operations of consolidated corporations. While approximately 6 percent of all the corporations of the country are in the consolidated group, more than one half of the business transacted by all the corporations of the country was done by consolidated corporations.

In other words, these consolidated corporations are doing more than one half the business as against the independent corporations in the United States.

> The percentage of profit made upon gross sales is also very interesting. It is to be noted that the percentage of gross profit made by consolidated corporations upon their gross sales is between 2 percent and 2½ percent in excess of the gross profit made by separate corporations. While Bureau statistics of income do not afford sufficient data to permit of a computation of the net profit from operations, it is a well-known fact that many industries realize a net income from operations of only 2 to 3 percent of their gross sales. It can thus be seen that the margin of advantage enjoyed by the consolidated group is sufficient to put its competitors (single corporations) out of business. The excess percentages of gross profit realized by the consolidated group is also reflected in a like result in their statutory net income.

Now, Mr. President, I ask upon what possible theory should we give the advantage to the consolidated group in the matter of taxes when the very fact that they are operating as they are gives them an advantage in the business world over the independent corporations? It is one thing which has added, in my judgment, very greatly to the rapid increase of holding companies and of consolidated companies and of the disappearance of smaller independent corporations.

There is no reason in justice, there is no reason in practice, why these corporations should not make their separate and individual returns, and when we provide that they shall do so, we shall have all corporations upon the same basis and we shall deal with each and all upon a fair principle.

I ask, Mr. President, that we may have a yea-and-nay vote upon this amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I hope the pending motion will not prevail. The committee has gone further than it has ever previously gone in the matter of consolidated returns. We now propose to put a tax of 13¾ percent upon all corporation profits, and then, if they file a consolidated return, we have raised the penalty in the present law, which was 1 percent, to 2 percent. In other words, under the bill as it is now written if a corporation files a consolidated return now, at its option, it has to pay 2 percent more than it would have to pay if it filed an ordinary corporation return, so that it would pay for a consolidated return 15¾ percent.

It has been thought by the committee that it is necessary in some cases that consolidated returns be filed. It was pointed out by the railroads, for instance, that it was necessary for them to file consolidated returns, and it must not be forgotten by the Senate that certain States have laws respecting the doing of business by corporations, which make it necessary that a corporation doing business in a State must organize under its laws. As an example, the Postal Telegraph Co., which has to institute eminent-domain proceedings in order to construct its lines, and so forth, I am informed, has to incorporate in practically every State; and so there are practically 48 different corporations under it, but it has one bookkeeping process. So there are certain cases where consolidated returns, it seems to me, are reasonable and just. Of course, it is overworked in some instances, and certain concerns file consolidated returns that perhaps could stand on their own footing; but if they do arrange to file a consolidated return, the Government gets 2 percent more of the profits which they make than it would from the ordinary profits the corporation might make.

So, Mr. President, in view of the action of the committee in increasing the penalty provision for consolidated returns from the present 1 percent to 2 percent, thereby compelling corporations filing consolidated returns to pay 15¾ percent, I think this motion should be defeated.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, there are undoubtedly some reasons for a consolidated return in cases such as have been referred to by the Senator from Mississippi, such as the Postal Telegraph Co. or other corporations that are engaged exclusively in one activity, but the viciousness of this section of the bill as it now stands is that it permits the filing of consolidated returns for other than allied industries, and thereby promotes an unfair competitive condition. Let me give as an example of the many cases which were discussed in the Finance Committee one of the large tire companies. It can open up a branch in California or in Michigan or elsewhere, and may lose money from the operation of such branch, but it may make a profit on a branch in Ohio. It wipes out its profit in Ohio by charging up the losses in Michigan or California, while independent manufacturers or merchants or whatever the organization may be in those localities cannot wipe out their profit by charging of losses in some other community. To that extent there is a very great disadvantage in the systems of consolidated returns to the competitive business situation.

I think if the amendment of the Senator from Idaho were agreed to, we could in conference draft a provision which would exempt those corporations which are engaged in a noncompetitive business and which are required by the statutes of the several States to take out separate articles of incorporation. For that reason, and because of the showing made by the Senator from Idaho, I think the amendment ought to be agreed to. Let us go to conference with it, and see if we can draft a provision which will not penalize those corporations that are required to take out separate articles of incorporation in various jurisdictions, such as the Postal Telegraph Co. or other corporations that are not in a highly competitive business.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the holding company——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. LONG. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield for that purpose?

Mr. NORRIS. No, Mr. President; I do not care to do so.

Mr. LONG. The reason I desire to make the point is that we are discussing a very important question, and I dislike to see Senators come in here when the vote is about to be taken without knowing what we have been discussing.

Mr. NORRIS. There is a fairly large number of Senators present, and those who are not present are eating lunch, I presume.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield for the purpose suggested by the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not yield.

Mr. President, the holding company is a modern institution, comparatively speaking. If there is any use for its existence that use is very small indeed compared to the number of holding companies and the evils which they bring about not only in the way of taxation but in every other respect. If a State requires incorporation, under its laws, of a foreign corporation doing business within its borders, why cannot the corporation incorporate in that State as well as in some other State, or organize a new corporation? If it makes the money in that State, why should it not pay an income tax on the money it makes there, even though it loses money in another State, where it would not be compelled to pay any tax at all?

There may be some instances where a holding company is necessary. If there are, and if this amendment shall be agreed to, the conferees will be able to work out such a proposition. Ninety-five times out of a hundred the holding company is a parasite. It is organized for the express purpose of deceiving the public and for obtaining something for nothing. The books are full of such instances. I called attention sometime ago in some remarks on the floor of the Senate to some of the things that have happened and which could not happen except through the instrumentality of the holding company. If it prospers, the burden, in the end, falls upon the people who have to support these pyramided companies which are built up in the air and controlled in the end by men who own but a very small proportion of the stock. A few men, with a comparatively little investment, can control millions of dollars' worth of property and are doing it now. Sometimes they fall by their own weight.

I hold in my hand a copy of the magazine known as "Current History" for March 1934 containing an article written by Mr. Hester. I want to quote just a little from that article. It is interesting to read it all. He says, in one portion of the article:

> Recent experience, however, makes it difficult to remember the good side of holding companies.

That is true. The experience we have gone through as a people during the last 10 years has demonstrated it is difficult, as the author says, to remember the good side, although the author claims there are some good sides and there is a place for the holding company; but it has grown to be a mammoth evil in this country, and I think in a great many instances has been organized for the very purpose of escaping taxation.

> About 3 years ago Martin J. Insull debated with James S. Bonbright, professor of finance in Columbia University, in the Public Utilities Fortnightly, on the question of regulation for public-utility holding companies. Mr. Insull took the negative, Professor Bonbright the affirmative. But today Martin J. Insull and his brother Samuel are fugitives from justice and the unregulated Insull utility empire is in liquidation. Moreover, many of Chicago's financial institutions as well as thousands of investors—> have been ruined because public utility and investment companies were unregulated.

I believe the author could truthfully have said millions of investors—

We have under the law no proper regulation of holding companies where they transmit power, let us say, from one State to another; where they are in reality transacting an interstate business. If we go to the State authorities they will claim to be interstate in their operation. If we go before the Interstate Commerce Commission they will claim they are separate identities in the different States and should be regulated there.

The author tells in another place how we can put together a holding company with a little money:

> For instance, suppose we have an operating company or companies whose outstanding bonds, preferred and common stock, total $150,000,000, divided into three equal amounts. The common stock carries the voting rights, and hence the control. Some scheming bankers and their associates desire to gain control of these companies. All they have to do is to buy 51 percent of the common stock, or invest a little more than $25,000,000.

So far in this picture we have $25,000,000 controlling $150,000,000.

As they do not want to invest that much, they form a holding company and issue stock and bonds for the amount of the original investment in the form of $10,000,000 bonds, $10,000,000 preferred stock and $5,000,000 common stock. Of the last they retain 51 percent—or $2,500,000, which gives them control. But they desire to have even less in the enterprise, so that they form another holding company and again issue bonds and stock—$1,000,000 in bonds, $1,000,000 in preferred and $500,000 in common stock. Of the common they retain 51 percent, and thus by investing just over $250,000 control, by this method of pyramiding, properties valued at $150,000,000. Can it be said that such a maneuver benefits the properties or the public? To ask the question is to answer it.

That is, 51 percent of the $5,000,000 common stock—

Mr. President, in some remarks I made on holding companies on a previous occasion I said something that I want now to quote. At that time I spoke at some length. I read then from a work by Mr. Clay. At one point in his work Mr. Clay said:

At the hearings before the New York Revision Commission it was brought out that this company—

He was speaking of a holding company—had outstanding 3 classes of common stock, 5 series of preferred stock, 8 series of debentures convertible into stock, either at the holder's or the company's option, 6 series of debentures convertible into debentures at the holder's but not at the company's option, and one series of investment certificates convertible at the option of the holder for a term of years and at the option of the holder or the company thereafter.

This, as the object is, as a rule, enables a comparatively small number of men to evade taxation, to take from undercompanies the revenue that should inure in theory to them, but which in practice, as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] read, enables the holding group to claim that by having a vast amount under control they can employ better experts and do their work better. In practice it enables them to burden the companies in the lower part of their pyramid, bleed them and milk them, and line their pockets with unearned gold. Ninety-nine times out of a hundred that is the result.

This author said further:

The 250 match factories throughout the world are held at least in ostensible ownership by a corporation organized under the beneficent laws of Delaware and called the International Match Co. The money for this purpose is supplied mainly by investors who buy bonds and nonvoting stock. The actual ownership and control is in the hands of the concern that owns the class A stock. This stock is owned by the Swedish Match Co., and the Swedish Match Co. is controlled by the Kreuger & Toll Co., of Sweden. It gets a bit more complicated if you examine it more closely. Thus here we have in America several large match-making corporations. One is the Federal Match Co. Its stock is owned by a Swedish corporation called the Vulcan Match Co. That is in turn controlled by an American company, the International Match Co. Once again control crosses the sea to the Swedish Match Co., which is finally owned by Kreuger & Toll.

By the investment, I might add, of a very small amount of money practically controlling the match business of the world, putting smaller companies out of business, and which finally, as we all know, fell of its own weight.

I read here from an illustration which I once before called to the attention of the Senate—a case in which the holding company in the electric-light business showed what it could do. It was in the little town of Lewiston, Maine; and it is not an exceptional case. It does not come anywhere near many other illustrations of holding companies I have given in the remarks I have made, going very much further, controlling many more corporations than are involved in this illustration; but it shows what was happening at the time these remarks were made and, as a matter of fact, is happening all over the country now. It shows how a few holding companies pyramided, with a very small amount of capital, control millions and millions of dollars' worth of property; and the people who do business with them cannot even find out, unless they are experts, who owns the company that is supplying them, for instance, with electricity or gas, or perhaps water.

Up in Lewiston, Maine, the Lewiston-Auburn Electric Light Co. supplies current, or did then, to the inhabitants of Lewiston, Maine. Suppose you were a resident there and wanted to know who owned the company. This is what you would find if you employed an expert somewhere to do it for you:

The Lewiston-Auburn Electric Light Co. is owned by the Androscoggin Electric Co.

The Androscoggin Electric Co. is owned by the Androscoggin Corporation.

The Androscoggin Corporation is owned by the Central Maine Power Co.

The Central Maine Power Co. is owned by the New England Public Service Co.

The New England Public Service Co. is owned by the National Electric Power Co.

The National Electric Power Co. is owned by the Middle West Utilities Co.

And that, then, meant Samuel Insull.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Is it not fair to presume that, if we had a just taxing law, a law assessing a tax against all these corporations individually, a number of them would go out out of existence?

Mr. NORRIS. They would have to go out of existence. Some of them are organized for the purpose of evading taxation. There is not any use in putting all those corporations one on top of another to conceal the real situation. It is a method of deception by which the American people are deceived in all lines of business.

I think this amendment ought to prevail.

Mr. BONE obtained the floor.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. MURPHY. I was about to suggest the absence of a quorum in order that we might have a vote on the amendment of the Senator from Idaho, if we are ready to proceed with the vote.

Mr. BONE. If we are to have a quorum call and a roll call on this amendment, I will refrain from saying what I was about to say. I had thought perhaps we would not have a roll call on the amendment, and I desired to record myself as in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I think we shall be able to get a roll call. If not, we shall be here a good while.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], to strike out section 141 on page 110, relating to consolidated returns.

Mr. BORAH. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceed to call the roll.

Mr. VANDENBERG (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I regret to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

I desire to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

I also announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. DIETERICH], made necessary by litigation in his State.

Mr. WAGNER. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] and vote "nay."

Mr. STEPHENS. I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] and vote "nay."

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] has a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] has a general pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL].

The legislative clerk recapitulated the vote.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask that the vote be again recapitulated.

The vote was again recapitulated.

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—40

Adams	Couzens	Johnson	Norris
Ashurst	Cutting	La Follette	Nye
Black	Dickinson	Logan	O'Mahoney
Bone	Dill	Long	Overton
Borah	Duffy	McCarran	Pope

REDUCTION OF FEES IN NATURALIZATION PROCEEDINGS—RETURN OF AN ENROLLED BILL

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair) laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives (H.Con.Res. 35), which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President is requested to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H.R. 3521, 73d Cong. 2d sess.) entitled "An act to reduce certain fees in naturalization proceedings, and for other purposes", for the purpose of correcting an error in said bill.

Mr. COOLIDGE. I ask for the present consideration of the House concurrent resolution just read; and, if that request is granted, I shall move to agree to it.

Mr. MCCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator please explain what the concurrent resolution is?

Mr. COOLIDGE. The bill referred to in the concurrent resolution went to the White House; and the concurrent resolution that came to the Senate from the House of Representatives this morning does not state what the purpose of asking for its return is, except that there was some sort of an error in the bill. The bill is the one reducing naturalization fees which we passed here, and which passed the House; but I do not know what the error is.

Mr. MCCARRAN. Does the concurrent resolution pertain to the message we have just received from the House?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read again the message from the House.

The legislative clerk again read the concurrent resolution.

Mr. MCCARRAN. What is the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. COOLIDGE. To concur in the House concurrent resolution with the request to the President that the bill be returned from the White House for correction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution? The Chair hears none.

The concurrent resolution was considered and agreed to.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to offer one other amendment. I simply desire to finish up the matter we have in hand.

I move to strike out subsection (p) of section 23, on page 26. If the other matter goes to conference, this should go in connection with it.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator expect to speak on this amendment?

Mr. BORAH. No; I am not going to speak on it unless I have to.

Mr. HARRISON. I very much hope the amendment of the Senator from Idaho will not be agreed to, because the subject he now deals with is quite different from that which was dealt with in his previous amendment. The present amendment deals with dividends paid by one corporation to another. The subject is quite different in character from the one covered by the Senator's motion to strike out the provision covering consolidated returns.

Mr. BORAH. I ask for a vote on my amendment.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of the proposal of the Senator from Idaho. I voted on the consolidated-returns amendment with many misgivings. I think holding companies as a general proposition are a curse; but, as I always do, I have tried to follow the committee when they consider a bill and report it. Let us have an explanation of this amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the amendment proposes to strike out subsection (p) of section 23. These are the deductions which may be made from gross income. The subsection reads as follows:

(p) Dividends received by corporations: In the case of a corporation, the amount received as dividends from a domestic corporation which is subject to taxation under this title. The deduction allowed by this subsection shall not be allowed in respect of dividends received from a corporation organized under the China Trade Act, 1922, or from a corporation which under section 251 is taxable only on its gross income from sources within the United States by reason of its receiving a large percentage of its gross income from sources within a possession of the United States.

I am seeking to strike out that provision because it permits holding companies to deduct from their corporate returns the dividends received from stock held in other corporations. I think it is a part of the same subject matter with which we have been dealing.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I wish to be perfectly clear as to the intent of the motion of the Senator from Idaho. I have not had an opportunity to read the section. Are we to understand that if this section is stricken out, the dividend which is originally paid by one company will be taxed, and then if the dividend is received by the next company it will again be taxed, so that the net effect of the Senator's proposal will be to discourage holding companies?

Mr. BORAH. Exactly.

Mr. BLACK. It tends in that direction; and we can vote for it with that understanding?

Mr. BORAH. That is my understanding. That is the reason why I have offered the amendment.

Mr. BLACK. I think the Senator is correct in his position.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, Mr. President, if Senators desire to vote for the motion on the theory of striking out the provision and compelling these corporations to pay a tax on dividends, they can do it on the theory suggested by the Senator from Alabama, but that provision was in the law long before the provision concerning consolidated returns. I do not think the Senate desires to adopt a provision that if one corporation pays a dividend to another corporation, we shall tax that dividend, and that if it goes through 10 different channels, from one corporation to the other, every time it goes along it shall be taxed. That is what would be done in case the amendment of the Senator from Idaho should be adopted. I hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire to say just one or two words.

I am very heartily in favor of this amendment for the very reasons stated by the Senator from Idaho and because of the explanation given by the Senator from Mississippi. I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] that holding companies are not conducive to good business management in this Nation.

This is the first opportunity we have had to express approval or disapproval of the holding-company system. I cannot see that holding companies are anything other than parasites upon the business structure of the country. I do not believe they add anything to the economical operation of business. I do not believe they have any place, except to pyramid profits in a way that is not to the best interests of the business itself, and is not to the best interests of the public. For this reason I sincerely hope we shall depart from the old custom which has been in existence.

It is true, as stated by the Senator from Mississippi, that heretofore the dividends have been exempted from taxation as they went up step by step. I have made some investigation in order to determine how we could best control holding companies. It is an almost impossible task. I have been utterly amazed at the profits that have been slipped into the reservoir of holding companies, as disclosed in certain investigations which have been conducted by the Senate. Holding companies are used in the main not for the purpose of aiding the consumer, not for the purpose of aiding legitimate stockholders, not for the purpose of adding anything to a sound, ethical business structure in this Nation. On the contrary, they are, as a rule, used for the purpose of concealing profits.

From the study I have been able to make during the investigation which has been in progress here for some time with reference to aviation, I do not agree that there are any advantages in the use of holding companies which can begin to compensate for the disadvantages which such companies impose upon the business in which they engage.

I will give the Senate an example: A man testified before a committee of the Senate. We showed him a chart of the business enterprises where there were interlocking directorates. He admitted that he did not know the names of all those companies, although he was the moving factor in the organization of them all. He could not even state the names of the companies from which he had drawn salaries as an officer. When the questions were asked, he turned around and asked his lawyer or his associates in order to ascertain whether or not he drew salaries from those companies.

There is another company which has been under investigation, which has absorbed, by mergers, 80 different corporations into one parent holding company. Business cannot be aided by such methods. It gives into a very few hands the control of all those companies, and the sad part of it is that it gives the control into the hands of people who cannot possibly know anything about the operations of the business.

In the case I spoke of a few moments ago, I asked that gentleman if he had any interest in a certain company, and at first he said he had not. His attention was called to the fact, however, that he had, and that he was an officer of the company, and had drawn $7,500 salary as an officer of the company. Of course he could know nothing whatever about the actual business operations of the company.

As far as I can see, the time has come when the Congress must determine on its policy as to holding companies; and I had intended offering some such amendment as the one which has been offered by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it the Senator's opinion that this amendment is confined to holding companies?

Mr. BLACK. It is my opinion that it is confined to the dividends that pass from one company to another company.

Mr. HARRISON. For instance, a bank might have to take over some stock in a corporation. It would be forced, under the provisions of this amendment, to pay the tax in such event. The provision is not restricted to holding companies at all.

Mr. BORAH. If that be true, the amendment ought to go to conference for the purpose of enabling the conferees to draw a different provision.

Mr. HARRISON. That is the trouble about legislating on the floor in connection with a matter like this.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to admit that there might be some instances in which the dividends should not be taxed when they go to another company, but certainly this is the only opportunity we have had to vote on this question.

I may state that so far as I am concerned, the fact that a bank owns a corporation is no reason why the corporation should not be taxed again. The banks, through their holding companies, have obtained control of a large part of the business of the country, and a few banks in the eastern section of the country control and dictate the policies. I am perfectly willing to discourage their obtaining control of these large companies as they do. Some of the very instances I have in mind are those in which banks in New York, which can have no possible knowledge of the operations of a shipping company or the operations of an aviation company in certain parts of this country, get control of the company and determine its policies.

I have in the correspondence a letter from the president of one of these companies in which he calls attention to the fact that his board of directors is composed entirely of bankers and financiers, that they do not know anything whatever about the operations of the company, and he complains that he is deprived of having the benefit on his board of the services of men who actually know something about operating the business of aviation.

While it may be true, as stated by the Senator from Mississippi, that this provision would go farther than the conferees might think it should go, I certainly think it is a step in the right direction, and I shall vote for it.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I do not pretend to know anything about holding companies outside of banking institutions; but I do know that holding companies in banking institutions have wrecked more banks and created more distress and destitution than one could reasonably conceive.

In the Banking Act of 1933 we put such severe restrictions upon banking holding companies that we apprehend they will be driven out of business. We wanted to treat them fairly and to give them due notice that that was the purpose of the act, over a certain period of time. I was induced by unintentional misrepresentation on the floor of the Senate to compliment the management of one of these banking holding companies in the State of Michigan, but it turned out to be the rottenest one of the whole group and to have produced more disaster than any banking holding company which was ever organized in the United States.

If I could believe that the adoption of this proposed amendment would put an end, in a given period of time, to holding companies, giving them ample opportunity to readjust their business relations, I would not hestitate to vote for it, and, in the circumstances, I am going to vote for it anyway in order that it may go to conference and that the matter may there be discussed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I am sure the Senate does not want to do something that would be unwise and that might disastrously affect certain institutions. We have done almost everything that is humanly possible in order to safeguard the Government against holding companies accumulating large reserves. We have gone so far as to write a new provision in the bill against holding companies, so that if they accumulate in their reserves more than 20 percent they are to be taxed not merely 13¾ percent but 30 or 40 percent. There is another provision in the bill relative to such accumulations where the tax runs as high as 50 percent if they act intentionally to keep from distributing their earnings and paying their taxes. One of the objects of the bill is to safeguard and plug up these loopholes. But what is proposed to be done by this amendment? It is now proposed in the case of every business institution in the country that has a legitimate reserve which it desires to invest, not for speculative purposes but legitimately in the purchase of some stock, and if a dividend is declared on such stock, to put a tax upon that reserve. That is something that has never before been done in the history of the country. Notwithstanding the fact that a corporation already pays the 13¾-percent tax, if the dividend should go through the channel of 10 other corporations, such dividend might pay 10 taxes. Insurance companies are oftentimes forced, in order to meet the demands of policyholders in case of death or for annuities, to invest their money in legitimate stocks. What is now proposed to be done is also to put a tax upon such investments. If the Senate wants to do that, let it go to it, and adopt the amendment, but I appeal to this body not to do something without having their eyes wide open.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Mississippi is it not true that in many cases corporations engaged in business in different States are compelled to take out corporate franchises in each of those States?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; that is true, I may say to the Senator.

Mr. HASTINGS. And under this provision it would be necessary for them to pay an additional tax upon each of those corporations, as I understand the amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; it would be if earnings were paid by one corporation to the other.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HASTINGS. I call for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

Mr. NORRIS. I will agree to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] are conveying an erroneous idea to the Senate about the effect of this amendment. The amendment does not provide for levying a tax on those companies, but it does provide if they shall make a profit they shall pay the tax. What is wrong about that? If they make no profit they will pay no tax. There is not in the amendment a provision to levy a tax if there is an investment made in another company; but if the other company is bought, and the purchasing corporation operates it as a business, and makes money on it, which is subject to the income tax law, why should it not pay a tax on the profits? It is not a proposition to tax them, but it is a proposition that if they are liable to the tax they shall not be excused therefrom. They are not exempt if they make money, but if they do not make any money they pay no tax. There is nothing unfair about that.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has put his finger on the sore spot so far as banks are concerned. He has told the Senate the story that as to banks his investigations show that holding companies have created all kinds of misery and suffering. That is true in every other line in which holding companies have been active. If a State compels the organization of a corporation to enable business to be carried on within its borders and the corporation makes money, why should it not pay a tax? This amendment only provides that if such a corporation makes money it shall not have any exemption anywhere else. It is not necessary for a corporation, if it does not want to do so, to buy up other corporations over all the United States. It is not a question of making an honest investment. They are dishonest investments 99 times out of 100, made for the purpose of "skinning" the public. We have been noticing that for the last 2 or 3 years, in fact, having it thrown into our faces. No man on earth, not even God Almighty, could tell where holding companies really were, and when you put your finger on one corporation it was another corporation in some other State that was organized for the purpose of deception. There is no honest intention in ninety-five cases out of one hundred for the doing of an honest business.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HASTINGS. My understanding is that the subsidiary which pays the dividends will not only pay a tax but that the holding corporation which owns the subsidiary will have to pay an additional tax. Is that also the Senator's understanding?

Mr. NORRIS. If the holding company makes any money, it will have to pay. If a corporation makes money, it will have to pay; if it makes sufficient to be subject to taxation. All this amendment does, I will say to the Senator, is to prevent a corporation in filing a return from deducting a profit which some other corporation owned by it has made on which it will not have to pay any tax.

Mr. HASTINGS. For instance, suppose that an insurance company is doing business in more than one State, and that a certain other State requires that insurance company to take out articles of incorporation under its laws in order to do business; it is all controlled from one place; and under this proposed amendment, as I understand, the subsidiary corporation if it made any money would pay the tax; and if it paid a dividend to the parent company, the parent company would also pay a tax on that.

Mr. NORRIS. Not on that.

Mr. HASTINGS. Oh, yes; on that, too.

Mr. NORRIS. It pays a tax on its profit that it gets out of it.

Mr. HASTINGS. It would pay a tax on that particular dividend, as I understand. Is not that also the Senator's understanding?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not understand it in that way. In the first place, the Senator puts a proposition that I do not believe, with due respect to him, exists.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am not certain, and I should like to find out definitely, because that is what I think is true.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, an insurance company, if it is organized in New York and does business in 47 other States, does not have to form 47 different corporations; it simply has to procure a license to do business in the other States.

Mr. NORRIS. That is all.

Mr. HASTINGS. In some instances I think it does have to take out articles of incorporation in other States. Particularly is that so in the case of railroads.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I understand the Postal Telegraph Co. has to take out a charter in each of the 48 States. That is what I understand from the experts.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I happen to know that each of those corporations has to file separate returns before the public-service commissions of the States where it does business, anyway; and there is no convenience in requiring it to file separate returns for its revenues, because it has to do it, I think, in practically every State of the Union anyway.

Mr. HASTINGS. The additional point is——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HASTINGS. The additional point is that if the particular corporation in Louisiana makes a profit and pays a dividend to the parent company, the parent company also has to pay a tax upon that dividend again. That is the point.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose it does; why should it not if it is making money?

Mr. HASTINGS. Very well; but I understood the Senator to say that he did not understand it to be that way.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think the Senator was putting that question to me.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I want to correct one statement made by the Senator from Nebraska, that 95 percent of these corporations were organized for dishonest or deceptive purposes. I will say that 99⅞ percent plus are created for no other purpose in the world than to cheat State bodies and State commissions and tax-receiving agencies of the State and Federal Governments and to make it almost impossible to trace their returns. That is the purpose of them.

Mr. NORRIS. I was prevented by the interruptions from referring to the suggestion as to insurance companies. I should like to do that now.

I do not claim to be an expert or anything of that kind, but I believe I can safely say that there is not a State in the Union that compels an insurance company to organize a new corporation for the purpose of doing business within its borders. Insurance companies have to comply with the laws of the State which probably provide a form of licensing or some method under which anyone who wants to sue them will have a place to sue and someone upon whom to serve summons. But I do not believe there is an instance where the New York Life Insurance Co., for instance, if it wanted to do business in another State would be compelled to organize, say, the Sun Insurance Co., which they would own, in order to do business in that State. It is not done in that way. They do not organize separate corporations; it is unnecessary; and the insurance companies do not do it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not in a position to dispute what the Senator has said about it, but I do happen to recall that in the State of Texas every railroad that passes through the State must organize a separate corporation under the laws of the State of Texas. I wonder if the State of Texas makes the same requirement of every other corporation which does business in the State?

Mr. NORRIS. I cannot answer the Senator's question. A railroad very often, or any other corporation sometimes, is required by the laws of a State to incorporate in that State an identical corporation. That will not harm them any. There is nothing about it that is wrong. There is no holding-company operation involved at all. It is not necessary to have a holding company to do an insurance business in any State in the Union—none with which I am familiar, and I am familiar with quite a number of them. In not a single instance is it required that there shall be a holding company, and there are no holding companies, if I understand the situation correctly.

But, after all, let us see what we have here. We have adopted an amendment striking out section 141. The pending amendment ought to follow as a matter of course. It is something that follows from the amendment which has already been agreed to by the Senate. When I left the Chamber to go to lunch after that amendment was adopted I supposed the adoption of this amendment would be only a matter of form. If the one amendment prevails, as it has, then the other ought to be adopted. It is a matter of necessity under the action the Senate has already taken. It is House language which the amendment would strike out. If the amendment shall not be adopted, the matter will not be in conference, even though the other amendment has been agreed to. We will have two conflicting provisions and we will be unable to remedy the situation. This amendment striking out the House language must be adopted or the subject will not be in conference.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, it is quite true that the question of taxing dividends paid by one corporation to another would not be in conference if the amendment were not adopted. That is true. But there is no similiarity at all between the amendment now pending and the amendment adopted a while ago, the so-called "Borah motion", to strike out section 141.

Mr. NORRIS. I understood there was.

Mr. HARRISON. They are not affiliated at all. They have nothing to do with each other. That motion was to strike out the right to make consolidated returns and to require every corporation to file its own return. This is a different matter altogether. It is not akin to the other in any way. This is not confined to holding companies at all. This affects every corporation that declares a dividend.

Mr. NORRIS. It includes every holding company, as I understand. It applies only in case one corporation owns another corporation. That is the only instance where a corporation would want to get credit for a loss or a gain in a different corporation to make up a loss somewhere else in another corporation.

Mr. HARRISON. I know the Senator wants to be absolutely fair. Is it the Senator's understanding that this amendment would apply to corporations owning a controlling interest in another corporation, or where one group might own the control in other corporations?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. That is not so.

Mr. NORRIS. I think it is.

Mr. HARRISON. No; it is not so.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not see how it can be otherwise.

Mr. BORAH. Why is it not so?

Mr. HARRISON. Because that matter is dealt with in other provisions of the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. The amendment is to strike out this language:

> In the case of a corporation, the amount received as dividends from a domestic corporation which is subject to taxation under this title.

That is what they can take out as exemptions.

Mr. HARRISON. There is nothing there about holding companies.

Mr. NORRIS. They do not use the term "holding companies", but it prevents a corporation taking out as dividends that which it receives from another corporation. That is what makes a holding company. When one corporation owns another, it may be called something else, if the Senator desires, but it is a holding company just the same when one corporation owns another. The language provides that they can deduct from their returns the amount that is received from another corporation.

Mr. President, I want to add—and I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Mississippi—that the Senator from Mississippi, I think, has been remarkably fair in his management of the bill. We have a proposal here now pending—the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]—that would strike out some of the House language. If that amendment shall be defeated, the question will not be in conference at all. If the amendment shall be adopted, the Senator from Mississippi and his fellow conferees will still have it under their control. The Senate is willing and glad to trust them to do the fair thing. If he can, by any kind of investigation, find a case where one of these holding companies ought to be exempted, we will have it inserted in the conference report or adopt language that will permit it.

The matter will be in the hands of the conferees. But if the amendment is defeated it is gone forever. If the amendment is defeated, the question is not in conference. It seems to me the Senator, with his usual degree of fairness, ought to accept the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought the Senator was trying to cut out the holding companies. What the Senator's amendment does is to affect every other kind of company.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Mississippi can control that in conference. If there ought to be some exemptions, they can be provided. If we do not adopt this amendment, the hands of the Senator from Mississippi are tied so he cannot do a thing.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator does not want to tax every dividend paid by one corporation to another, does he?

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to tax the holding companies, unless we can find an exemption for holding companies which can show a decent right to live. I would like to tax them all out of existence. I confess that frankly. I would like to get rid of them all. They are something that did not bother our forefathers. They have grown up under our modern system, and in my judgment they have done one of the greatest injuries to the American people they have ever suffered. Insull is an example of the evil, a fair example of it. Kreuger, in the match business, is another one. They are scattered all through the world, these financial kings, who have robbed the common people in order to make millions for themselves. Eventually they fall down of their own weight.

Mr. HARRISON. May I say to the Senator that the committee was carrying out that purpose in writing additional income taxes on holding companies which went as high as 20 percent above the 13¾ percent. Also, in addition to that we have the other provisions in the bill relating to accumulated profits.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and I commend the committee. I commend the Senator from Mississippi for doing that. Those are mostly personal holding companies, but we want an opportunity here, and I think the Senator from Mississippi ought to be with us, to carry the same doctrine into other cases. All we are asking now is to have this amendment adopted so as to put the matter in conference. It is the only hope we have. Without it all hope is gone beyond any possible redemption.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. GLASS. As I understand, the proposed amendment is complementary to the amendment we have already adopted and against which I voted.

Mr. NORRIS. Absolutely.

Mr. GLASS. If one provision is to go out, the other ought to go out likewise, so they will both be in conference.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I do not want to delay the Senate, but all the experts tell me the two matters are not complementary at all and not akin at all.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know to what experts the Senator refers. He says "all the experts." Experts tell me that the amendments are related and ought to be considered together.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the suggestions made by the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Idaho have shown us how dangerous it is to adopt 100 percent, and accept as absolutely true, the statements of experts.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I desire to direct an inquiry to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Am I correct in my understanding that if this amendment should be adopted, it would force every insurance company to pay the full corporate tax rate upon the income from every share of stock which it holds as an investment and would also compel the payment of the tax by testamentary trusts?

Mr. HARRISON. No; I did not say that, but it might in fire-insurance cases. Dividends from a corporation to the insurance company would be subjected to the tax twice; and they might be taxed on 10 different occasions down the line.

Mr. ADAMS. Would that be true also of testamentary trusts, where a corporate trustee was designated by will and the trustee invested the funds in corporate stocks?

Mr. HARRISON. The trustee would have to pay the tax on the dividends.

Mr. ADAMS. So that there would be a double tax.

Mr. HARRISON. And if a bank had to take up stock in some corporation, it would have to pay the tax on the dividends.

Mr. ADAMS. And then, upon the distribution, the beneficiary would pay his individual tax?

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. On that amendment the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLASS (when Mr. BYRD's name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. BYRD] is unavoidably absent on official business.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HATFIELD (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT], who is detained on official business, and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BORAH (after having voted in the affirmative). I change my vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK]. If the Senator from Vermont were present, he would vote "nay", and if the Senator from Alabama were present he would vote "yea." These two Senators are detained in a meeting of the Committee to Investigate the Air Mail Contracts.

I also desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL];

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON] with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]; and

The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] with the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO].

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] are detained on business of the Senate. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON] are necessarily absent.

Mr. HARRISON. I regret to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

I also desire to announce the necessary absence on official business of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 39, as follows:

So Mr. BORAH's amendment was rejected.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 132, line 15, it is proposed to strike out the words "during the taxable year."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, the Senate has imposed high income-tax rates, but it has left an opening as large as a barn door for the evasion of those tax rates.

In recent years many so-called "family trusts" have been created with no other purpose than to avoid high surtaxes on large incomes. Under trusts of this type, the grantor transfers his property to a trustee and provides for the payment of the income to the beneficiaries of the trust, the members of his family, but he retains the right to revoke the trust at any time.

Congress recognized the seriousness of this situation as it related to the revenues as early as 1924, and in the revenue act of that year enacted a special provision requiring the income from a revocable trust to be taxable to the grantor.

The right of Congress to tax the income to the grantor in the case of a revocable trust was upheld by the Supreme Court in the case of Corliss v. Bowers (281 U.S. 376).

Taxpayers found a way to get around the revocable trust provision of the 1924 act, which was incorporated in all subsequent revenue acts. The difficulty with the wording of the present statute is that the income is not taxable to the grantor unless he retains the right to revoke within the taxable year. Therefore, to avoid the tax, many so-called "year-and-a-day" trusts have been created. Under the terms of most of these trusts, the grantor does not have the power at any time during the taxable year to revest in himself title to any part of the corpus of the trust except upon written notice delivered to the trustee during the preceding taxable year. The courts have held that the income from such trusts is not taxable to the grantor, among the cases so holding being Faber v. U.S. (1 Fed. Supp. 859); Lewis v. White (56 Fed. (2d) 390); Langley v. Commissioner (61 Fed. (2d) 796); Ashforth v. Commissioner (26 B.T.A. 1188).

In the Langley trust the grantor reserved the right to revoke on the giving of a notice of a year and a day. Since notice was not given during the taxable year 1927 the court held that the income of the trust for 1928 was not taxable to the grantor, since during 1928 he could not revest title to the corpus of the trust. The Treasury Department has acquiesced in all of the above decisions.

As demonstrating the tax effect of these revocable trusts, under the pending bill a man with an income of a million dollars would pay a tax of $571,158. By splitting this income up into three family trusts, such as I have described, receiving one part of the income for himself, he will effect a tax saving of $108,358, since the tax on $250,000, or a quarter of a million, amounts to only $115,700.

Take the case of a man with an income of $100,000. If he sets up one of these trusts, so that $50,000 of the income will be paid to his wife, the other half being retained by himself, he will decrease his tax by approximately 50 percent. Of course, if he created several of these trusts, he could secure an even greater reduction.

If a man had an income of $200,000, and wanted to avoid the tax on that to himself, and split it up into three trusts of $50,000 each, retaining $50,000 for himself, his tax would be reduced, by that operation, from $80,240 to $29,760, representing a saving in tax to him of $50,480.

There is no use, when raising surtaxes, to leave the way open, by the creation of these revocable trusts, for the avoidance of the imposition of those surtaxes.

My amendment, by striking out the words "during the taxable year", would close this avenue of tax avoidance. I submit that the Chairman of the Committee on Finance might well accept the amendment, and let it go to conference.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I may say that I have talked this matter over and had the experts look into it. I have no objection to the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONNALLY in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, I present an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 33, after line 25, it is proposed to insert a new section to read as follows:

SEC. 31A. Taxes of States, Territories, and the District of Columbia: The amount of income tax, or corporation tax measured by income imposed by any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia shall be allowed as a credit against the tax, but not exceeding 10 percent of the tax against which such credit is taken. Such credit shall be allowed as provided in section 131 and the provisions of said section, so far as applicable, shall govern.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, through a misunderstanding, this matter was not presented to the Committee on Finance of the Senate.

In 1933 there was organized under the laws of the State of Wisconsin an interim committee on tax problems, and a part of their duty was stated to be as follows:

And is specifically instructed to bring to the attention of the Federal Government the equity of allowing a credit in the payment of Federal income taxes of income taxes paid to the States.

The Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, by joint resolution, on three different occasions has memorialized Congress to consider this problem. The interim committee had intended appearing before the Finance Committee, but through a misunderstanding as to when hearings would close they were unable to do so.

The income tax being the fairest of taxes, as we all recognize, and being based upon ability to pay, I think it should be encouraged in the several States. The State of Wisconsin imposed an income tax before the Federal Government did, as did several other States. I believe my State was the first whose income tax law was held valid by the courts.

Mr. President, 26 States of the Union are levying income taxes on both corporations and individuals. Two of them are levying taxes on the incomes of corporations only and one on the incomes of individuals only. Three of them impose taxes upon gross income. Two others tax income from intangibles only.

Although the income tax is a fair tax, and the States are increasingly using it, yet it does bring about an unfair situation with reference to States which do not have State income taxes, particularly where corporations or individuals are doing business in competition with corporations and individuals of other States where they are not subject to income taxation.

There is a policy which this Government has established with reference to inheritance taxes, under the law of 1926, which would seem to justify this amendment. Since 1924 an estate tax has been levied by the Federal Government. If the Senate imposes an inheritance income tax, one is allowed a credit up to 80 percent. I recognize that the Government is so greatly in need of funds that a larger figure than 10 percent, for which my amendment calls, might well be justified. Yet I think the adoption of this amendment would establish a policy which would give great emphasis to the movement in the States of the Union toward levying income taxes, where at least they are not prohibited from doing so by their State constitutions. The amendment is in accord with the resolution of the State legislature of my State, and in accordance with the request of the interim committee.

I have conferred with the experts here as to what they thought it would cost. I have presented it in two alternative forms, one in the form of a tax of 10 percent on corporations, and the other in the form of a tax on both corporations and individuals. The experts tell me frankly that, because the larger States have State income taxes, it might cost as high as $75,000,000, but it does seem to me that it would establish a precedent which should be followed, and would be of great assistance in leading the various States to impose income taxes. I therefore think the policy should be adopted. The amendment I have presented is in the form of an allowance of both individual and corporation income-tax credits.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, of course anything the junior Senator from Wisconsin might ask would naturally appeal to me; but this amendment would cost the Government somewhere between $75,000,000 and $100,000,000. It is too much of an experiment, it seems to me, for the Federal Government to begin at this time. The Government could not stand the loss of the revenue, the amendment presents an entirely new policy, to which the committee has given no consideration, and I hope the amendment will be defeated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 13, after line 14, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 14. Tax in the event of war: (a) Whenever Congress shall declare that a state of war exists, the income-tax rates then in force shall be increased by 100 percent: Provided, however, That in no case shall the tax so imposed, together with all other Federal, State, local, and foreign taxes imposed upon the same taxpayer exceed 98 percent of his entire net income: Provided further, That in no case shall the total of such taxes be less than 98 percent of each taxpayer's net income in excess of $10,000 a year. The 100 percent increase shall be further increased or diminished in order to come within these maximum and minimum limits.

(b) The tax imposed by this section shall be applicable to every year (whether calendar or fiscal) during any part of which the state of war shall exist, and to 1 year prior and 1 year subsequent to such period. The President shall by proclamation declare the date of termination of the war.

(c) The Secretary of the Treasury shall have power to prescribe regulations for the administration of the provisions of this section, which shall be construed as a part of the general income-tax law.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment would be that of accomplishing an increase in tax rates in the event of war, which in the case of incomes of $10,000 per year or less would provide a doubling of the tax rates. On incomes in excess of $10,000 per year the rate of taxation, roughly, would be 98 percent.

At first blush one is apt to consider this a most severe degree of taxation, and yet if we will consider what the requirements of life are, it is not difficult to see that the man with the huge income that was being taxed at so high a rate as 98 percent would still find himself with ample means to provide for himself and for his family. Certain it is that an income of $10,000 or $20,000 or $30,000 or $40,000, such as would be permitted under this amendment, would be sufficient to take care of the families of any one of those men who will be in the trenches, in the front lines, carrying on in the cause of country and flag during the time of war. I do not know why we should fret particularly about the question of confiscation, if that is what it amounts to, in event of war, for we have no hesitation whatsoever in confiscating lives, in confiscating limbs and bodies. We do not hesitate in time of war in confiscating the positions which the young men give up in order that they might carry on in the cause of their country. We show no hesitation at all in time of war in going out and destroying and damaging not only lives but property as well. Why, then, we should hesitate when it comes to what might amount to be confiscation of income, confiscation of wealth, is beyond me to understand.

In the one event as relates to life and relates to property and health we grind most ruthlessly in time of war. Why must we be so solicitous about taxing the huge incomes that accrue to individuals during time of war?

It has been very often said, Mr. President, that one of the surest ways of preventing war is to take the profit out of war. While there have been many theories advanced as to plans to end war and prevent war, I know of none that would go further than this plan of taxing profits and partly confiscating profits in time of war.

But it is asked, "Why do we not wait? Why act now? Why not wait until war comes, and then we can increase these tax rates to the extent that is being suggested now?"

I think, Mr. President, that the answer to that question is this: Instead of taking alone the profit out of war, let us take the prospects of profit out of war. Take the prospects away and, I am convinced from such consideration as I have given, that we would be much farther removed from the dangers of war than we are even at this particular hour.

Mr. President, taking the prospect of profit out of war, it seems to me, is a precaution we ought to heed at this time. If it be said we ought to wait until war is declared before we levy war-time tax rates, let us be reminded that when we went into the last war we did not move with great rapidity, indeed, we did not awaken to the terrific profits that men were making out of war until the war was over, and it was discovered that a single war had created in our country something like 22,000 millionaires. We waited too long. Let us not make the same mistake again.

And so if we were to move now, writing laws, writing regulations which would be convincing that another war was not going to permit men, institutions, or industries to reap these huge profits while men were giving their all in the front line of battle, we would have performed for our country a very splendid service.

There is not anyone in this Chamber who is not quite unalterably opposed to the thought of more wars, or to our engagement in more wars. Then that being the case, why, I ask again, Mr. President, wait to write tax rates that will prevail and that should prevail if another war were to be visited upon us?

The question of preventing more war is one that lends itself to much of discussion and is most inviting of debate. I feel that this amendment which is now before the Senate would go far in that direction.

Another splendid service to that end could be performed by the approval and passage of Senate bill 3356, which is a bill intended to put the United States onto a cash-and-carry basis in the event other nations engage in war and want to buy of us their supplies and their ammunition. That particular bill, which I have introduced, provides as follows:

> That it shall be unlawful for any person to transport or cause to be transported any articles or commodities from the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, in vessels registered under the laws of the United States, to any foreign country which is engaged in a dispute or conflict with another nation.
> SEC. 2. Whoever violates the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned for not longer than 5 years, or both.

The purpose, Mr. President, of that legislation is very obvious. We are reminded that we may not be able to stay out of another world conflict; that when countries engage in war it might well be expected that one of them will be buying from the United States supplies, munitions of war; and that in their transportation to the purchasing nation they will be attacked by another warring nation, our American shipping will be sunk. To such an act the American flag must respond, and our soldiers and our sailors, our ships, must be thrown into that world engagement. So I say, Mr. President, that if we had legislation which left our markets open to foreign countries that wanted to buy from us while they were engaged in war, all well and good, but let them come, carry it away in their own shipping, under their own flag; not under the American flag, another great step in security of peace would be won.

Another splendid purpose could be served in the lessening of dangers of war by the adoption by the Senate of that resolution which has been approved by the Military Affairs Committee, approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, now on the calendar of the Senate, introduced by the Senator from Michigan and myself, calling for a sweeping investigation of the practices of our American munitions makers.

The question arises, What part do these manufacturers of arms play in the creation of wars and in the carrying on of wars? To the end that the American people and we ourselves in Congress might have knowledge of the very influential part which they do play in that emergency, I am hopeful that that particular resolution can very soon be taken up from the calendar, its passage accomplished, and a committee appointed to proceed with that sweeping study which is contemplated.

That investigation can be expected to ascertain what part of the American tax dollar ultimately reaches the manufacturer of munitions of war. It is known that in our normal expenditures as a Government today 75 cents of every tax dollar goes for the purpose of paying for war—past wars or future wars. What part of that 75 cents, what part of our total annual expenditures, is going to bolster up the commercial strength of those who are engaged in the manufacture of munitions?

We also ought to know how much of collusion there is on the part of manufacturers of munitions in their sales to the United States Government of armor plate and of other commodities that enter into our preparation for war.

We ought to know if it is true that American munitions makers engage in South America in programs which are intended to breed suspicion and fear between the countries of South America, suspicion and fear that invite to one thing—orders for more munitions to prepare for more war, to prepare for more of the military engagements of which these unfortunate countries have known so many.

What part do the munitions makers play and take in preventing the fuller accomplishments that are hoped for from peace conferences?

What part did the munitions makers play while our statesmen were in South America less than a year ago trying to accomplish peace and understanding?

What are the holdings of American banking interests in our munitions enterprises in America?

What part do the banks play in the accomplishment of sales of American munitions to countries that are bankrupt, to countries that decline to meet their obligations under their bonds? What makes it possible for them to keep buying munitions while they are defaulting upon their bonds? Do our American banking interests have any interest whatsoever in munitions enterprises in our country?

Another question that the investigation might help satisfy is how many Shearers are engaged by our American munitions makers to ply their trade in the lobbies of Congress and in the Legislative Halls of the Nation?

What part have the munitions makers played in preventing the successful outcome of efforts like that involved in the arms embargo effort of a year ago?

What part—and this is all important, it seems, Mr. President—what part of our preparation efforts as a nation are occasioned by the commercial objectives of war or preparation for war? How large an influence does the mere commercial interest of American industries play in building our preparation program, our plan to be prepared for another war? What practices do the munitions makers resort to in order to accomplish the awarding of contracts from their own Government and from other governments?

It would be very interesting, too, Mr. President, to know what part of the holdings, what part of the stocks of munitions enterprises are possessed by men and by interests who and which occupy dominating positions in our public life, who are leading our public thought and opinion with respect to national issues.

Those and other questions are such as we might hope to have answered if the investigation of which I speak should be undertaken. I repeat the expression of the hope that the Senate is going to permit that investigation to get very quickly under way. A poll of the Senate has revealed an overwhelming majority in this body in favor of it.

Getting back to the pending amendment, it may be asked, Mr. President, why should this amendment be pressed at this time? There are those who insist that there is no danger of war, that war is not imminent at all, that we ought not to be concerned with it, and that we can deal with the tax problems involved soon enough when and if war does come. Mr. President, I think anyone who will face the facts will agree that there is just as much prospect of war in this world today as there was 2 or 3 months before the World War broke, almost 20 years ago. If, indeed, preparation is an invitation to war, then we may expect this world to be moving very directly into another terrible conflict such as was that of a very few years ago.

We find in the cause of preparation our own expenditures in the United States multiplied almost by three today over what they were in the years 1914 and 1915, before our entry into the World War. Whereas in 1915 the total cost of maintaining our Army and Navy was $343,000,000, during more recent years it has mounted to $840,000,000. Economy has pushed down expenditures slightly, but they are still in excess of $700,000,000 annually, or well over twice as much as we were spending in those years of peace before the breaking out of the terrible and great World War, the war that was going to end war. Our own preparations in America rather indicate that we have been the leader in the movement of preparing for more trouble. From 1913 to 1930 Great Britain's cost of preparation for war increased 42 percent, France's 30 percent, Italy's 44 percent, Japan's 142 percent, Russia's 30 percent, and the United States outdistanced them all with an increase in that same period of 197 percent.

Mr. President, we never consider the danger of war but that the finger is pointed toward that island over across the Pacific, and we are cautioned to keep our eye there; that that is going to be the source of our next trouble as a nation. Eleven years ago there was written for the magazine Asia an article which, it seems to me, ought to be brought to mind again, particularly here in the Senate. Eleven years ago that article was written reciting how impossible, how improbable was an engagement between the United States and Japan. The writer at that time declared—and I quote from the New Republic—

> The overwhelming opinion of naval experts on both sides of the Pacific is that a war between these two countries would come to nothing in any military sense. We could not possibly defend the Philippines or successfully attack the Japanese territory. The Japanese could not, except momentarily, invade the United States either directly or through Mexico. Recent naval inventions, instead of making long-distance warfare more feasible, has made it less so. Such a war would develop into a stalemate and a struggle of economic attrition. In this struggle the United States would be overwhelmingly superior.

The New Republic declares:

> We should like to call to the attention of the writer of that article of 11 years ago this passage from his article:
> "Tableau: Japan and the United States, four or five thousand miles apart, making faces at one another across a no-man's water as broad as the Pacific. Some genius might then arise to ask what it was all about and what the use was of the atrophy of national life and development. Or, to take a pessimistic view, jingo councils might prevail in both Nations until one or the other, or both, have bled to death through the pocketbook. If, then, it were realized by the people of this country and of Japan that a war would be a futile gesture, attended by no sufficiently compensating results, each Nation might be in a fair way to change its apprehensive habit of mind.

Mr. President, the writer of the article from which I have quoted was none other than the President of the United States when he was Assistant Secretary of the Navy or just after his retirement from that particular office. He speaks of a change in the "apprehensive habit of mind." If only such a change could be brought about, Mr. President, a world of good could be accomplished and suffering, economic and physical, could be avoided. Because we all want to attain that end I press an appeal for the passage of that kind of law at this time which will determine that in the event of more war there will not be tolerated that degree of profiteering which prevailed during the last war.

There has just come from the press a most interesting publication, revealing the antics of our American munitions manufacturers during the World War, and at other times. It is written by H. C. Engelbrecht and F. C. Hanighen, and has been given a title which fits the situation beautifully. Merchants of Death is the name of this new work. I wish to invite the attention of every Member of the Senate to this book which is deserving of their reading. It is a remarkable work, one about which a great deal is going to be heard. In this volume we find recorded some figures showing the profits enjoyed during the last war, profits that we certainly want to protect ourselves against in the event of further military engagements.

During 4 peace years the United States Steel Corporation enjoyed an average annual profit of $105,000,000, while during the 4 years of war its annual average profit was $239,000,000.

The du Pont interests during 4 years of peace found themselves enjoying an average annual profit of $6,000,000, while during 4 years of war they enjoyed an average profit of $58,000,000 annually.

The Bethlehem Steel Corporation in peace times had an average annual profit of $6,000,000, and in war times an average profit of $49,000,000 annually.

Anaconda Copper had an annual average profit of $10,000,000 in peace times, and an average in war times of $34,000,000.

Utah Copper, $5,700,000 in peace times and $21,600,000 in war times.

American Smelting & Refining Co., $11,500,000 in peace times and $18,600,000 in war times.

Republic Iron & Steel, $4,000,000 in peace times and $17,500,000 in war times.

International Mercantile Marine, in peace times $6,600,000 profits per year and in war times $14,000,000 in profits per year.

Atlas Powder Co., $485,000 profit in peace years per annum and $2,374,000 per year in times of war.

American and British manufacturing, $172,000 profit in peace times and $325,000 in time of war.

Canadian Car & Foundry, $1,300,000 in peace times and $2,200,000 in war times.

Crocker Wheeler Co., another munitions institution, $206,000 annually in peace times and $666,000 in war times.

Hercules Powder Co. in peace times had an annual profit of $1,200,000 and in time of war an annual profit of $7,430,000.

General Motors in peace times had a profit of $6,900,000 per year, and in war times $21,700,000 profits per year.

Mr. President, why should we hesitate, why should we delay for one moment writing now a provision which will say to those who might have an interest in another war, "In the event of another war your profits are going to be limited almost to the point of confiscation of the huge incomes which you take while men are bleeding, while homes are being deprived of the support they so desperately needed"? Why should we hesitate doing this particularly when we find our gigantic industrial enterprises in America reaching out at all times to enlarge upon their profits, no matter what the cost may be to humanity, no matter the suffering of mankind?

This volume, Merchants of Death, reminds us of an advertisement published by the Cleveland Automatic Machine Co. in the American Machinist, an advertisement having to do with a new discovery, the discovery of some new instrument that would bring death in terrible agony to men engaged in the defense of flag and country. I am going to insist upon reading this advertisement in part.

Speaking of the material this manufacturer had developed, the advertisement declares:

> The material is high in tensile strength and very special and has a tendency to fracture into small pieces upon the explosion of the shell. The timing of the fuse for this shell is similar to the shrapnel shell, but it differs in that two explosive acids are used to explode the shell in the large cavity. The combination of these two acids causes a terrific explosion, having more power than anything of its kind yet used. Fragments become coated with the acids in exploding and wounds caused by them mean death in terrible agony within 4 hours if not attended to immediately.

Listen to this further paragraph appearing in the advertisement:

From what we are able to learn of conditions in the trenches, it is not possible to get medical assistance to anyone in time to prevent fatal results. It is necessary to cauterize the wound immediately, if in the body or head, or to amputate if in the limbs, as there seems to be no antidote that will counteract the poison.

I continue quoting the advertisement:

It can be seen from this that this shell is more effective than the regular shrapnel, since the wounds caused by shrapnel balls and fragments in the muscle are not as dangerous, as they have no poisonous element making prompt attention necessary.

Now, here is a manufacturer, one who enjoys huge profits in time of war, one whose greatest prosperity is dependent upon war—here is one who develops not an instrument, not a tool, that is going to accomplish alone death or the disability of someone engaged in war, but is going to accomplish death "in terrible agony", to use his own language.

Profits! Profits! Mr. President, profit plays more of a part in preparing for war, in occasioning war, than any other one thing to which we might devote our attention. Because that is so emphatically true I have deep interest and concern in the amendment which I have offered, an amendment which, in the event of another war, would take that part of the profits of men in industries which is in excess of $10,000 a year and tax it to the extent of 98 percent.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment may prevail.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the pending amendment to the tax bill proposes the virtual confiscation of all war profits in the unhappy event of another conflict involving the United States. This raises, by implication, the whole question of a practical peace program for our country. Too much emphasis cannot be put upon the importance of the challenge involved in the amendment. It represents compulsory patriotism and practical pacifism. The length of the step proposed in the tax amendment is far less important than the direction of the step. The direction is the thing I am rising to applaud heartily and to support with all the earnestness at my command. The Senate here deals with the most powerful peace impulse which can be flung into the affairs of men.

It seems to me that the adoption of the amendment would be a major frontal attack upon the commercial motive in the war equation. The commercial motive in the war equation is public enemy no. 1 insofar as the promotion of practical peace is concerned. When an attack upon the commercial motive wholly succeeds, I am persuaded that the greatest possible peace insurance will have been developed. By the same happy token, national defense insurance also is promoted. The text of the pending amendment in its immediate detail may or may not be the appropriate mathematical calculation. That is immaterial. I repeat that it is the intent and the direction and the philosophy of the amendment which deserves the affirmative consideration of a Senate dedicated to the common welfare.

I want to point out, first of all, Mr. President, that this is no novel idea. It does not come here solely upon the responsibility of the author of this amendment which is offered from the floor. It has behind it credentials of utterly formidable character. It has behind it the accumulated authority of the work of the War Policies Commission, which was created by formal act of Congress in 1931, a body which met over a period of 12 months and devoted loyal service to the faithful quest for a formula, quoting the original resolution, "to promote peace and to equalize the burdens and to minimize the profits of war." That is a patriotic objective, a Christian objective, a democratic objective.

The War Policies Commission was made up of representatives of the Senate, appointed by the Vice President, representatives of the House, appointed by the Speaker, and representatives of the President's Cabinet, named in the original resolution. I want to indicate the personnel of the commission because I want to emphasize the importance of the credentials that lie behind this purpose to take the profit out of war by way of a tax amendment. It is not a matter born of casual adventure. It is no mere passing fancy. It is not a flash of pacific hysteria. It is the seasoned conclusion of a governmental clinic which reached a solemn verdict in the light of searching investigation.

These are the men who joined in the report of the War Policies Commission: The then Secretary of War, Patrick J. Hurley, chairman; Senator David A. Reed, vice chairman; Senator Joseph T. Robinson, of Arkansas; Representative John J. McSwain; Attorney General William D. Mitchell; the then Secretary of the Navy, Charles Francis Adams; the then Secretary of Commerce, Robert P. Lamont; Representative William P. Holaday; the then Secretary of Agriculture, Arthur M. Hyde; the then Secretary of Labor, W. M. Doak; Representative Lindley H. Hadley, who served as secretary; and myself.

I had the honor of being 1 of the 4 Members of the Senate who, by designation of Vice President Curtis, sat upon the War Policies Commission, who took this significant testimony over the period of a year, and who formulated this subsequent report which was laid at the bar of the Senate on March 5, 1932.

Mr. President, what is the crux, what is the kernel of the recommendations which were submitted by the War Policies Commission for the purpose of demonetizing the martial impulse? What was the chief weapon which the War Policies Commission forged in its effort to attack the commercial motive as it may stimulate war purposes and war programs?

I quote from the report of the commission, from its final recommendation:

In addition to all other plans to remove the profits of war—

And the commission reported a series of recommendations—

In addition to all other plans to remove the profits of war, the revenue law should provide that upon any declaration of war, and during the period of such emergency, individuals and corporations shall be taxed 95 percent of all income above the previous 3-year average, with proper adjustments for capital expenditures for war purposes by existing or new industries.

In other words, Mr. President, it was the considered judgment of a formidable joint official body representing the Congress and the Cabinet in 1932 that the profits should be taken out of war primarily by precisely the method which is proposed by the pending amendment. We blazed the trail which is rediscovered today in the pending tax amendment.

The unfortunate and unhappy thing is that when this thoroughly formidable and invincibly sustained report was submitted to the Congress in 1932 it received no consideration whatever of an affirmative, constructive character. Congress had no time for this great antiwar program. I introduced the legislation necessary to carry out all of these various purposes. The legislation lingered in committees and died in pigeonholes. Just one resolution finally passed the Senate, and that was a resolution calling upon the then Secretary of the Treasury to report to the Senate the mechanics of a proposal to implement this taxing recommendation of the commission. The then Secretary of the Treasury replied to the Senate that it was impossible, in advance of war itself, to develop a practical formula; that we must wait for the event.

Mr. President, that response was and is utterly inadequate to the situation to which we address ourselves. That response utterly negatives the purpose which we were and are seeking to obtain, because the prime importance of the whole movement is to notify in advance all American business, to notify in advance all those who may be affected in any degree, that if conflict ever again comes to the United States it is going to be a demonetized conflict so far as we can make it such. There are to be no more "war millionaires", because that phrase is not only a paradox but a curse upon the very word "democracy." There are to be no further favorites at home who capitalize for their own gain the sacrifices of their fellow citizens upon the battle line. Cash registers, in other words, will join in playing the national anthem, whether they wish or not.

The essential, primary purpose of the legislation is that its passage in time of peace shall notify all concerned that if and when the unfortunate, unthinkable thing of war again comes to the Nation, it must come on a basis without profits. It must come on a basis in which the burdens of the national defense are equalized. It must come on a basis of universal service so far as possible. It must come upon a basis which represents a fraternity in fact, a fraternity of effort to defend the flag and sustain the Republic. So I submit, Mr. President, that this pending amendment is nothing more nor less than the lengthened shadow of the report of the War Policies Commission, put effectually to work by way of repressive admonition.

It seems to me that one of the great influences of the movement, as I have already indicated, is its advance notification to all our people that war profiteering is dead in the United States; that no dollar sign ever again shall stain our battle banners; that this democracy, if ever again summoned to the martial reveille, will move forward in a common realization that it is all for one, and one for all in respect to the national defense. Then, if there be any influences which hungrily encourage war in contemplation of bloody dividends, cash from casualties—God save the mark!—they will know in advance that our America is done with all such death's head greed.

This is my idea not only of practical patriotism but also of practical pacifism.

I would leave no inference that there was any lack of fine patriotism on the part of many sectors of American business in the last conflict. Many sturdy business men dedicated themselves to the common cause with complete unselfishness. But it is common knowledge that many a pocketbook fattened at home while the A.E.F. was tramping down the valley of the shadow abroad. No such offense to equity and to democracy should be possible again, if ever again we are unavoidably caught in the grips of war.

Mr. President, let no one think that this movement to take the profit out of war, not only in the fashion indicated by the pending amendment but by the further important evolution to which I shall advert in a moment, lacks any interest on the part of the great mass of the American people themselves. The truth of the matter is that this movement to equalize the burdens of war, this movement to create universal service in time of war, was originally born in the conscience of our massed and embattled veterans. It found its initial spokesmanship in the resolutions adopted at the first national convention of the American Legion. The veteran himself—the man who has paid the price—is the man who is primarily interested and concerned in doing the precise thing which is here undertaken; and year after year the one great constructive dedication to which the American Legion in convention after convention has pledged its continuous faith is the movement to take the profit out of war, and to equalize these burdens, and to create a universal service in the national defense.

Nor is that all. The American Federation of Labor, at its last national convention in Cincinnati, directly resolved upon the necessity of an inquiry into the nationalization of the entire munitions business, again, as it will be seen, pointing its suspicions toward the malignant influence of the commercial motive in respect either to the national defense or to the preservation of the country in time of actual challenge.

We have the American Legion, we have the American Federation of Labor, squarely joining in this challenge. I suspect that we have every peace society in the land joining in the challenge. I suspect that we have every religious impulse in the land joining its prayers to this movement. It is a movement that cannot be wholly answered merely by the pending amendment, because that only touches the outer rim of the problem. But this is the only point at which the Senate, in this particular consideration, can deal with this phase of the national problem. Beyond the pending amendment is the great fundamental question which is raised by the pending Senate Resolution 206.

This, Mr. President, is the resolution which is sponsored by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] and me. For purposes of easy identification, it is known as the Nye-Vandenberg resolution. It represents the consolidation of two previous resolutions seeking in parallel lines to reach a common focus, one presented by my colleague from North Dakota and one presented by me.

This resolution has the unanimous recommendation of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs. It has the unanimous recommendation of the Senate Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. It is pending on the calendar as Order of Business No. 623. It goes into the larger implications of this problem, which, I repeat, are typified and personified in one phase by the pending amendment.

I desire to read two or three sentences from the preamble of this resolution, because in these sentences rests the challenge which finds its first expression in the pending tax amendment, but which finds its larger expression in the resolution calling for the inquiry described in the resolution.

This resolution addresses itself to these propositions:

First, that the influence of the commercial motive is an inevitable factor in considerations involving the maintenance of the national defense.

Second, that the influence of the commercial motive is one of the inevitable factors often believed to stimulate and sustain wars.

In view of those theses, the resolution proposes that a select committee of the Senate, to be named by the Vice President, shall inquire into all phases of munitions influences at work in respect to the foreign policies of the United States or our contracts with any of its neighbors; shall inquire into all the influences of a doubtful or questionable character, if any, which may be at work within our own country in respect to our own national-defense proposals; shall review the antiprofits program of the War Policies Commission and give them life; shall particularly undertake to discover whether or not the actual nationalization of the munitions business of the land, by license or otherwise, may not be the most complete control of the defense factor and the peace factor, and the greatest possible guarantee of a pacific net result in the contacts of mankind.

The resolution is unanswerable in its challenge, Mr. President, and I am unable to believe that the Senate will permit it long to linger upon the calendar. As a matter of wise procedure, Mr. President, I would gladly refer the pending tax amendment to this new board of inquiry, instead of risking a vote upon it here this afternoon, if the Senate would interrupt its consideration of the pending bill long enough to pass the so-called "Nye-Vandenberg resolution."

I ask that the full text of the resolution may be printed in connection with my remarks at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S.Res. 206) submitted by Mr. NYE and Mr. VANDENBERG on the calendar day of March 12, 1934, is as follows:

Whereas the influence of the commercial motive is an inevitable factor in considerations involving the maintenance of the national defense; and

Whereas the influence of the commercial motive is one of the inevitable factors often believed to stimulate and sustain wars; and

Whereas the Seventy-first Congress, by Public Resolution No. 98, approved June 27, 1930, responding to the long-standing demands of American war veterans, speaking through the American Legion, for legislation to take the profit out of war, created a War Policies Commission, which reported recommendations on December 7, 1931, and on March 7, 1932, to decommercialize war and to equalize the burdens thereof; and

Whereas these recommendations never have been translated into the statutes: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a special committee of the Senate shall be appointed by the Vice President to consist of seven Senators, and that said committee be, and is hereby, authorized and directed—

(a) To investigate the activities of individuals and of corporations in the United States engaged in the manufacture, sale, distribution, import, or export of arms, munitions, or other implements of war; the nature of the industrial and commercial organizations engaged in the manufacture of or traffic in arms, munitions, or other implements of war; the methods used in promoting or effecting the sale of arms, munitions, or other implements of war; the quantities of arms, munitions, or other implements of war imported into the United States and the countries of origin thereof, and the quantities exported from the United States and the countries of destination thereof; and

(b) To investigate and report upon the adequacy or inadequacy of existing legislation, and of the treaties to which the United States is a party, for the regulation and control of the manufacture of and traffic in arms, munitions, or other implements of war within the United States, and of the traffic therein between the United States and other countries; and

(c) To review the findings of the War Policies Commission and to recommend such specific legislation as may be deemed desirable to accomplish the purposes set forth in such findings and in the preamble to this resolution; and

(d) To inquire into the desirability of creating a Government monopoly in respect to the manufacture of armaments and munitions and other implements of war, and to submit recommendations thereon.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee is authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Congress until the final report is submitted, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the Commission, which shall not exceed $50,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, this afternooon the able Senator from North Dakota has submitted various challenging exhibits bearing upon this proposition. I doubt whether any man who sat in this Chamber a few weeks ago and heard the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] lay down an even broader challenge in respect to the influence which the munitions influence has not only upon the thinking of America but upon all of the pacific undertakings of all this whole wide world can for a moment decline the challenge which is here presented for a conclusive investigation to find out whether or not we shall be allowed to live at peace among ourselves and with our neighbors without artificial encouragements to friction and to misunderstanding, then to conflict, and then to disaster. If our own land is free of these sordid intrigues which we know to exist elsewhere, the proof of that cleansing fact would itself more than justify this effort.

Mr. President, it is interesting to note, in this connection, that one of the labor members of the Canadian Parliament this same week has suggested in the Parliament across the line that the governmental control of Canadian nickel might be the control of the fundamental element necessary in the production of the instrumentalities of war, because nickel is of such a primary concern in all of these operations. That is a precise paraphrase, in one aspect, of the proposal which I am arguing to our own Senate this afternoon.

I ask that an editorial in the Evening Star entitled "No Nickel, No War?" be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Evening Star, Washington, D.C., Mar. 31, 1934]

NO NICKEL, NO WAR?

It has remained for Mr. J. S. Woodsworth, a Canadian Labor member of Parliament from Winnipeg, to propose a brand-new method for preventing war. His remedy is simple. He would make it impossible for nations to purchase nickel for armament purposes, especially armor plate, in the manufacture of which it is an essential ingredient.

As Canada has practically a monopoly of nickel, supplying 90 percent of the world's needs, Mr. Woodsworth favors nationalizing the commodity. It is due to increased war preparations, he suggests, that the output of nickel has more than doubled during the past year. Canada, it is proposed, should control both the output and its destination, so that nickel would not fall into the hands of armament makers. With war clouds gathering on the international horizon, Mr. Woodsworth thinks that the Dominion has a wonderful opportunity to fight on a dozen different fronts in this great war to end war.

It is a stimulating notion. Its patentee intermingles realism with his idealism when he admits that there would be some difficulty in government interference with such a big industry, but he reverts to the utopian by suggesting that in an international emergency the rights of stockholders should be sacrificed to the cause of humanity.

Mr. Woodsworth proposes that the League of Nations be asked to crack the nut and evolve a method of embargoing nickel along with narcotics.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Perhaps, as indicated in the editorial, this effort is utopian. But it bespeaks a philosophy and an ideal worth pursuing. Furthermore, this is supposed to be a practical age; and the practical fact is that competition in armaments is an impractical futility. I read just one contemporary news despatch from Sheffield, England:

The latest armor-piercing shell made in Sheffield was described today by Sir Robert Hadfield, famous metallurgist. It weighs nearly a ton. When fired at armor-plate thickness equal to the caliber of the gun, it not only perforates the plate without breaking, but has sufficient velocity to go 9 miles farther.

Who can speak of "the next war" in terms of dependable knowledge respecting the weapons with which it would be fought?

Who knows? Nobody knows! We each strive to outsmart the other. No; the effective attack upon the institution of war is an attack upon the war psychology, and an attack upon the commercial motive strikes at the heart of the problem. Indeed, I firmly believe it means more to honorable peace than either leagues or courts.

Mr. President, let me say very frankly that in many respects the Senator from North Dakota and I approach this problem from different viewpoints. Indeed, the interesting thing to me is that men who do have different viewpoints, relatively speaking, in regard to preparedness and in regard to the national defense, can find such a completely common ground as we find in respect to this particular pending amendment and in respect to the resolution to which I have adverted. The Senator from North Dakota, for example, voted against the Vinson Navy bill. I voted in favor of the Vinson Navy bill.

I do think it is important that the country should have its attention more directly focused on the statement made by the President of the United States when he signed the Vinson bill, because he signed it in the spirit in which I voted for it, and that is a totally different spirit from what has been ascribed to it by many critics. I ask that this statement may be inserted in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TEXT OF STATEMENT

The President's statement follows:

"Because there is some public misapprehension of facts in relation to the Vinson bill, it is only right that its main provisions should be made wholly clear.

"This is not a law for the construction of a single additional United States warship.

"The general purpose of the bill is solely a statement by the Congress that it approves the building of our Navy up to and not beyond the strength in various types of ships authorized, first, by the Washington Naval Limitations Treaty of 1922, and, secondly, by the London Naval Limitations Treaty of 1930.

"As has been done on several previous occasions in our history, the bill authorizes purchase and construction over a period of years. But the bill appropriates no money for such construction, and the word 'authorization' is, therefore, merely a statement of the policy of the present Congress. Whether it will be carried out depends on the action of the future Congresses.

"It has been and will be the policy of the administration to favor continued limitation of naval armament. It is my personal hope that the naval conference to be held in 1935 will extend all existing naval limitations and agree to further reductions."

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, let it be noted that we did not appropriate a single dollar for a single additional battleship. We merely declared a policy, and thus put the world on notice that arms limitations must be a matter of mutual participation. I share President Roosevelt's philosophy in this respect, despite what I have said of the impractical futility of competitive armaments.

With another naval conference pending in 1935–36, I believe the United States is in an infinitely stronger position to exercise a persuasive influence and an authoritative voice in discussion with other major naval powers, if we shall have made it plain that our international neighbors cannot expect our naval power to be reduced except as they join us in mutual limitations.

Despite all philosophy and metaphysics to the contrary, I believe in the importance of rational preparedness.

But this is beside the present point.

I have diverted only to indicate that two schools of thought, which may differ respecting the national defense, can find common ground, without division, without reservation, without equivocation, and without even a split hair between us in dedication and objective, when the promotion of peace by the demonetization of war is the issue.

The travesty of a competitive world race in armaments is beyond mitigation. It is competition in the agencies and instrumentalities of mass murder.

The travesty of war itself—except as a last defensive resort—must impress the conscience of every citizen.

This does not depreciate the martial triumphs of the past, nor the heroic sacrifice of our men in uniform who have placed their hearts upon the altars of the Republic. This does not deny our historic obligation to the defenders who have consecrated our institutions with their blood. This does not underestimate the desperately important service still rendered us every hour by those who continue to hold themselves in readiness again to serve and save us in an emergency. On the contrary, it is in their name that we owe civilization our maximum effort to prevent needless and futile and sterile conflict in this modern world.

I do not believe in disarming America in the midst of an armed world. Such unshared idealism would be a menace both to our own security and to the persuasive influence which we might hope to exercise upon the armed aspirations of others. It would not aid peace for us or for the world.

But I profoundly believe in stressing the formula and the philosophy of mutual disarmament by international agreement to the utmost limit. The United States must urge ever forward in this cause. There is no uniform effort of this nature to which we dare dissent. It is our tradition. It is our creed. It is our practice. It is our aspiration.

Yet when we are put upon notice that the world's most conscientious efforts in this direction are constantly jeopardized by the intriguing influences of an international munitions lobby, which thirsts for the blood of war as the wellspring of its prosperity, we certainly are warned that practical pacifism must attack and conquer this commercial motive before it can succeed in bringing its pacific benediction to the earth.

I do not know whether this malignant influence is in any degree persuasive within our own United States or not. Under the Nye-Vandenberg resolution we can find out; and we can find out many other useful things.

I favor an everlasting end to anything that smacks of a munitions lobby, here or elsewhere, or that reflects the commercial war motive at work. Then, and only then, can rational neighborliness have a fair chance to compose itself in peace.

Many believe—and some undertake to prove—that the profits factor not only engenders deliberate international frictions which seek sordid toll out of resultant trouble but also that wars often are prolonged by this same horrible stimulant.

I favor an end not only to the stimulant but also to any suspicion of an opportunity that it may ever again curse and victimize our people.

Obviously, then, I favor the theory and philosophy of the pending amendment to the tax bill, because it marches in the right direction, and I repeat that the commercial motive at work in this war equation is public enemy no. 1 as respects the true cause of real peace. The tax amendment should be adopted, or, far better, the Senate should suspend its regular order long enough to pass the so-called "Nye-Vandenberg resolution" this very afternoon and then let the tax amendment be explored, along with these other problems, by the proposed board of inquiry.

Mr. President, I ask that at the conclusion of my remarks a most illuminating article appearing in the Detroit News on this subject be printed in the RECORD, and that a pertinent editorial from the New York World-Telegram may also be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See exhibits 1 and 2.)

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, in conclusion, I urge that the pending amendment be agreed to, because it is the first effort that has yet been made in Congress to carry into effect the splendid report of the War Policies Commission, submitted 2 years ago upon the highest authority of the Government, and heretofore completely and utterly and disappointingly ignored; or I urge that the Senate take the larger view and the longer step and approve Senate Resolution 206 and send the tax amendment to this new body for review.

MUNITIONS MEN FACING SENATE INVESTIGATION—SPECTACULAR REVELATIONS ARE EXPECTED IF INQUIRY IS AUTHORIZED—MOVE LAUNCHED BY VANDENBERG AND NYE TO TAKE THE PROFIT OUT OF WAR

By Jay G. Hayden

WASHINGTON, March 17.—The most interesting and spectacular of all the parades of banking and industrial moguls which are marching across the Senate stage these days may be the investigation of munition makers, scheduled to take place during the coming summer.

The Committee on Military Affairs on Friday unanimously approved a resolution drafted jointly by Senators VANDENBERG and GERALD P. NYE (Republican) North Dakota, which calls for an examination of the munition-making business in all its phases, both domestic and foreign.

The resolution will be reported to the Senate Monday, and before the end of the week it almost certainly will be passed and the select committee of seven which it proposes to conduct the investigation appointed.

PLANS ARE LAID

Under the tentative plan the committee will be headed by Senators MORRIS SHEPPARD, Democrat, Texas, Chairman of the Military Committee, and M. M. LOGAN, Democrat, Kentucky, chairman of a military subcommittee which favorably reported the Vandenberg-Nye resolution.

The Republican members of the committee almost certainly will be VANDENBERG, NYE, and WILLIAM E. BORAH, of Idaho, if the latter can be persuaded to serve. BORAH has been a leader in crusading against excessive war profits throughout his nearly 30 years in the Senate, and his former chairmanship of the Foreign Relations Committee particularly qualifies him to deal with the international phases of the inquiry.

The resolution would authorize a thorough-going inquiry into the export and import of war materials. One of the surprises of the present situation is that the State Department, which heretofore has frowned on any such investigation on the ground it might injure our relations with foreign nations, has entered wholeheartedly into preparation of the Vandenberg-Nye resolution.

Not only is Secretary of State Cordell Hull thoroughly in sympathy with the project, but his actions have been taken as indicating that President Roosevelt also wants the investigators to go the limit.

INTEREST IN REVOLTS

There is, for example, the interesting question, frequently raised but never answered, as to the degree to which American munition makers have figured in the frequent revolutions in the nations of South and Central America.

The committee particularly is expected to inquire as to the relationship between loans made by American banks in South and Central America and orders for munitions placed with American manufacturers.

Further, it would like to know the extent to which military factions in China have been supplied with equipment by American plants, and, even more interesting, whether it is true as has been charged that the United States has supplied a considerable part of the war materials Japan has been so busily collecting.

It is remembered that a few years ago the country was startled by the disclosure that three of the largest American warship builders had paid William B. Shearer $25,000 to conduct propaganda at the naval conference at Geneva in opposition to any further limitation of armaments.

CITES ARMS DELEGATES

Senator BORAH, speaking in the Senate a few days ago, brought out the fact that a French delegate at the unsuccessful disarmament conference in 1932 was Charles Dumont, an official of the Schneider, Creusot firm of munition makers, and that the British delegation included Col. A. G. C. Dawney, brother of a director of Vickers-Armstrong, largest of the British armament manufacturers.

The committee would like to find out the extent to which munition manufacturers have figured in each of the disarmament conferences held since Charles Evans Hughes first convened the naval powers in Washington in 1921.

Senator BORAH also read into the RECORD excerpts from a recent magazine article, alleging that French munition makers joined with those of Germany to elevate to power Adolph Hitler, "the one man most capable of stirring up a new outbreak of international anarchy in Europe."

The article declared further that when Hitler came into power, the same French munition makers, through the newspaper which they control, "immediately broke out in a fever of denunciation against the Hitler regime and called for fresh guaranties of security."

"Capone or Dillinger are not more heartless and bloodthirsty than the man who builds up armaments in another nation for the purpose of sending his own people to the front that he may furnish the means by which to murder them", declared BORAH.

LAUNCHED BY LEGION

The present movement for taking the profit out of war armaments had its inception in a resolution adopted by the American Legion soon after its organization. Due to continuing demands of the ex-soldiers, Congress finally created a War Policies Commission, which, in 1929, after an exhaustive hearing, reported in favor of two major steps: first, to freeze all prices as of the day on which a war is declared, and, second, to assess a tax of 95 percent on all profits, during the war, in excess of the average during the previous 3 years.

Senator VANDENBERG was a member of this War Policies Commission, and his interest in the subject never has lagged since that time. In three successive Congresses he has introduced bills to put the Commission's proposals into effect, only to have them tied up in the Committee on Military Affairs.

During the time that Senator DAVID A. REED (Republican), Pennsylvania, a State in which manufacturing of war materials is a major industry, was Chairman of the Military Committee it was impossible even so much as to secure a hearing on the proposition—this despite the fact that REED himself had been a member of the War Policies Commission.

GOES STEP FARTHER

Senator VANDENBERG, in the present Congress, went farther. He introduced a resolution to have a new investigation which would not only review the work of the War Policies Commission but would examine also profits from the manufacture of war materials in peace time, particularly considering "the desirability of creating a Government monopoly in respect to the manufacture of armaments and munitions and other implements of war."

Senator NYE about the same time introduced a resolution, calling for investigation by the Foreign Relations Committee of American imports and exports of arms and all the circumstances surrounding them. These two resolutions have been combined to provide for the present select committee.

Discussing the proposed investigation, Senator VANDENBERG said:

"I believe in the maintenance of a completely adequate national defense so long as we live in an armed world. But I believe in promoting a disarmed world to the utmost limit. It is in this direction that peace will be found. Of all the war factors that need to be disarmed, the most powerful, and the most subtle, and the most deadly is the profit factor. If the commercial motive is cut out of war and defense, the greatest peace insurance on earth will have been established.

PROFIT PLAN BALKED

"Three years ago I was one of four Senators who sat on the official War Policies Commission, designed to equalize the burdens of war and take the profit out of war. We made great progress. Among other recommendations we set up a machinery for a profits tax in time of war which would take 95 percent of excess earnings from the time war was declared. But we never were able to legislate. The Treasury told us we must wait until we actually were at war before we could expect to write any such legislation. But that robs the movement of all its preventive ability.

"This time we intend to get results. Not only do we seek to limit war profits and equalize its burdens, but we intend to probe the whole field of propaganda which it is charged enters into competitive armaments and actually into the fomenting of war itself. Still more, we intend to study the fundamental question whether the manufacture of all armaments and munitions should or should not be a Government monopoly.

"In my view, this is the ultimate necessity. It cost $25,000 to kill a man in the World War, according to authentic figures. That is an utterly gruesome contemplation. It is horrible to contemplate death in any such terms; yet, so long as war is discussed in this sort of fiscal arithmetic, it is obvious that the commercial motive is a dangerous menace to all our peace aspirations."

The resolution as reported from committee provides $50,000 for expense of the investigation. It is the plan of Senators VANDENBERG and NYE first to employ a corps of expert investigators to examine books and records of munition-making concerns, together with the records of imports and exports, and data of the State and Commerce Departments bearing on the subject.

When witnesses are called, it is expected the committee will be armed with information which will make their testimony worth while. This is the technique of Senate investigations conducted recently, and it has proved vastly more effective than the "fishing expeditions" which congressional committees in the past were wont to conduct.

EXHIBIT 2

THE MUNITIONS ROOM

Without noise two Senate committees have been placing dynamite that may blow the lid off the munitions racket. First the Military Affairs Committee and now the Committee on Audit and Control have reported out the Nye-Vandenberg resolution for such an investigation.

Ever since the League of Nations Commission reported that the international armament ring was fomenting war, and the three chief American naval shipbuilding companies were caught wrecking the Geneva Disarmament Conference with their secret-paid agent Shearer, there has been need for a thorough inquiry in this country.

Recent reports of profiteering and alleged corruption in several industries seeking Army, Navy, and aircraft contracts under the vast new governmental expenditures have increased the incentive for an investigation.

Henry Ford declares that "the people in general don't want war, but it has been forced on them by scheming munition makers looking for enormous profits through the sale of arms."

That doubtless is an oversimplification of the cause of war, but the fact that the munitions racket is one of several major war forces is universally recognized by the experts.

Last week Sir Robert Hadfield, in congratulating English stockholders on the bountiful prospects for the armament business, said: "Happily a favorable turn of events has followed, with much more hopeful results. We are, indeed, devoutly thankful for present mercies, but may I add that for what I hope we are about to receive may the Lord make us truly thankful."

With less irreverence Americans may be thankful for the revelations concerning the munitions boom which, we hope, we are about to receive.

ROBBING THE PEOPLE OF LOUISIANA OF THEIR HOME-LOAN FUNDS

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, on the 9th day of April 1934 I had occasion to submit to the Senate some statistics relative to the operation of the home-loan bank in Louisiana. I submitted some figures which I wish to supplement and to republish for the illumination of the Senate.

Down in Louisiana, as I presented on the floor of the Senate a few days ago, a home-loan bank was opened up, and we found that it had been variously alined, as I disclosed to the Senate.

I said that they took the chief examiner out of one office which was dominated by a certain Sullivan by name; that they took the chief appraiser out of an office dominated by the same gentleman, and that they took many of the other employees in it, and finally we found that a very peculiar condition had arisen there.

I hold in my hand a statement showing a few of the loans we found had been made by a building and loan company controlled by the same man Sullivan, who has wrought havoc in these other matters. Here I have a statement of two loans of the building and loan company. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] was very much interested in this the other day.

I have a statement showing the loans of the Hibernia Homestead Association, run by Sullivan, made with the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. It shows that on the 29th day of March 1934 the home-loan bank put out $1,989.35 of its bonds, and they brought on the market $1,971. They were exchanged for home building and loan stock of the Hibernia Homestead Association, which cost only $800. The home owner got $800, the Government put out $1,971, and they took $1,171 of the amount to pay off to the racketeers.

Then there was a lady, perhaps she is a widow, by the name of Mrs. L. J. Kline, a distressed home owner, and on the 23d day of last month Mrs. Kline went to that building and loan organization in New Orleans in order to take up a loan amounting to $2,712.85. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation issued bonds of the exact amount—$2,712.85. They sold that on the market for $2,661. And how much did the home owner get? Why, Mr. President, they bought up the stock of the building and loan company for $1,120 on the market, that is at $40 a share, and they gave the profiteer $1,541—$300 more than the home owner.

In other words, Mr. President, we found these faults so rampant that we concluded that since they were going at such a rate, we should make a little examination into the man Sullivan who was the man behind the gun; and while they had allowed us to examine until we discovered out of the first 67 examinations 65 cases of downright fraud and rottenness to the core, the next thing, when we undertook to examine the Hibernia Homestead, which was run by Mr. Sullivan himself, the man who had put Mr. Leon Verges as the chief appraiser of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the man who had taken another employee from the race track and made him the contact man, who took a lawyer out of his office and made him the title examiner, who took a nephew of his partner in this business and made him the chief counsel, who took the man who was the president of the board of governors of the race track and made him the assistant manager, who took one of his political stool pigeons whom he tried to make the city attorney, but he could not make him city attorney, and made him the manager of the home loan—when we had developed 65 cases of rampant fraud, swindle, and rottenness in those funds, we went into Mr. John P. Sullivan's own Homestead, thinking at first that he would have taken the precaution not to have been so flagrant in his own transactions; but lo and behold, when we got there, the home loan in Louisiana lifted up the banner—they put up the shield—and announced that they would not allow the State bank examiner's department to examine into the matter that affected John P. Sullivan's Hibernia Homestead.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD after the remarks of the Senator from Louisiana shall have been concluded an article appearing in the Baltimore Sun of this date headed "The Home Loan Incident", by Frank R. Kent.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not hear the Senator. What did the Senator from Ohio request?

Mr. FESS. The request was to insert the article "The Home Loan Incident", by Frank R. Kent, appearing in the Baltimore Sun of this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The article appears at the conclusion of Mr. LONG's remarks.)

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I desire to show the Senate that there is no dispute of the facts I have just mentioned. They have been admitted to be correct. Yesterday they were admitted to be 100-percent true. That which I now send to the desk was admitted to be 100-percent true under oath. It was testified to by the banking department and it was accepted, was not denied by Mr. Habans himself on the witness stand. I send four tables to the desk and ask that they may be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibits 1, 2, 3, and 4.)

Mr. LONG. Then, Mr. President, the next thing we did was to get the banking department, when they held up the shield and said they would not allow Sullivan's own company to be examined, a company wherein we thought he would have had enough caution to have been a little discreet; but lo and behold, when they would not let the man from the State go in there to get the figures, we knew that there was something rotten in Denmark, so we managed to go to the mortgage records and get five cases, and we have the details on all five of them. Two of them we have reverified. I want the Senate to listen to a telegram concerning this one outfit, which I will read:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., April 11, 1934.

Hon. J. S. BROCK,
State Bank Commissioner of Louisiana,
c/o Hon. Huey P. Long, United States Senator:

P. L. Miller owed Hibernia Homestead Association $1,989.35, through transfers and retransfers, all dated March 29, 1934. Association accepted $2,000 par value its shares, in full settlement. H.O.L.C. made available in bonds total amount due association. Homestead shares surrendered worth on market $800; H.O.L.C. bonds worth $1,971; profit in transaction to A. L. Siezler—

That is the man whose name they put up——

$1,171. Eliminate profit to Siezler and shareholder forced to sell his shares could have received $98 for each hundred instead of $40 per hundred paid to him. Mrs. L. J. Kline owed $2,712.85 to Hibernia Homestead through transfers and retransfers, all dated March 23, 1934. Homestead, received $2,800 par value its shares in full settlement. H.O.L.C. made available in bonds full amount due association. Homestead shares worth on market $1,120; H.O.L.C. bonds worth $2,661; profit in transaction to John Henry Brown—

A man we have not been able to find. We have not been able to find a man named John Henry Brown, but we guess there is such a man as that. It is a very common-sounding name—fifteen hundred forty-one dollars. There are other transactions by this Homestead of a similar nature. Item asks for release of these transactions. Await your instructions.

W. E. WOOD, Assistant Supervisor.

Mr. President, we in Louisiana are not going to get more than 40 cents on the dollar of our money. They have set aside for us our quota down there for the purpose of relieving the home owners, but they have resorted to the rotten, swindling scheme of letting this racketeer put his chief appraiser in there to appraise the property; they have let him put the lawyer in there to examine the title; they have let him put the lawyer in there to make the abstracts; they have let him put his race-track henchman in there as the manager; they have let him put his stoolpigeon in there as manager; they have let him put his man from the race track and made him the contact man; and with that rigged up, Mr. President, he goes in there with his own building and loan concern, this racketeer—and it is complimenting him when I call him a racketeer—he goes in there with his own outfit and takes $800 worth of his own stock that is selling on the market for less than $800, and gets $1,971 worth of Government bonds, puts $1,191 down in his own pocket, and gives the poor little home owner $800 of the Government's money.

That is what we have to stand for in this land of the free and home of the brave. It is admitted; it is confessed. They know all about it. We are faced with such facts as I have stated, Mr. President. That is what we are standing for.

I am sending as a supplement to the tables I have already offered another statement, which I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 5.)

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am not through yet. I wanted to find out if this thing was being authorized. So I summoned as a witness on yesterday Mr. John H. Fahey, who is the Home Owners' Loan manager in Washington, D.C. I presented to him, not the last exhibit that I sent to the desk today, because up until that time we had been unable to get the facts out of the Hibernia Homestead, but I presented to Mr. John H. Fahey the other exhibit which I previously sent to the desk, containing 65 loans, 47 of which went to the profit of Stanley W. Ray. So I summoned Mr. Fahey, who is the head of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in Washington, and I presented to him these exhibits, and I asked Mr. Fahey to give his opinion of the matter after those exhibits had been explained to him, which are not now denied and which will not be denied. What did Mr. Fahey say? Eliminating the part of his answer that is not material, Mr. Fahey said:

I would not hesitate to say this, Senator, that if our office in New Orleans accepted from a speculator wholesale operations of this sort without taking it up in advance with this board and finding out what the facts were behind it, he had no business to do it.

Senator LONG. And if he had taken it up with your board, you would not have stood for it, would you?

Mr. FAHEY. I express only my own opinion. I certainly would do everything in my power to prevent it.

Senator LONG. You expressed an opinion to me this morning when I asked you about it that was more emphatic, did you not?

Mr. FAHEY. You can make it as emphatic as you please. I do not believe in that kind of transaction.

I am quoting from volume no. 7, page 653, of the hearing held before the Senate Finance Committee, dated the 11th day of April 1934.

Mr. President, on the floor of the Senate the other day the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] propounded an inquiry, and suggested that if what I had said here could be proved, there would be developed a startling state of facts. He wanted to know if it was possible to prove certain things about this character whom I have described, who is in control of the Home Loan Office, whose manipulations and fleecing of the Government and distressed home owners I have already shown by written evidence that is admitted, and who is denounced by Mr. Fahey. The Senator from Michigan wanted to know if it could be possible that the same man had placed three of his employees in the internal-revenue office and that some of those employees were also employed in his office, working there part of the day after they had worked in the internal-revenue office.

Well, what happened? Lo and behold, when we had tied the rope of evidence around them so closely that they could not escape from it, they took the stand themselves and admitted that he had put not two ladies in, as I had stated, but three, one of them being his private secretary. He testified and she testified that she works part of the time in the internal-revenue office, and keeps the books of this gentleman in the afternoon and is paid by him for the job that she is doing there. Another one whom we traced going into the internal-revenue office until 4 o'clock and then coming back to his office, admitted that she went back into his office 2 or 3 or perhaps 4 times a week and did her private work there, took care of her private chores there, writing her personal letters on the typewriter and doing other work. Another one we proved had made application for a position and had stated in the application, "Resigned to accept this position"; and we proved that it had been agreed by the coterie headed by Sullivan that she was to be given the job even before she left his own office. We proved that another one by the name of George P. Hayman had been put into the internal-revenue office from the race track, the gambling institution which this gentleman owns and controls or now claims to have had mortgaged to him.

Hayman went into the internal-revenue office to work up a case against a man by the name of Gay, and when he could not do that he was transferred to the office of the Home Loan Corporation from the internal-revenue office, into which he had been put from the race track. Thus it has been proven that four of them, not three of them, had gone out of Sullivan's office and the race track into the internal revenue collector's office, proving by the testimony of two of them themselves that they went back to Sullivan's office and did work, and by one of them that she was still paid for doing work in the office there which she had left. Yet we are held up to denunciation; and in that State, with its people needing help, with our home-loan funds trafficked with in such a manner that the Hibernia Homestead, operated by this same character, takes $1,194 out of $2,000, or thereabouts, which the Government puts up, we are held to that kind of a condition, notwithstanding the statement in writing that I have here from Mr. Fahey that he does not approve of that kind of thing and he wants to do all in his power to prevent it.

Who keeps these men in there? Who is it that is responsible for the situation? With the head of the Home Loan Corporation of the United States denouncing what is going on, who is it that is keeping them there? Who is it that is keeping them there today? Why is it that they cannot be gotten rid of?

Why is it that they are taking 60 cents out of every dollar of the Government's money that is supposed to go to the distressed and destitute home owner, money that has been put up by the Government and that is supposed to take care of the poor man who is in distress to keep his home? If a man will steal 60 cents out of every dollar of this kind of money, he is a great deal worse than the man who will go into a grave and take a nickel off a dead man's eye. I would rather have a grave robber, 10 to 1, than to have to stand in Louisiana today for this kind of men who are taking 60 cents out of every dollar and robbing the home owner and robbing the United States Government of it.

Mr. Fahey says that this is a most outrageous thing, that he disapproves of it, that he would not have it at all, and yet when we get to the Hibernia Homestead, owned by this character, Sullivan, from whose concern is appointed the chief examiner, from whose office is appointed the abstractor, whose partner's nephew was made the attorney, from whose race-track associates is appointed the chairman of the board of directors of his race track in one position, who appointed his stool-pigeon candidate for city attorney in another position, who installed a man from the race track as contact man with the public, we find that he goes to his own Hibernia Homestead corporation with a widow's application for a $2,600 loan, of which she gets $1,100 and $1,500 goes to the profit of the racketeer, putting that deal through the Hibernia Homestead, which was in it. We traced it right in his teeth this time.

So it happens that we find that of the $2,000 of stock they put in there and that was selling on the market for $800 on that day, 17 of the 20 shares were owned by the secretary of his Homestead; so that seventeen twentieths of the amount of money made—$1,100 out of $1,700—actually was in the hands of the secretary of his Homestead.

Mr. President, those are the conditions we are having to put up with; that is what we are having to put up with in my State; that it what he have to stand for. It is denounced on the one hand, and yet we have got a white cloth up in front of the Home Loan Corporation to keep us from finding out anything else about Sullivan's transactions. They have put up the sheet. Out of the first 67 cases advanced we found downright stealing and crookedness, according to the estimate of Mr. Fahey, which I have here—in 65 out of the 67. Then, we went to investigate the Hibernia Homestead, Sullivan's own concern, of which his brother-in-law is president and which he testified he controls; but when we attempted to find fraud there, lo and behold, it was discovered that they had some kind of a special ruling that prevented the State banking department of the State of Louisiana from finding out any further facts. No; they must find out no more facts. When we came to the place where we had reached the pivotal point as to the gentleman there who had operated the gambling race track, whose business partner and brother was one of the directors employed in the wire service that went into every gambling house in the city, whose chief of police went on the witness stand and testified that he closed down the handbooks when Sullivan's track was operating, in order that the gambling houses would have to send their clients into the race track to do their betting, the shield of silk was stretched in front, and there has been forbidden any more disclosures about him.

"Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm." We are not to see further into the matter. We had been told that we were going to be allowed to go and find out the balance; but I do not know whether we would be or not.

Mr. President, once I was denounced on the score of this man because I permitted him in my organization. The letter which I hold in my hand was printed throughout the South. It was extolled as true by the newspapers of that State, including nearly all of them who were opposed to me at the time; particularly the sole remaining newspaper syndicates gave it both their column and their editorial approval. I had to stand it at the time. I think Senators will want to hear it, and I am going to send it to the desk and ask the clerk to read it as audibly as he possibly can and not too fast.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

[State organization headquarters for HUEY P. LONG. Harvey E. Ellis, State campaign manager; phones 103, 203, 303]

(Strictly personal and confidential)

COVINGTON, LA., April 20, 1927.

HON. HUEY P. LONG,
Shreveport, La.

MY DEAR HUEY: Maloney recently jockeyed Sullivan into a pocket and Sullivan was forced to support you on your own terms. He had no other place to go. I tried to make this plain to you. You know my opinion of Sullivan. He stands for three things: Racing, gambling, and whisky. Were I opposing you, Sullivan would be the issue that you would have to meet, and I would win.

I do not know what, if any, commitments you have made for Sullivan's support; but unless you had a clear, definite understanding with him that he was to stay in the background and not take a prominent part in the campaign, and that you were to be free, if conditions arose, to make such declarations and commitments as you saw fit in regard to the racing and gambling evil in New Orleans, you have, in my opinion, placed yourself at a very serious disadvantage, regardless of the support that Sullivan may bring, and at best it is going to be difficult to make the general public believe that you have not made commitments satisfactory to Sullivan to protect racing and gambling in New Orleans.

Dog and horse racing and gambling will be one, if not the principal issue in the coming gubernatorial campaign, and you are going to be forced to make public your position on this issue, and if Sullivan has been permitted to take a leading part in directing your city organization and you do not make a declaration that is satisfactory to Sullivan and the interests he represents, Sullivan will, at an inopportune time, bolt and disorganize your organization. If you yield to Sullivan as a matter of expediency, you will lose the respect and confidence of the people of this State, which are worth more than a thousand governorships. Your hands will be tied, and, even if you are elected Governor, your administration will be embarrassed and you will be unable to give this State a clean, progressive, fearless, honest administration, which is the reward that I hope to claim for my work in your behalf.

I have made many pledges and promises to people who were disinclined to support you, as to what your position would be on all great moral public questions, and these people will hold me responsible for your actions in the event that you are elected Governor.

I understood and I thought that I had made it clear that I would be consulted before you even agreed to accept Sullivan's support, in order that I could protect you and keep your hands free, which I could and would have done.

Now, I am unwilling to go any further until I hear from you fully and definitely as to what commitments, if any, you have made to Sullivan, what understanding, if any, you have, either expressed or implied, and how you intend to meet the dog, horse-race, and gambling issues in the State of Louisiana, and particularly in the city of New Orleans.

Very sincerely yours,

HARVEY E. ELLIS.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I send to the desk my reply to that letter, under date of April 21, 1907. I shall not take the time to have it read, but I wish it to be inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks. The body of the reply will show, as published coincidentally with the letter just read, that whenever the minute arrived that the gambling institutions of that city and of that State under Sullivan undertook to take control of Louisiana and to operate in violation of the law, he would no longer be allowed to have anything to do with the politics of the administration of which I was the head. The record that has been disclosed shows whether or not that promise was kept.

I send these letters to the desk because, with other documents previously submitted, they will disclose that every remark that has been made on the floor of the Senate by me has not only been proved but has been admitted, not by their undertaking to have generalities to obscure it but by cold letters and documents and by the cold fact that one has to admit his business, the kind of business he is in, the kind of contrivances he is running, and exactly what is being done there, all shown to be in strict accordance with the representations and statements I have made here on the floor of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter referred to by the Senator from Louisiana will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

SHREVEPORT, LA., April 21, 1927.

(Strictly personal and confidential)

Hon. HARVEY E. ELLIS,
Covington, La.

MY DEAR HARVEY: I have your letter of April 20, in which you speak of Maloney, Sullivan, dog races, horse races, whisky, etc. I have not secured the support of either Maloney or Sullivan at this time, although I once had the promise of Maloney, which apparently is not recollected by him. I have made no one any promises and will not make any, either expressed, implied, or otherwise. Further than this, my position on the questions of gambling, whisky, and others have been established so long and so openly repeated, that it would be useless for me to enumerate them now. I have expressed them to you most thoroughly and they met with your accord.

It is true that in my consistent antiring position that I have worked under the same campaigns against the old-established New Orleans ring, with all parties opposing them, regardless of what may have been their convictions and opinions on other questions. Sullivan has frequently been in this antiring line-up, and all of us have fought under the same banner when he was. For instance, 95 percent of the ministers and bishops of this State, Sullivan, and myself (as well as yourself) fought with him, leading the city fight in 1920. Four years before that time I supported Thomas C. Barrett and the prohibition ticket, you recall, when Sullivan, Maloney, Sanders, Behrman, Carbajal, and yourself supported the other side. While Paul Maloney was usually with the old organization for the part of the time I was fighting them, when he has been away from them and under the banner under which I have always fought, naturally I have been with him, too. The chances are if he stays away from them he will stay with me, or if he goes back to them he will be against me. Also, the chances are, I should imagine, that if Sullivan should make a fight against conditions that exist under the ring rule that he would naturally have to come to me, but that if he decided to fight for them that he would have to be against me.

I never saw or bet on a horse race in my lifetime. I never saw or bet on a dog race in my lifetime. Since I was a 12-year-old youth, my stand on prohibition has been a stand of open public record.

All parties who ever supported me must know of my consistent public position; never has a promise or assurance which I made to the public been violated in my entire career; no one can misunderstand me. Anyone supporting me knows by a record just whom it is he supports and for what he stands. They further know that there has been no vane or weather marks to record changes in my attitude or in the persons with whom I am affiliated or whose support I accept. All come on terms of HUEY LONG which, in this State, with pardonable pride, I must say, rather represents the highest order of principle and service, rather than the title of many particular designated persons.

Since the year 1908, when as a 15-year-old boy, I took my stand and handled a ward against the ring ticket being run in this State, I have the honor to say that I have varied not a jot nor tittle, neither back nor forth. Many there are who have, however, but I have never joined the side when I thought committed to the rule of a people's subjugation, or pronounced myself that way, and naturally had to fight under the banner which I have never left.

Yours sincerely,

HUEY P. LONG.

THE HOME LOAN INCIDENT

By Frank R. Kent

WASHINGTON, April 11.—No clearer case of devotion to the spoils system has ever been given than that of House Democrats in the vote yesterday on the amended Home Owners' Loan Corporation bill. It was not only a degrading act but a stupid one. It ought to arouse public resentment. It exhibits the House leaders, who prate about patriotism and public spirit, as wholly hollow and insincere.

The facts are these: Senator NORRIS, of Nebraska, had inserted an amendment which provided that "no partisan political test shall be permitted, but all agents and employees shall be appointed or promoted solely on the basis of merit and efficiency." It is hard to see how any man who believes in decent government, or wants the administration to succeed, could oppose that. One great weakness of the H.O.L.C. is that it is so largely manned by politicians. In many States it is entirely in their hands, and in some, notably Illinois, this has led to festering abuses.

The Board endorsed the Norris amendment. The President endorsed it and the Senate passed it. Mr. Roosevelt went further, and personally communicated with Chairman STEAGALL, of the House Banking Committee, expressing hope the House would concur. There seemed no ground upon which it could be decently opposed. Yet the House committee deliberately dropped the Norris amendment, and reported the bill without it. Under the rule by which it was considered last Wednesday no amendment not proposed by the committee could be offered on the floor. There was no chance to vote on the Norris proposal. This did not, however, prevent discussion, and a stirring speech pointing out the devastating effects of the committee's action was made by Representative JOHN HOLLISTER, of Ohio, who believed the whole purpose of the plan can be defeated by the mire of politics in which it is steeped. At that time there was no way to put the House on record and the bill was almost unanimously passed as it came from the committee.

But a way was found yesterday when a motion was offered directing the House conferees to restore the Norris amendment. On this a roll call was taken. It was defeated by 230 to 116. All the negative votes were Democrats. Thus, the Democratic House proclaimed itself unwilling to curb its appetite for pie even at the risk of crippling an important administration policy, even when proposed by friends of the administration, even when adopted by the Democratic Senate, even when requested by the Democratic President. A more indefensible act has not been committed in Congress for a long time.

The primary purpose of the bill was to give Federal guaranty to the principal as well as interest of the home loan bonds, which the corporation exchanges for distressed mortgages. There was, however, an amendment put in that still further shocks those who believe most of the mortgages taken over will be a complete loss. This amendment sets aside $200,000,000, which the corporation is authorized to loan in cash for maintenance, repair, rebuilding, and modernization. This, it is claimed, ridiculously enlarges the scope of the scheme. It means that after the Government has taken over a mortgage upon which neither principal, interest, nor taxes can be paid, it will then lend to the mortgagee money to repair and maintain his home. Under this, it is held, a man cannot only unload his mortgage on the Government but borrow cash to paint his porch or put in a new kitchen sink. All the Government asks for this additional cash is another lien on the property.

It is a new idea that got by without discussion. The contention is that this extension of H.O.L.C. authority can ultimately have but two results. Either the Government, forced to foreclose, will find itself the owner of literally innumerable modernized and repaired houses, with which it will not know what to do; or Congress will wipe out all the obligations, leaving the home owner with his house free of mortgage, repaired and modernized at Government expense. Most incline to the latter view. They see another organized minority in the making, which will be able to put pressure on Congressmen to be relieved from paying the Government, just as the veterans do to have their pay restored.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I came into the Chamber I was advised that an amendment proposed to the pending bill by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] was under consideration. I am in sympathy with the general purpose of the amendment but it occurs to me that in the consideration of a revenue bill, limited in its scope and in its duration, it is not a proper vehicle to carry the important amendment offered by the Senator. My recollection is that several weeks ago a resolution was offered by a number of Senators, including the Senator from North Dakota, which called for an investigation of the manufacture, sale, and distribution of munitions and implements of war. The resolution, as I recall, was comprehensive and went far beyond what I have just indicated. Under that resolution a study would be made of questions relating to war, and as ancillary to the same, a study of what legislation should be enacted for the purpose of raising revenues to meet military expenditures.

The amendment offered by the Senator could, with propriety, be referred to this committee in order that it might consider what legislation should be enacted in the event of war looking to the conscription of property to meet the expenses of such conflict.

Several years ago I offered in the Senate a measure which, in effect, declared that in the event of war all property should be at the disposal of the Government in order to enable it to successfully prosecute such war. I think a number of other amendments, similar in character, have been offered since then.

I believe that the general sentiment in the United States is that in the event of war our resources shall be devoted to the cause of our country. The American people, upon many occasions, have demonstrated their devotion to our country, and their willingness to surrender property, as well as to give their lives, in the defense of this Republic. It has been my view that heavy as were the burdens of taxation imposed during the war, larger taxes should have been imposed upon those who derived enormous profits. Many corporations, as well as individuals, derived colossal profits from their enterprises by reason of the war. Even before the United States entered the war it is known that great fortunes were made by many corporations and individuals in the United States. They supplied the Allied, as well as the Central Powers, with commodities of various kinds, as well as war munitions, from which they derived stupendous profits, and after our country entered the war the profits which flowed into the coffers of various corporations, as well as individuals, were entirely too great. It has been claimed that several thousand millionaires were made during the war.

It is unfortunate that during periods of conflict such as that through which the world passed, corporations and individuals should be enriched and that hundreds of millions should be added to the wealth of those who furnished supplies and munitions made necessary by war activities.

If the world should again be called upon to pass through the tragedies and horrors of a great war, legislation should be enacted that would prevent profits from being reaped and war profiteers and millionaires being developed.

I repeat, Mr. President, that the amendment offered by the Senator expresses, I believe, the views of a great majority of the people, and I have no doubt that in the event of war, legislation would promptly be enacted that would deny to individuals or corporations opportunities for profit from the suffering and death of American boys. War is hateful and horrible and it must not return profits and fortunes to individuals and corporations.

I sincerely hope that the resolution to which I have referred and which was offered by a number of Senators several weeks ago will be passed and that the comprehensive investigation called for by the resolution will be made. As I have stated, the amendment now before us would logically and properly fall within the purview of such investigation.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I am very anxious, and I know other Senators are very anxious, to move ahead as rapidly as possible with the revenue bill now before us. I think we can make a good deal of headway tonight. I would make this suggestion. I do not know whether it will meet with the approval of other Senators, but I see no objection to this course. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] referred to a resolution now on the calendar providing for the appointment of a committee to investigate this question. I would suggest that that resolution be considered and adopted at this time and that the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota be referred to that committee when it shall be appointed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, that would be agreeable to me.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I know there are many Senators who would like to have a chance to vote upon the pending amendment, and yet I realize there are good reasons why there should be wider consideration given to the sort of legislation that is required. For my own individual part, I shall be quite willing to have that course taken.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope it may be taken.

Mr. NYE. Then I will move——

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if the Senator will merely ask unanimous consent for immediate consideration of the resolution, I think that will accomplish the purpose.

MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF MUNITIONS OF WAR

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 623, being Senate Resolution 206, providing for the appointment of a special committee to investigate the subject matter which we have had under discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S.Res. 206) submitted by Mr. NYE and Mr. VANDENBERG on March 12, 1934, and reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with amendments, on page 2, line 2, to strike out "five" and insert "seven"; in line 5, after the word "individuals", to insert "firms, associations"; and in line 6, after the word "corporations", to insert "and all other agencies"; on page 3, line 11, after the word "committee", to insert "or any subcommittee thereof"; and in line 21, to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$15,000", so as to make the resolution read:

Whereas the influence of the commercial motive is an inevitable factor in considerations involving the maintenance of the national defense; and

Whereas the influence of the commercial motive is one of the inevitable factors often believed to stimulate and sustain wars; and

Whereas the Seventy-first Congress, by Public Resolution No. 98, approved June 27, 1930, responding to the long-standing demands of American war veterans speaking through the American Legion for legislation "to take the profit out of war", created a War Policies Commission, which reported recommendations on December 7, 1931, and on March 7, 1932, to decommercialize war and to equalize the burdens thereof; and

Whereas these recommendations never have been translated into the statutes: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a special committee of the Senate shall be appointed by the Vice President to consist of seven Senators, and that said committee be, and is hereby, authorized and directed—

(a) To investigate the activities of individuals, firms, associations, and of corporations and all other agencies in the United States engaged in the manufacture, sale, distribution, import, or export of arms, munitions, or other implements of war; the nature of the industrial and commercial organizations engaged in the manufacture of or traffic in arms, munitions, or other implements of war; the methods used in promoting or effecting the sale of arms, munitions, or other implements of war; the quantities of arms, munitions, or other implements of war imported into the United States and the countries of origin thereof, and the quantities exported from the United States and the countries of destination thereof; and

(b) To investigate and report upon the adequacy or inadequacy of existing legislation, and of the treaties to which the United States is a party, for the regulation and control of the manufacture of and traffic in arms, munitions, or other implements of war within the United States, and of the traffic therein between the United States and other countries; and

(c) To review the findings of the War Policies Commission and to recommend such specific legislation as may be deemed desirable to accomplish the purposes set forth in such findings and in the preamble to this resolution; and

(d) To inquire into the desirability of creating a Government monopoly in respect to the manufacture of armaments and munitions and other implements of war, and to submit recommendations thereon.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee or any subcommittee thereof is authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Congress until the final report is submitted, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $15,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, is the proposed investigation to be conducted by a Senate committee?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. The resolution was reported favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs and then referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. The latter committee reported the resolution favorably with certain amendments, among which was one reducing the amount from $50,000 to $15,000.

Mr. FESS. The Committee to Audit and Control has already approved the resolution?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; it has been reported favorably by that committee with certain amendments which have just been agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that the amendment submitted by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] may be referred to the special committee provided for in the resolution just adopted when the committee shall be appointed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 606) to authorize the waiver or remission of certain coal-lease rentals, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2032) for the relief of Richard A. Chavis, requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. HILL of Alabama, Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois, and Mr. CARTER of Wyoming were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 828) to authorize boxing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mrs. NORTON, Mr. PALMISANO, and Mr. WHITLEY were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 163. An act for the relief of Capt. Guy M. Kinman;

S. 3022. An act to amend sections 3 and 4 of an act of Congress entitled "An act for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska", approved June 26, 1906, as amended by act of Congress approved June 6, 1924, and for other purposes; and

S. 3209. An act limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in the case of United States of America against Weirton Steel Co. and other cases.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I should like, if possible, to clear up one or two matters before we take up the next subject, which will lead to debate.

I send to the desk a clarifying amendment to the substitute offered by me, on behalf of the committee, for the surtax amendment. The substitute was offered and adopted on April 4.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the second bracket, after the phrase "7 percent", there should be inserted "in addition."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, in view of the adoption of the so-called "Borah amendment" as to consolidated returns, it is necessary to make certain clerical changes at other places in the bill; and I ask unanimous consent that these changes may be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 155, it is proposed to strike out lines 10 to 13, both inclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 158, it is proposed to strike out lines 10 to 13, both inclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

On page 161 it is proposed to strike out lines 11 to 14, both inclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 242, line 19, it is proposed to strike out "sections 131 and 141" and insert "section 131."

The amendment was agreed to.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 76, it is proposed to strike out "this act or" in line 2, and again in line 5, and again in lines 10 and 11, and again in line 14.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask that the order I send to the desk may be entered. It is the usual order following the consideration of each of these bills authorizing certain changes to be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order will be read.

The order was read and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That in the engrossing of the amendments of the Senate to the pending bill (H.R. 7835) the Secretary of the Senate be authorized:

(1) To make such changes in the table of contents as may be necessary to make such table conform to the action of the Senate in respect of the bill;

(2) To make such clerical changes as may be necessary to the proper numbering and lettering of the various portions of the bill, and to secure uniformity in the bill in respect of typography and indentation; and

(3) To amend or strike out cross-references that have become erroneous or superflous, and to insert cross-references made necessary by reason of changes made by the Senate.

Ordered further, That the said bill, when passed, be printed showing the Senate amendments numbered.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, there are two committee amendments remaining that have not as yet been acted upon. One is with reference to "hot oil", under which informants are to be paid something. The committee struck out the House provision. I do not think they knew much about it, or made much investigation. I should like to have the Senate act on the matter. The committee recommended striking out the House provision.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, is it the Senator's desire that this matter should go to conference, or otherwise?

Mr. HARRISON. I think it would be very well for it to go to conference. Only by striking out the House text can it go to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 210 it is proposed to strike out lines 1 to 24, inclusive, and on page 211 it is proposed to strike out lines 1 to 8, inclusive, in the following words:

SEC. 514. Penalties and awards to informers with respect to illegally produced petroleum: (a) Any person liable for tax on any income from illegally produced petroleum, who willfully fails to make return showing such income within the time prescribed by law, or 30 days after the enactment of this act, whichever expires later, shall, in addition to all other penalties prescribed by law, be liable to a civil penalty of $500 plus $50 for each day during which such failure continues.

(b) Any person not an officer of the United States who furnishes to the Commissioner or any collector original information leading to the recovery from any other person of any penalty under this section may be awarded and paid by the Commissioner a compensation of one half the penalty so recovered, as determined by the Commissioner.

(c) As used in this section, the term "income from illegally produced petroleum" means any income (not shown on a return made within the time prescribed by law, or 30 days after the enactment of this act, whichever expires later) arising out of any sale or purchase of crude petroleum withdrawn from the ground subsequent to January 1, 1932, in violation of any State or Federal law (not including withdrawal in violation of any code of fair competition approved under the National Industrial Recovery Act or illegal withdrawal, the penalties for which have been mitigated or satisfied in pursuance of law prior to the enactment of this act), or arising out of any fee derived from acting as agent for any seller or purchaser in connection with a sale or purchase of such petroleum or products thereof, or any amount illegally received by any person charged with the enforcement of law with respect to such petroleum or products thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, there is one other provision, with reference to the produce tax, on which I understand the Senator from North Dakota desires to be heard. I should like to get some idea about what other amendments there are.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to make income-tax returns public records. I understand that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has an amendment with relation to the taxation of tax-exempt securities. Those are the only amendments about which I can inform the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] has an amendment and that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] has an amendment. Unless some Senator raises an objection, it is my purpose to accept the amendment that is to be offered by the Senator from Minnesota. We might dispose of some of these matters now, and tomorrow take up the other subjects that are to be discussed briefly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Has the Senator abandoned any hope of disposing of the bill today?

Mr. HARRISON. I really do not think we can dispose of the bill today.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In that case it will be perfectly agreeable to me to withhold until tomorrow the offer of the amendment in which I am interested.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], whom I do not see in the Chamber at the present time, has a very important amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood that the Senator from Missouri was planning to offer that amendment and that it might involve some discussion.

Mr. NORRIS. It will involve some discussion.

Mr. ASHURST. On what particular subject is the amendment?

Mr. NORRIS. On the taxation of what are now called "tax-exempt" securities.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from Minnesota offer his amendment now?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes, Mr. President. I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 237, after line 20, it is proposed to insert the following:

Section 2 of the Liquor Tax Act of 1934 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. Paragraphs (3) and (4) of subdivision (a) of section 600 of the Revenue Act of 1918, as amended (relating to the tax on distilled spirits generally and the tax on distilled spirits diverted for beverage purposes) (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 26, sec. 1150 (a) (1) and (2)), are amended to read as follows:

"'(3) On and after January 1, 1928, and until the effective date of title I of the Liquor Taxing Act of 1934, $1.10 on each proof-gallon or wine-gallon when below proof and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such proof- or wine-gallon; and

"'(4) On and after the effective date of title I of the Liquor Taxing Act of 1934, $2 on each proof-gallon or wine-gallon when below proof and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such proof- or wine-gallon.

"'Provided, however, That on and after the effective date of the Revenue Act of 1934 any manufacturer finding it necessary to use alcohol (other than denatured or specially denatured alcohol) in the arts or sciences or in the manufacture, extraction, solution, or preservation of any article of commerce which when manufactured and prepared for the market is unfit for use for intoxicating-beverage purposes, may use the same under regulations which shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and upon satisfying the collector of internal revenue for the district wherein he resides or carries on business that he has complied with such regulations and that such alcohol has been used therein for no other purposes than hereinabove stated, and exhibiting and delivering up the stamps which show that a tax has been paid thereon, shall be entitled to receive from the Treasury of the United States a rebate or repayment of 90 cents on each proof-gallon or wine-gallon of alcohol when below proof and a proportionate amount at a like rate on all fractional parts of such proof- or wine-gallon: Provided, however, That such rebate or repayment shall not be made in the case of any alcohol withdrawn from bonded warehouses prior to the effective date of the Revenue Act of 1934.

"'The Secretary of the Treasury shall forthwith prescribe the regulations provided for herein for the supervision and enforcement of this act.'"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD].

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I simply desire to appeal to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to take this amendment to conference, because it is a matter which ought to be given consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to join in that request.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the committee gave consideration to the question of alcohol going into medicinal preparations. We received many telegrams from over all the country with reference to the subject. I thought it was another amendment that the Senator was going to offer. I did not know it was this one; but I am willing to let the amendment go to conference and be considered there.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question about the last sentence of the amendment. There seems to be a blank there.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The last sentence of the printed amendment has been stricken out.

Mr. COUZENS. The whole paragraph?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. No; the regulations are provided for.

Mr. COUZENS. May I ask that the clerk read again the last section of the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will reread the last section of the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Provided, however, That such rebate or repayment shall not be made in the case of any alcohol withdrawn from bonded warehouses prior to the effective date of the Revenue Act of 1934.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall forthwith prescribe the regulations provided for herein for the supervision and enforcement of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the amendment has been modified from the form in which it was originally printed.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I send to the desk another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 236, line 10, it is proposed to strike out "$20" and insert "$75", so as to read:

SEC. 607. Tax on furs: The tax imposed by section 604 of the Revenue Act of 1932 shall not apply to articles sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer, after the date of the enactment of this act, for less than $75.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, it will be necessary to reconsider the action on the committee amendment that was agreed to the other day in order to present this amendment; and I hope the Senator from Mississippi will consent to have that done.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent that the action on the committee amendment may be reconsidered for the purpose of considering the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and the vote whereby the committee amendment was agreed to is reconsidered.

The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota has talked to members of the committee with reference to this amendment with regard to fur coats which are used in the northern part of the country. May I ask the Senator from Minnesota whether such coats cost $75 or more?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Not much of a coat can be purchased for $75, but a person can get along with a $75 fur coat. The amendment will save a poor man who has to have a fur coat for himself or his wife from paying a tax upon what is really a necessary article. Though not of universal use in the country, in the northern half of the United States fur coats are necessities for the people.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to add my appeal to that of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Minnesota talked to me about this matter. We have had a great deal of trouble about the fur section of the bill. I had hoped we might be able to strike it out altogether, but we cannot lose the revenue. If the Senate wishes to adopt this amendment, it will be perfectly agreeable to me up to a value of $75.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, has the Senator from Mississippi made an estimate of the amount of revenue that will be lost in case this amendment shall be adopted?

Mr. HARRISON. We received $7,000,000 of revenue from the whole fur tax. The experts think that if this amendment should be adopted we probably would lose around $2,000,000 of revenue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. I offer an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 127, after line 4, it is proposed to insert the following new subsection:

(d) Under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, every corporation subject to taxation under this title shall, in its return, submit a list of the names of all officers and employees of such corporation and the respective amounts paid to them during the taxable year of the corporation by the corporation as salary, commission, bonus, or other compensation for personal services rendered, if the aggregate amount so paid to the individual is in excess of $15,000. The Secretary of the Treasury shall submit an annual report to Congress compiled from the returns made containing the names of, and amounts paid to, each such officer and employee and the name of the paying corporation.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will agree to this amendment, because already the corporations have to furnish the Secretary of the Treasury a salary list. This amendment would merely direct that the Secretary of the Treasury shall transmit that list of salaries, where they amount to $15,000 or more, and of bonuses of $15,000 or more, so that they might be published.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I was very sorry the other amendment was voted down a day or two ago, but this will compensate in part.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] whether we cannot now take up the produce amendment and get it out of the way?

Mr. FRAZIER. I am perfectly willing to proceed at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 237, after line 11, it is proposed by the committee to insert the following amendment:

SEC. 611. Stamp tax on sales of produce for future delivery: (a) Effective on the day following the enactment of this act subdivision 4 of schedule A of title VIII of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, is amended by striking out "5 cents" wherever appearing in such subdivision, and inserting in lieu thereof "1 cent".

(b) Section 726 (c) of the Revenue Act of 1932 is repealed.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are very anxious to be present when this amendment is discussed. I now notice that neither of those Senators is present, so I hope some other amendment may be taken up.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to have an amendment I desire to offer considered at this time.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well.

Mr. NORRIS. When the last revenue act was before the Senate, the question was raised of the exemption from taxation of some of the farmers' cooperative organizations. A construction had been placed upon the existing law to which objection was made. The matter was referred by resolution to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate. That committee took considerable testimony on the Senate resolution which bore on the subject. As a result of the hearings, at which appeared the representatives of the farm organizations as well as the representatives of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, no objection was raised to the change, except that the representatives of the Bureau of Internal Revenue contended that a construction which they had placed upon the law was a correct one.

It was a controverted question. In order to settle it, I was directed, as chairman of the committee, to propose an amendment to the revenue bill which was about to be brought before the Senate. I did that. We took it up in the Senate; and after some debate on it and a full explanation, the amendment was agreed to. It went into the measure. Most Senators thought it remained in the bill. As a matter of fact, it was one of the many amendments which went out in conference. I am presenting now the same amendment, and I send it to the clerk's desk and ask that it be reported.

I might say that while I do not remember the exact figures it would result in a very small loss in revenue. The committee was of the opinion that the decision of the Bureau of Internal Revenue was too severe, that it was not correct, but we felt that the way to remedy the situation was to insert an amendment in the revenue bill, and that is how it came before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 53, after line 16, it is proposed to insert the following:

Neither shall any such association be denied exemption because it does not keep ledger accounts with nonmembers of the business it transacts with such nonmembers, but it shall only be required to keep such records of its business with nonmembers as will show the actual business done with such nonmembers; and provided further, that the profits, if any, derived from its business with nonmembers in any fiscal year of the association shall be allowed to remain in the business of the association, subject to the right of such nonmember to use his share upon a patronage basis to qualify as a member of the association.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska will recall that this matter was debated at length in 1932. As I understand, it is the same proposal that was presented by the Senator at that time.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senate adopted the amendment then.

Mr. NORRIS. It did.

Mr. HARRISON. And it went out in conference.

Mr. NORRIS. It went out in conference.

Mr. HARRISON. It went out in conference at that time because the conferees adopted the view of the Treasury Department.

Mr. NORRIS. I might discuss the matter fully, since I know all about it as far as the arguments go; but, as a matter of fact, some of the representatives of the Bureau of Internal Revenue at that time were unfriendly. I do not go any higher than those representatives, because I do not blame the administration. I had an agreement with the representatives of the Bureau, and with the attorney for the farmers-union elevators in my State, and I thought the whole controversy was to be settled. It was not settled, because of the unfriendliness of some of the officials of the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

I have reason to believe, from my conversations and from my correspondence with the present officials of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, that they would put a construction on the law different from that put on it by their predecessors, and no amendment of this kind would be necessary if it had not been that they were confronted with the old record, and they want some legislation in order to meet the situation.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I am willing to let the matter go to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if the Senator from North Dakota is ready to proceed with the produce matter, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] is here. Following that I think I shall move that the Senate take a recess, if it will meet with the approval of the Senate. I should like to get this matter out of the way tonight.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, may I supplement the Senator's statement by saying that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] wanted to be present when this matter was considered.

Mr. HARRISON. I sent for the Senator from South Carolina, who is very much in favor of the Senate committee action, and he came to the Chamber, but had a conference to attend, so he left again, and I promised to send for him if it was necessary. I had hoped that the Senator from North Dakota might allow the amendment to be adopted, and let us try it out this way for a while.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I do not intend to make any serious objection to the adoption of the amendment, but I want to speak on it before it is adopted. I am perfectly willing to speak tonight, or when the Senate meets tomorrow.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the pending bill, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table. I should also like to have the amendment printed in the RECORD.

The amendment was ordered to be printed and to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 45, to strike out, beginning in line 23, down through line 5, on page 46, and insert:

"(a) Returns made under this title upon which the tax has been determined by the Commissioner shall constitute public records and shall be open to public examination and inspection under rules and regulations promulgated by the Secretary and approved by the President. Whenever a return is open to the inspection of any person, a certified copy thereof shall, upon request, be furnished to any person under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. The Commissioner may prescribe a reasonable fee for furnishing such copy.

"(b) (1) The Secretary and any officer or employee of the Treasury Department, upon request from the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, the Committee on Finance of the Senate, or a select committee of the Senate or House specially authorized to investigate returns by a resolution of the Senate or House, or a joint committee so authorized by concurrent resolution, shall furnish such commitee sitting in executive session with any data of any character contained in or shown by any return.

"(2) Any such committee shall have the right, acting directly as a committee, or by or through such examiners or agents as it may designate or appoint, to inspect any or all of the returns at such times and in such manner as it may determine.

"(3) Any relevant or useful information thus obtained may be submitted by the committee obtaining it to the Senate or the House, or to both the Senate and the House, as the case may be.

"(c) The proper officers of any State may, upon the reqeust of the Governor thereof, have access to the returns of any corporation, or to an abstract thereof showing the name and income of the corporation, at such times and in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe.

"(d) All bona fide shareholders of record owning 1 percent or more of the outstanding stock of any corporation shall, upon making request of the Commissioner, be allowed to examine the annual income returns of such corporation and of its subsidiaries. Any shareholder who pursuant to the provisions of this section is allowed to examine the return of any corporation, and who makes known in any manner whatever not provided by law or permitted by regulation the amount or source of income, profits, losses, expenditures, or any particular thereof, set forth or disclosed in any such return, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 1 year, or both.

"(e) The Commissioner shall as soon as practicable in each year cause to be prepared and made available to public inspection in such manner as he may determine, in the office of the collector in each internal-revenue district and in such other places as he may determine, lists containing the name and the post-office address of each person making an income-tax return in such district."

RECESS

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, we have worked pretty hard today, and I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, April 13, 1934, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, APRIL 12, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Our divine Father, Thou whose heart throbs with yearning and who waits to forgive, let in Thy light, whose splendor streams through the countless windows upon this old, rugged world. Show us Thyself that we may see ourselves. We thank Thee for divine love touched with pity. Oh, the blending of majesty with sympathy, of strength with gentleness, of passion with repose, of perfection with sinful, sorrowing men. Blessed Lord God, how inaccessible Thou art; yet we see Thee in our Savior's compassion, which arches over all like a rainbow from sky to sky. Heavenly Father, sustain us in our daily circumstances and experiences. Be with us, bravely fighting, nobly living, patiently suffering, and joyfully climbing, all because we live. Glory be unto Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

A PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

I have always thought that this fool discharge rule that we have here in the House is an abomination; that it is an ever-present threat to orderly procedure, party responsibility and leadership, and that it will finally club off the heads of its proponents and those who seek to perpetuate it. Believing as I do, I should like to see it made as odious as possible. I therefore hesitate to propound this inquiry that might make it more palatable.

In yesterday's Washington Times there appeared an article on the McLeod bill which stated that a petition was on the Speaker's desk to discharge the committee. This article carries the names of 123 Members of the House who have signed the petition and it has been published now to the world. We have a clear-cut decision on this rule, although it was only adopted in December 1931. The first discharge petition, as I now recall, was one to discharge the Committee on Rules from a bill that was reported out by the Committee on Irrigation and at that time—February 23, 1932—Mr. Hall, of Mississippi, called attention to the presence of the petition on the Speaker's desk. Speaker Garner at that time ruled:

> Any Member desiring to file such a petition may file it with the Clerk and notify the Members, as he sees proper, either from the floor or by written communication. These signatures cannot be made public until the required number of Members have signed the petition.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask by what authority any Member, officer, or employee of the House has given out this information in violation of the rules, or if there has been any relaxation in that rule?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am glad the gentleman has brought up this point, because it recalls to me the time when there was a petition on the desk, Mr. Longworth being the Speaker, and the names were given out to the public in some way. There was also an allegation at that time that somebody had taken the petition book or paper off the desk and had gone out on the steps of the Capitol and had it photographed, with a great hullaballoo and show about the matter. At that time Speaker Longworth suggested to some of the leaders of the House that he would welcome an investigation and would gladly appoint a committee to investigate the matter and submit it to the House for proper punishment to be inflicted upon anybody who was guilty of disclosing the names on the petition before it had been completed. He felt, and the leaders did, that such conduct was a gross violation of the rules of the House.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I am glad the gentlemen from New York, who is a prominent member of the Rules Committee, is present, because I shall ask him as a member of that committee if he thinks there is a possibility of having his committee report a resolution that he has introduced, not repealing the discharge rule, and I do not think the House wishes to repeal the discharge rule, but to amend it so that when a majority of the Members of this House signify their intention or suggest by signing a petition for the discharge of a committee, even the Rules Committee, from further consideration of a bill, such a bill can and should be presented to this House for consideration. May I say, as the gentleman from North Carolina has so well said, I know of nothing that this House could do that will interfere more with orderly procedure than to continue to operate under the present discharge rule.

It is an ideal thing, it is true, for a block or a minority, to be used, not altogether for purposes of good legislation, but for political purposes. It is a millstone about the neck of the majority charged with the responsibility for legislation. We, the majority, are held responsible for legislation. A minority has its useful purpose. Under our form of government indeed it is well to have a minority in the legislative branch of the government.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman would not lay the adoption of this rule to the present minority?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Not at all. Nor did I suggest that.

Mr. SNELL. I just wanted to know the gentleman's attitude.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I am hoping the gentleman, who is a good legislator, will join with those on this side who wish to eliminate or amend the rule so as to provide that a majority of the Members of this House may have any legislation considered that such a majority may deem necessary. It is wrong for 145 Members of this House to force 435 Members to consider and vote for bills that may not be approved by a majority.

I have had gentlemen in this House who at first were thoroughly in favor of this discharge rule but who observed its operation, tell me that they now appreciate the handicaps of such a rule, and that they are now willing to eliminate or amend the rule.

I am calling upon the leaders of this House, whose hands I have tried to uphold, and especially upon the Rules Committee, to report the resolution offered by the gentlemen from New York, [Mr. O'CONNOR] to amend the so-called "discharge rule."

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman realizes that 21 members of a committee can get consideration of any proposal. The gentleman further realizes that one Member of the other body may get consideration of any proposal. Does not the gentleman believe that 145 Members of this House should receive as much consideration in reference to getting consideration of a proposal as 21 members of a committee or one Member of the other body?

Mr. McDUFFIE. This House is thoroughly representative of the sentiment of the American people and this sentiment is reflected in the committees as well as on this floor. The committees will act when a majority sentiment of this House is in favor of action. I believe in majority government. The trouble with this Government today is that we are drifting toward block government, a government by minorities, the very thing that this administration is trying to obviate, if you please, and the very thing, under our form of government, which will ultimately lead to the destruction of the government.

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. I wish to inquire of my esteemed colleague if he would require——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. This violation of the rules of the House was by the Hearst newspapers. No newspaper in Washington knows our House rules better than Mr. Hearst's, for he once served in this House.

Mr. RICH. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLANTON. I am making a point of order, which is the regular order.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is stating a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I have the floor on a point of order.

I repeat that no newspaper knows better what the rules of the House are than the Hearst newspapers. They have deliberately violated this rule. They do not care anything about the rules of the House.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. But the Speaker has held I have the floor on my point of order. I repeat the Hearst newspapers know the rules of this House, yet deliberately break such rules. They deliberately ignore the House rules.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Texas is not addressing his remarks to the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I am addressing the Speaker of this House on my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order and the gentleman from Texas will proceed.

Mr. BLANTON. What do the Hearst newspapers care about the rules of the House?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to get into this, but this is not the proper time for such a statement if the gentleman is making a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to submit to the Speaker that on his own motion he ought to appoint a committee to find out what employee of this House, or what Member of this House, has violated the rules and given these names to the Hearst newspapers.

I want every colleague in this House to look in this morning's Herald and see how the Hearst newspapers try to make monkeys out of the Members of the United States Senate. After printing all of the names of the 46 Senators who were for the Couzens' tax amendment, Hearst's Herald this morning said they are "all members of the new demagogic party", and that they are "all believers in un-American class distinction and discrimination", and that they are "all supporters of the cold deck and the misdeal", and are "all headed for the discard."

Just how much longer will the House and Senate stand for that?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] very kindly yielded to me, and I assure the House I shall detain them but a moment longer.

Mr. COLDEN. I desire to ask my esteemed colleague why he would require such a petition to have 218 signatures when that is more than is required to pass the average bill in this House; in other words, you are stifling the House and such a number is not based upon the number shown on the roll calls that have been had in the House.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I did not mean to precipitate all this trouble. I simply rose to say that I was ready to join with the Speaker and the leader and others in authority in the leadership of this House to act promptly and immediately to amend the rules of the House by eliminating this assinine discharge rule. There are now about 25 petitions for discharge of committees on the Clerk's desk, and under this foolish rule there is no telling what manner of bill the Members of this House will be called to vote on if the Congress remains here long enough. Such a rule means legislation by petition of blocks and minorities.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] yield to me a moment?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS. I need not tell this House what I think of the discharge rule permitting 145 Members to take from a committee the consideration of important legislation pending before that committee. There is, of course, a reason, and a good reason, for the appointment of committees. We are getting to the point now where we are undertaking to legislate by discharge of committees rather than giving the committees an opportunity to report upon the bills pending before them. I do not have to tell you gentlemen how impossible it is for this House to legislate on the floor of the House upon any important matter of legislation. The very idea in appointing committees is to give them an opportunity to investigate and have hearings and report measures to the House so that the House may have complete information before it is called upon to vote.

Something has been said about amending this rule. The Speaker—and I take it I am authorized to say this—and myself and other gentlemen upon the floor of this House made a very earnest effort at the special session to get up a resolution amending the rule, and again at the beginning of this session. I think that a majority of this House should always have the right to control legislation, but I do not think any minority should have the right, over the protest of a majority, to take an important bill from a committee which is considering it and have the measure considered here on the floor of the House without the deliberation which all legislation should receive.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Why did not the gentleman bring up the resolution amending the rule, which the Committee on Rules reported out over a year ago?

Mr. BYRNS. I will tell the gentleman why. I spoke to many Members on his side of the Chamber as to whether or not they would give their support to an amendment of this rule, and I was never able to get the slightest intimation from any Member upon the Republican side that he would give us such support. The gentleman himself is upon the Rules Committee——

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman want to admit that with a majority of 3 to 1 he cannot control the House?

Mr. BYRNS. It is not a question of control. It is the question of the Republican Members, who did not have this particular rule, joining those Democrats who are honestly opposed, and defeating it, as they did the rule when it was before the Rules Committee. The gentleman is a member of the Rules Committee, and I want to ask the gentleman, and, of course, he is privileged to speak of his own action, if he was not against that rule in the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I voted against it, and if you bring it up I will vote against it again, but you have not had the courage to bring it up.

Mr. BYRNS. How can we bring it up when the gentleman's committee has failed to report it out?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How many votes would you need to bring up that rule?

Mr. BYRNS. We would need to have the committee first report it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The committee has reported the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. After we bring it up, will the gentleman support it?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. No.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] support it—no.

Mr. BYRNS. I think the rule ought to be amended, but I think it should be amended at the beginning of a session. After you get up a proposition such as the one pending now, I do not know whether we can amend it or not, or, indeed, whether it would be the fair thing to do; but I do want to appeal to the Members on this side of the Chamber who have not signed this petition to permit the committee which has the measure under consideration to report on it so that it may be considered in the regular way and with due deliberation. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to answer the inquiry by the gentleman from North Carolina. The Chair will read the part of the rule applicable to the gentleman's inquiry.

Clause 4, rule XXVII:

"4. A Member may present to the Clerk a motion in writing to discharge a committee from the consideration of a public bill or resolution which has been referred to it 30 days prior thereto (but only one motion may be presented for each bill or resolution). Under this rule it shall also be in order for a Member to file a motion to discharge the Committee on Rules from further consideration of any resolution providing either a special order of business, or a special rule for the consideration of any public bill or resolution favorably reported by a standing committee, or a special rule for the consideration of a public bill or resolution which has remained in a standing committee 30 or more days without action: Provided, That said resolution from which it is moved to discharge the Committee on Rules has been referred to that committee at least 7 days prior to the filing of the motion to discharge. The motion shall be placed in the custody of the Clerk, who shall arrange some convenient place for the signature of Members. A signature may be withdrawn by a Member in writing at any time before the motion is entered on the Journal. When Members to the total number of 145 shall have signed the motion, it shall be entered on the Journal, printed with the signatures thereto in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and referred to the Calendar of Motions to Discharge Committees."

This matter has been passed upon before when presented to Speaker Garner, and with reference to this matter he said:

Any Member desiring to file such a petition may file it with the Clerk and notify the Members as he may see proper, either from the floor or by written communication. These signatures cannot be made public until the required number of Members have signed the petition.

There is a reason for not publishing the names, of course. Publishing the names in the newspaper invites people generally throughout the United States to bring pressure on those who have not signed the petition to sign it, and pressure upon those who have signed the petition to take their names off. Publication of the names of those who have signed the petition before it is published in the RECORD and the Journal has the effect to deny completely to the petition that secrecy to which it is entitled under the rule.

The Chair holds that the publication of the names prior to the signing of the petition by 145 Members was improper and should not have been done.

CITIZENSHIP AND NATURALIZATION

Mr. BANKHEAD, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 329 (Rept. No. 1229)

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H.R. 3673, a bill to amend the law relative to citizenship and naturalization, and for other purposes; and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. The bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, under the decision of the Speaker with reference to the McLeod bill, what is going to be done about it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not deciding anything in reference to the McLeod bill. The Chair in answering the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from North Carolina stated that the publication of the names was a violation of the rule, and so rules.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I want to present a unanimous-consent request, and in explanation I want to say that there are on the calendar seven Senate bills known as jurisdictional bills. They are on the Speaker's desk. In other words, they are bills simply referring certain claims to the Court of Claims for consideration and decision. So far as I know there can be no possible objection to this reference. They have been reported by the committees of the House, and as I understand, unanimously. There is nothing involved except the question whether or not the claims shall be referred to the Court of Claims.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. My attention has been called to the bills but I have not been over them carefully. Some of the bills I remember way back when I was a member of the Committee on War Claims of the House. I wonder if the gentleman has given attention enough to them to know that a great number of them would run into millions of dollars if they got judgment in the Court of Claims, and also that the statute of limitations has run against some of them—I do not know that it has run against all of them.

Mr. BYRNS. I will say to the gentleman frankly that I have not had an opportunity to do so. It was in my mind that some of these seven bills are meritorious, and perhaps all of them.

I believe these bills ought to be considered one by one, and let the House pass on them. If there is any objection to them on the part of any Member, of course, they will not be passed.

Mr. SNELL. Just what was the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. BYRNS. The request I was about to submit was that there be first called the following Senate bills: S. 1934, S. 1935, S. 503, S. 2905, S. 2898, S. 232, and S. 1091.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman just wants to have them called now?

Mr. BYRNS. My request is that they be first called, and then after they have been disposed of, that we proceed with the calendar.

Mr. SNELL. I would not object to that. I thought the gentleman wanted them passed right now.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Reserving the right to object, have these Senate bills been to the House Committee on Claims?

Mr. BYRNS. My information is that the Senate bills have not, but House bills upon the same subject have been before the House committee and are now upon the calendar.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The request is to call them first on the calendar today?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Of course, I would have to object to that, because no one has had an opportunity to look them over.

Mr. BYRNS. Oh, they are on the same calendar.

Mr. BLANCHARD. But they are not the first bills to be called, and have not been examined.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; we who work on this calendar have examined them, and the Clerk will call the calendar number, and all there is to do is to turn to the bill on the calendar.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Well, I object to that request.

Mr. BYRNS. I submitted the request yesterday, and I understood from that side that the matter would be looked into and that there would be no objection.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If the gentleman will modify his request that they may be called up during the day sometime, I will not object.

Mr. BLANTON. Then we will go right back to the start.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am not going to permit them to be disposed of except by objection, and I do not want to do that, because I want an opportunity to look them over.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. TABER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will prefer a unanimous consent request that on the next day on which the Private Calendar is called, these will be called first, I shall not object, but if it is going to be asked that they go ahead now, I shall object. If the gentleman will modify his request so that they could be first on the next day the Private Calendar is called, I shall be satisfied, but I shall object if it is to be done today.

Mr. BYRNS. Of course, the gentleman can control that, and I will have to withdraw my request if the gentleman insists. I will submit the request in a modified form, as suggested by the gentleman from New York, that at the next call of the Private Calendar the bills which I have enumerated will be the first called.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. TARVER. Reserving the right to object, I desire to ask if among those bills there is one for the relief of George A. Carden and Anderson T. Herd, which proposes to vest the Court of Claims with jurisdiction to consider the claims of these gentlemen, under which an award might be made of a large amount. Is that bill included in the list which the gentleman named?

Mr. BYRNS. I do not know the bill, but someone tells me that it is included.

Mr. TARVER. I shall object to there being accorded a bill of that character special consideration.

Mr. BYRNS. If this request is granted, the gentleman will have a right to object to the bill when it is called.

Mr. TARVER. I understand that, but I am not willing to agree that that bill shall be given preferential consideration.

Mr. BYRNS. I do not know anything about the bill to which the gentleman refers. I have the bills by numbers, but not by title.

Mr. TARVER. The bill was reported from my committee—that is, the House bill—but the Senate bill, I presume, is the same thing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee, as modified?

Mr. TARVER. Unless there is withdrawn from the request the Herd and Carden bill, I object.

Mr. BYRNS. What is the number of that bill?

Mr. TARVER. I do not know the number of it. That is the one that involves the question of vesting the Court of Claims with jurisdiction to consider the claims of these gentlemen for profits that they would have received had they been allowed to operate certain ships during the World War.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I modify my request a second time to meet the views of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER], and I hope it will be satisfactory to the other Members, by eliminating from the request the Senate bill which corresponds with House bill 8482, and to which the gentleman from Georgia has referred, as the claims of Messrs. George A. Carden and Anderson T. Herd. That would leave only six bills which would be given this preferential call.

Mr. TABER. The request is that they shall be called on the next day the Private Calendar is called?

Mr. BYRNS. That is the understanding.

Mr. McFADDEN. Reserving the right to object, has the gentleman in mind fixing another date for calling the Private Calendar?

Mr. BYRNS. Just as soon as we can, but I am not able to tell the gentleman when we can do it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee, as modified?

There was no objection.

RICHARD A. CHAVIS

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 2032) for the relief of Richard A. Chavis, with a Senate amendment, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. HILL of Alabama, THOMPSON of Illinois, and CARTER of Wyoming.

TOBACCO TAXES

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to insert therein a speech of my colleague from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech of my colleague from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK], before the subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee, March 30, 1934:

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, may I, in utter sincerity, congratulate you for the very fair, earnest, and intelligent manner in which these hearings have been conducted. The cause of the farmer and the business man may ever expect fair and wise treatment, in my judgment, before the present constituted Ways and Means Committee, of which North Carolina's distinguished son, the Honorable R. L. DOUGHTON, is its able chairman. To my own knowledge, for years he has shown a keen interest in every form of legislation looking to the material well-being of the farmers of his own State and the country at large. I also want to say that, in my judgment, there is no man in this country, including the "brain trust" more competent to lead in the consideration of this question than my friend, the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky, the chairman of this subcommittee.

I feel that such an admirable case has already been made out for an immediate correction of the tax injustice which has for years laid its heavy, cruel hand upon the tobacco grower, that any attempt on my part might be useless at this time. I am, therefore, appearing not so much with the idea of making an intelligent contribution to the solution of this problem as I am for the purpose of manifesting my genuine interest.

In discussing this problem, I should abhor the idea of injecting any sectional view, for this is no time to see parts of this great Nation without seeing all parts. We must, if we meet our duty, keep our eyes constantly fixed on the country as a whole without regard to classes or groups. I should with equal abhorrence dislike to engage in maudlin or sentimental discussion. To my way of thinking, there is nothing that could happen of greater importance to a very large portion of the farmers of the South than immediate action by this Congress providing for an adjustment downward of the present excessive and monopolistic tax on tobacco products. Careful analysis shows that this tax finally rests upon the grower and his land. No sane man would be bold enough to undertake an argument in favor of its fairness. Plain, ordinary justice adds its condemnation. Shortly after taking the oath of office as a Representative from the State of North Carolina I began to battle against this injustice, and introduced a bill to cut the tax in half. One thing and another has, up to a few weeks ago, seemed to work against and frustrate every effort in this direction. We have at last, however, come to our day in court, and under the new deal I am confident that our efforts in this direction will not be in vain. In our approach to this problem we must consider the rights of all concerned, but in this consideration the welfare of the grower is paramount. This committee must, of course, concern itself with the fiscal condition of the Government, for upon the committee rests at times the unpleasant duty of exacting taxes from the people. Viewed in the light of present economic conditions, and particularly the problems of agriculture, all will admit that the grower, consumer, and manufacturer for years to come will be materially affected by the nature of such revision of these taxes as may be made, but none to the extent of the grower if the proper safeguards and regulations are applied.

Those who are familiar with the operations of the tobacco industry, removed from personal attachment and selfish interest, realize that there has never been an equitable distribution of the income and profits. With the Government exacting 3, 4, 5, 6, and sometimes 7 dollars in tax for every dollar received by the grower, and the manufacturers receiving in net profits an amount double the gross income received by the grower, and the consumer paying 15 times the price for the finished product that is paid to the farmer for the raw product, it takes no expert to see the blunder or admit the economic crime. A cursory review of all facts and figures shows that the invested dollar has been multiplied and protected at the expense of human labor and social justice. Fundamental human rights have been all but forgotten. This is not, however, peculiar to this industry.

A new conception of business fairness is in vogue, and a new application of neighborliness is slowly but surely finding lodgment in the business world.

No doubt the injustices of the past have been those human-nature characteristics visited upon man since the early days. With the awakening of a new public conscience and a greater social responsibility, I am confident that by proper Government regulation the welfare of all will come ahead of the welfare of a few. Few of the few would demand a different situation.

I have the honor and responsibility of being one of North Carolina's Representatives in Congress. The Fifth District, from which I come, is a large tobacco-producing district, and grows almost exclusively bright flue-cured cigarette tobacco. This same district is perhaps the largest tobacco-manufacturing district in the United States and pays through collections of taxes on tobacco products an amount larger than any other district in the United States, with perhaps one or two exceptions. Granville County, where I was born, has been a pioneer tobacco-growing county, and wherever tobacco has made its march of progress the leader could find his ancestry back in Granville. It is therefore little wonder that I make claim to an intimate knowledge of tobacco in whatever form it may be made or used. I am perhaps more familiar with the growers' problem than any other phase of the industry. It is his interest that I seek first to improve and then protect.

I would not at this time undertake to depict to you the horrible plight of his unenviable existence. Not more than 1 out of 4 years does the average grower of tobacco show even a meager profit. If his records were accurately kept on the same basis that an up-to-date business institution's records are kept, you would marvel at his courage and determination to carry on. It might conservatively be estimated that one third of the working people of North Carolina are engaged in some form of activity involving the making, handling, or processing of tobacco. The income from this work is the lifeblood of our State. The health, morale, and happiness of our people rise and fall in comparison to the income from tobacco. It is the sine qua non of our economic existence. Low and unfair prices for the past several years, together with other contributing factors, have reduced a large number of our people to abject poverty. Disease and undernourishment have attended those of younger years, and many a home has been wrecked on the rift of this economic dislocation. The privations and sufferings have been unbearable, and the dignity of good men's souls has been lowered. Under the present system a large percentage of our farmers are bound in slavery even as the children under Pharaoh were bound. They can no longer enjoy the freedom that was their fathers'.

Under the present system the tobacco farmer has little, if any, voice in pricing his product; it is not a question of what he will take, but it is a question of what he can get. He does not often even have a fair gambler's chance. I scorn and resent the idea that he would seek alms or charity from anyone. There is not another class of people in the world who have taken such punishment standing up and on the chin, so to speak. If you gentlemen could visit some of their homes and see the squalid conditions under which they must live, be patriotic, and rear their children to good citizenship, you would glory in their spunk, their faith, and their fortitude. No one can make me believe that the average capitalist who controls their labor and almost their very destinies is not as much ashamed of this situation as I am. It is not the men, but the system that I am attacking.

At this point I want to say that the growers of tobacco are not primarily concerned with any squabble between the manufacturers or with any legislation which does not look to the general welfare of all. They are interested in all those who make a market for their product. All of the properly operated companies serve a useful purpose and are no doubt needed in the trade. I have no financial interest whatever in any tobacco company, but I am concerned in seeing that their proper relative position in the economic picture is maintained and preserved. Any person who lives in the great State of North Carolina and does not feel likewise should, in my opinion, move his citizenship to another land.

In approaching a discussion of the immediate problem before this committee, I want to presume to remind you that Government is not something, but that Government is for something. It is today for the rehabilitation of the economic structure of this Nation, and to that end the President and the Congress are waging a valiant and, I hope, victorious battle. My effort to aid in the solution of this problem has no concern with the individual position of any manufacturer. I want to see such action taken by this committee as will best serve those whose needs are greatest and whose rights must be protected. The big issue, to my mind, is one of farm relief. What can this committee do to rehabilitate and stabilize this great agricultural industry and thereby contribute to the recovery program under way? I am not so much concerned with the kind of tax revision as I am with the justice and effect of the tax revision, and after careful study and deliberate thought I submit the following views for your earnest consideration.

Looking back, instead of forward, will help but little in the solution of this problem. It is necessary to look at it realistically. In doing this we face two stubborn facts: There are in the Carolina-Virginia-Kentucky region, as well as sections of other States producing tobacco, a great multitude of people and a great extent of land hitherto engaged in the production of tobacco, mainly cigarette stock, which population and acreage cannot be transferred by any sort of sudden magic to other purposes. The other is that no sort of outside regulation of industry, in defiance of the laws of economics, can be made permanent. The question of a revision of the taxes is primarily a matter of concern to the grower, as well as of great social and economic importance to all our people. It is, however, the grower who needs most to hold and add to what has been gained for him under the new deal. A return to a situation in which he cannot make wages fair and in just proportion to the industry's income, after 1 year of fair prices following so long a period of unjustified, heart-breaking loss, would be worse than tragic. Leaving the war burden and the prohibition burden on tobacco, and particularly on cigarettes, makes for an ill-balanced tax program, and I seriously doubt if there is a single taxation expert who would not say that it not only lacks equity but is a blunder and worse than a crime. All of us are concerned in the solution of this problem, both as taxpayers and consumers. But these considerations concern us more intimately and more materially in the cigarette-tobacco section, because it has been conclusively shown during these interesting hearings that the reduction of the tax would benefit directly a class of our people numerically large and upon whose profits and income the rest of us are largely dependent—the growers of tobacco.

I am both delighted and encouraged that this committee has gone to work in earnest to study this question, with the idea of recommending to the Congress an equitable revision of these taxes. One proposal which has been sponsored before the committee is to reduce the tax so that the manufacturers of 10-cent cigarettes can have a safe margin to insure a continuation of their business and to provide for them a moderate profit. Some of the manufacturers of the 10-cent cigarettes reduced their prices several years ago, and, perhaps, at that time could not anticipate the increased costs resulting from a compliance with N.R.A. requirements and other governmental demands. They now seek a revision of the taxes on cigarettes on a classified or price-selling basis. The other proposal facing this committee would be to recommend to the Congress a uniform general reduction in the tax on all tobacco products. The theory of the proponents of the classified tax seems to be that their advent on the market has aided the price for the lower grades of the leaf. There is no doubt but that there is a large aggregate trade that will take cigarettes at 10 cents that will not take them at 12½ or 15 cents. An increased price for lower grades will certainly raise the average and the value of the cigarette-crop stock as a whole, provided the price of the higher grades is maintained. Would a classified tax or a differential to the 10-cent manufacturers aid in maintaining the higher-priced grades? I take it that no one here would consider seriously at this juncture any revision of taxes, the benefit of which would flow to the consumer and manufacturer alone. From the statement of profits made by the cigarette manufacturers, they show little, if any, suffering on the average throughout this entire period of business depression. If the importance of this matter did not lie primarily with the growers of tobacco, I could not approach it with any zeal or enthusiasm.

At the same time, I recognize that the manufacturers are interested in anything that tends to increase their volume of business. I also appreciate the much-needed saving, in the penny times we have been experiencing, which would accrue to the individual consumer if by a general reduction in the tax the price of cigarettes were, as they must be, lowered in full proportion. I have not the slightest doubt that if a proper general reduction of the tax rate were made, it would all be passed on by the manufacturers to the growers and consumers, with no benefit to the manufacturers except from an increased volume of business which would put them unquestionably in a position to push for even greater consumption, thereby further expanding the market for the farmer's overproduced product. In my candid judgment, that is what the grower needs and is the only thing that in the end will be helpful to the grower in the long run without such measure of governmental restriction of production as would tend to defeat its own purpose.

Let me divert to the fact that everything that has been done or is being done in Washington in aid of farm prices proceeds from the assumption, as is necessarily the economic fact, that price is a matter of balance between production and consumption. When more is produced than is consumed, prices are necessarily weak, and when less is produced than is desired for consumption prices are just necessarily strong. A natural balance of consumption and production means stable, satisfactory prices for the product. Balance can be restored in either of two ways when conditions permit. Of course, where there is no chance of increasing consumption to take up the overproduction—and thereby attain balance and a satisfactory price—there is no way out except through reducing production and getting that way the balance that makes price.

But, desirable as that method may be, it is always subject to the objection that even when it is successful in raising the price, the grower gets that raised price only on a restricted production. How much better for him, and for the country generally and the recovery plan itself, if balance between production and consumption, with resultant satisfactory prices, could be worked out without too much restriction of production? Do not misunderstand me. I am not criticizing the Government's plan for trying to get the grower a good price. I have given my support as a Member of Congress to every such proposal. To see that the growers get good prices is the prime consideration. That is the main purpose of these hearings. But I am pointing out that if through expansion of consumption, on top of the Government's plan for restricting production, the good price when obtained could be obtained on a larger quantity of tobacco instead of a smaller quantity, the grower would thereby be enormously benefited above any benefit that can come to him through restriction of production without taking full advantage of opportunities for increasing consumption at the same time. It is as simple as saying that hogs will go up faster when the consumers double their consumption at a time when the producers are cutting their production in half than they will when the only thing being done is to have the producers reduce their production.

Here is the unique position of tobacco.

The possibility of an enormous increase in consumption of tobacco products is the thing that differentiates the tobacco grower's problem, and his opportunities, from the problem and the opportunities of the growers of any other farm commodity in this country. In this respect, tobacco holds a unique position, quite different from all other commodities. I know of no easy, immediately workable and effective way of greatly increasing the consumption of any other farm product than tobacco. What can be done to increase greatly and immediately the consumption of wheat, or corn, or cotton, or pork, or beef, or silk, or any other farm product, save tobacco, upon which the Government is at work? I know of no special opportunity and have heard none suggested for any special, heavy increase in consumption that can be made effective at once. The way to the market is already wide open for each of these products. No special barrier stands between the grower and a price for his product. Therefore, each of these products is now enjoying, however disastrous it may be, its full potential market under these conditions. Is that true of the tobacco grower's product? With the road, to whatever market there is, wide open for every other grower of a farm product in this country, the Government stands by the tobacco grower's road to market and exacts on cigarette tobaccos the grower would sell about $1.08 a pound and on the tobaccos that go into smoking and chewing tobacco and snuff, $0.18 per pound. Is that an open market, or even a fair market for the tobacco grower? Does that kind of a handicap placed on his product give him any fair opportunity for those who manufacture and sell his product to develop for him that full volume of consumption of his product that is open to every other grower of an agricultural product in this country?

No wonder the Government feels the urge to reduce production heavily. It has cut consumption enormously by almost prohibitive tax rates on the product, and if it is to continue to maintain rates that choke off consumption the only way to get that balance of production and consumption that will give the grower a satisfactory price is to choke off production, a process which, however well it may be justified in any given circumstance, always carries with it at least a partial defeat of its own purpose. I mean that even when price is attained, it stands, under a restricted production procedure, attained for a smaller volume of product instead of a larger, as would be the case if price could be obtained, to an extent, at least, through increasing consumption and without having to go too far in the matter of restricting production. Other things equal, the grower does not want his acres thrown out of use and himself out of work and opportunity. More use for acres instead of less, more work for the grower, more work in the warehouses and in the factories, more business for the distributors, greater volume all along the line from grower to consumer is the policy that fits with everything which I understand Mr. Roosevelt, our great and courageous leader, is trying to do in his attempt to effect recovery by eliminating unemployment and by making satisfactory farm prices possible. He well knows that there can be no lasting, permanent prosperity or human contentment until the farmer is liberated from his chains of economic slavery and paid for his labor and produce a price that will permit him to live and move as those who have been getting, in one way or another, the income that was rightfully his. The vast difference between the price he receives and what the consumer pays is a tale of unrighteousness.

Again I say that, in my view of it, the question to be studied by your committee has its prime importance for the grower and not for the manufacturer. I do not think that the manufacturer has a particularly big stake in it, but I do believe that this hearing with its resulting change in the tax law, if any, is of enormous importance to the grower.

And I believe, further, that if the growers really demand such a change in the law as will give them their best opportunity for a satisfactory market for their product in increased volume, the administration and the Congress will be very slow to deny that demand, even if the return to the United States Treasury is somewhat less at least for a while. But, in my opinion, no relief of this kind will be given the grower except upon his own and his true representatives' insistent demand for it. I can see a great opportunity for the growers in this situation, and I know that real aid to them is the first and controlling thought of this committee. The manufacturers have to admit that the excessive taxes hurt the grower more than they do the manufacturer, and except as the growers are demanding the relief for themselves the Government will hardly act, because, of course, the United States Treasury likes that heavy return from tobacco products. And even the fact that while liquor taxes were out tobacco all but carried the full load that liquor and tobacco used to carry between them, and that liquor is now back, carrying its part of the old load, will not suffice to move the Congress except upon the demand of the growers. They are now paying both a maximum prohibition rate and a maximum war rate on their product. To illustrate by the cigarette tax, it went from $1.25 a thousand to $2.05 a thousand during the war, and then in anticipation of the loss of revenue from liquor in 1919 was pushed up to $3, where it has been ever since.

The war and prohibition are only history now, but nobody has taken the war harness or the prohibition burden off the tobacco growers, and I think the growers are the only persons who can accomplish this removal. In the matter of tobacco taxes, the Government has its mouth on a wet teat, and it is not in nature to give up that kind of thing except on somebody's demand.

In this connection, I believe the committee will heartily concur in this further observation. If tobacco taxation is to be approached in the future, as in the past, almost exclusively from the point of view of the Treasury Department, then there will not, in my opinion, be much accomplished out of this hearing. But, gentlemen, this is the new deal. This is an attempt to deliver the country from a condition brought about very largely through the purchasing power of the farmer falling back until he could no longer buy the products of industry. A fundamental object is to rebuild the farmer's purchasing power. The farmer is out in front. He is a prime concern in the new deal. There is almost no reasonable limit to what will be considered and should be considered for him if only it offers promise of rehabilitation and stabilization of the farm situation. This of necessity must continue to be our great objective.

Only a few weeks ago authorization was made to spend $200,000,000 to rehabilitate the beef-cattle industry. And that out of general funds. There are no special funds paid into the Government on account of the beef-cattle industry. But the product of the tobacco grower has been piling up in the United States Treasury for many years an annual return of nearly $400,000,000, a thing no other farm product has ever done. Is the tobacco grower to be denied the benefits of a greatly increased market for his products through reduction of tax rates solely because, forsooth, for the time being the United States Treasury might collect somewhat less from his product? And that when millions of general funds are being spent freely in attempting to rehabilitate and stabilize other industries through measures not so sure of success or of such a fine measure of success as a reduction of tobacco taxes would be? It is my thought that at last the time has come, and come under Mr. Roosevelt, when tobacco taxation may and should be looked at from the point of view of its effect upon the power and not solely from the point of view of the return of tax to the Treasury. Surely the billions tobacco has paid into the Treasury would warrant its taking a few millions less for a while if a great constructive work of rehabilitating and stabilizing tobacco growing can thereby be accomplished.

But to go to the immediate propositions that are before the committee. These are important in two ways: First, from the angle of the possible danger to the grower; that is, in the idea of a differential in the cigarette tax rate; and, second, from the angle of opportunity for the grower; that is, in a substantial reduction of the tax rate by, say, 40 percent.

As to the danger for the grower in the differential, it is a matter of common knowledge that the tobaccos that go into the higher-priced brands of cigarettes, the big or so-called "standard brands", are the tobaccos that have sold relatively high and have held the market averages up. It is almost equally well known, to those who know the facts, that one of the prime reasons the larger manufacturers had for refusing for 4 years to bring out and press 10-cent cigarettes was the fact that they felt that if they did so they would to a large extent destroy the higher market growers now have open to them for tobaccos that can go into the higher-priced cigarettes. With an overproduction of tobaccos in almost all classifications, it is a question of preserving to the greatest possible extent the market for those tobaccos out of which the growers can get the highest return. Obviously, the manufacturers' ability to pay high prices for leaf tobacco is greater when the cigarette consumption of the country is on two-for-a-quarter brands than when it is on 10-cent brands; and just as obviously, when a smoker is moved from the higher-priced brand to a lower-priced, the farmer has gotten a market for some of his tobacco at a lower price by sacrificing his market for some of his tobacco that otherwise would sell at a higher price. That is literally going forward one step and slipping back two. The grower cannot get where he wants to go by doing that; and if, by establishing a differential in tax, based on selling price, the Government is going to force the manufacturers to do what they have so long, in the interest of the farmers and perhaps their own, refused to do, then the result has to be, as I see it, that to the extent that the business is transferred to the cheaper brands the farmer loses the high market for the leaf that goes into the higher-priced brands.

If the top price which the manufacturer can pay for tobaccos to be marketed in the form of cigarettes is to be no higher than that which can now be paid for them for use in 10-cent cigarettes, or that could be paid for such use even after a 30-cent differential in tax were established, then indeed, it seems to me, the average for the crop would have to fall so low as to work great hardship on the grower. It cannot be said too emphatically that, in my thinking of this serious problem, the one thing from a domestic standpoint that offers hope of keeping tobacco growing on a basis that can be made satisfactory to the farmer is the preservation and the extension of the market for tobaccos in cigarettes at prices that leave the manufacturers a chance to pay for such tobacco prices very much above the market averages for tobaccos. If the top is to come down to or close to the average, as a differential alone as suggested unquestionably would accomplish, then the new average must be distressing indeed. My thought is that if all of the cigarette business were put on 10-cent brands, under the present tax or with the tax on them reduced to $2.70 as they have asked, the result would be that nobody able to pay anything like the too low prices now paid for tobaccos to go to market in the form of higher-priced cigarettes, those tobaccos would have to find a market at a very much lower level, with resulting crop averages even more disastrous to the growers than the prices for the past several years. Then when they checked back heavily on growing, tobaccos would get to be scarcer and therefore higher. Then the manufactured products would have to go back up, with the result that we would be back where we started from, with no result from our trip around a vicious circle except that many growers would have been destroyed and much of opportunity for all of them thrown away meanwhile in the years it would take to go through that cycle.

That is a suggestion of a prime reason, as you know, why, as I have been reliably informed, some manufacturers at least have refused to try to put the business on cheap brands. Now, if the Government, by establishing a tax differential, should force the manufacturers or processors to do this thing that for 4 years, at great sacrifice of volume of business on their higher-priced brands, they have refused to do, then the worst may be surely expected unless the Government steps in and uses the strong arm. But if once the grower sees the sure result to him and makes his position known to the Government, such action will not, in my opinion, be taken. I know that this administration is trying earnestly to help the farmer and will not make itself a party to something that is to work injury to him. And it is not hard for anybody to see that an established tax differential, based on selling price, offers such a reward, if you please, for selling the farmer's product so low that everybody in the business would immediately find himself under the urge—yes, even the necessity, if he wants to preserve his volume of business—of getting into that game. It will be a disastrous day for the grower of tobacco when and if the Government offers the suggested reward for marketing his product cheap instead of at the best possible price.

Of course, many cigarettes can be sold at 10 cents to purchasers who are not able to pay 12½ or 15. Likewise, many can be sold at 8 cents or two for 15 to purchasers who will not buy even at 10 cents. I recognize the value of lower prices to the consumer as making for the maximum consumption of leaf from the grower and therefore for better prices for him. But it is one thing to get more consumption by sacrificing price on existing consumption through offering a reward to the manufacturer to sell the farmer's product low; and it is an entirely different thing to get that increased consumption, and even more, without at all impairing the capacity of the manufacturers to continue to pay the higher prices now paid for tobaccos for use in meeting already existing demands. And there is where the great opportunity for the grower lies in the existing situation and in the work of this committee following its hearings.

I think that it is perfectly clear, on a study of all angles of the situation, and in the light of the facts adduced before the committee, that every advantage for the grower that is contended for in the plea for the $2.70 tax on the cheaper as against $3 tax on the higher cigarettes, can be realized in another way without any of the dangers and hurts of the differential and without injury to the present 10-cent brands; and that in the same way many other advantages of a more far-reaching effect will at the same time be accomplished for the grower.

Let us contemplate a 40-percent reduction in the taxes on cigarettes, tobacco, and snuff. That passed on by the manufacturer, as it ought to be and must be, would result in a 10-cent retail price for all of the larger brands of cigarettes now selling at 12½ cents or more in States not levying special State taxes. Likewise, it would seem to mean for the present 10-cent cigarettes a retail price of two packages for 15 cents. But best of all, from the grower's point of view, it leaves the manufacturers' ability to pay the grower maximum prices—though I doubt whether this has ever been done—for cigarette leaf absolutely unimpaired and does not put the manufacturer under the temptation or the necessity to sell the farmer's product at the lowest price in order to benefit by the concession that is sought for those undertaking to sell at the low figure.

By such a tax reduction the grower would have opened to him immediately all of the advantages of increased consumption that would come to his product from a 10-cent price on the present big brands and the added consumption that would come from having the present 10-cent brands, which could then sell at two for 15 cents, reach still other smokers who are not now willing to pay either 10 or 12 or more cents and are consequently not consuming or are rolling their own out of granulated or other tobaccos which can never net the farmer anything approaching what he gets for tobaccos that can be marketed through cigarettes. As has been stated, there are presumably, according to Government reports on cigarette papers, some 50 or 60 billion cigarettes rolled by smokers each year. If this business could be put on a manufactured-cigarette basis, the benefits to the farmer, it seems to me, would be very great, indeed. It would also go far in making up the temporary loss to the Treasury.

And then there is the great volume of women smokers who, when money is short or prices high, do not change to rolling their own, but simply quit consuming. They could, if it were desirable, be brought back as consumers through proper tax adjustments. I am not arguing in favor of the woman smoking or dipping snuff, either, for that matter. And in pipe tobaccos, chewing tobaccos, and snuff, there is, too, an enormous possibility of increasing consumption through a tax rate that would permit more tobacco in a package or piece.

In other words, lying right by the destructive danger that I see for the tobacco grower in the proposal for the differential in tax on cigarettes selling at different prices, I think I see in a uniform reduction of 40 percent on tobacco, snuff, and cigarettes, the greatest opportunity for a perfectly definite and very extensive contribution to recovery and stabilization, at least in this one phase of the agricultural problem. It is the farmer's case, and whether it has any recognition in the Congress will, I think, depend on whether and how vigorously the growers present it. Makeshifts through emergency measures may stimulate, but permanent relief on a sound economic basis can be accomplished by no other practical and immediately workable plan save a general reduction in the excise taxes on tobacco products.

God knows, as I believe you gentlemen do, from the testimony you have heard, that there has never been presented to a committee of any Congress a more worthy, just, and humanitarian appeal. Personally, I have every confidence that it will not go unheeded. The tobacco growers of your country and mine leave their cause with faith and hope to your judgment and conscience.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, I find it necessary to leave, but before I do so, I express the hope that before the hearing is closed the expert on tobacco in the Agricultural Department, and also some representative from the Treasury Department who has knowledge of these facts and can give us some idea of what we can and cannot do, will appear before the committee and give us the benefit of all their information.

Mr. VINSON, I may say, for the benefit of the gentleman from Michigan, the committee, and the folks who are here, we have found in making this fight for a reduction in tobacco taxes that when we talk to officials, regardless of how much they know about general subjects, unless you get a specialist on tobacco, you might as well be using a foreign tongue.

It was my thought, and I hoped it was agreeable to the subcommittee, to do our best toward painting the real picture as it exists, getting all of the data and information we could obtain on this, and then lay that on the doorstep of the Agriculture Department and the Treasury Department; and I hope that they will give consideration to the facts and figures obtainable, and then subsequent to that, to call them in before this committee to testify on the subject.

That was the thought I had, and if that is agreeable to the committee, will be the course we pursue.

Mr. WOODRUFF. In that connection, when these hearings are placed in the hands of the officials you speak of, I hope that a request will accompany that presentation that the officials who will appear before the committee read the hearings that we have had heretofore very carefully.

Mr. VINSON. I do not know whether you would make that through a written or verbal request, but it was the hope, at least, that they would consider these hearings very carefully. That was the very thought I had in mind.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, if there are no questions, I will retire.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I hope when you submit the hearings of the committee to the representatives of the Department you refer to, that they will read very carefully the full testimony at these hearings.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. HANCOCK, have you anything you want to say as to what you would consider to be a fair price to the producer of the tobacco?

Mr. HANCOCK. I have an idea based on conditions in my own county. I know something about the cost of labor, and know something about what it takes to make a crop of tobacco, or a barn of tobacco. Of course, that varies in different places, and it depends somewhat on the weather and the skill with which a man attends his crop.

I was talking to a group of farmers in my home county about 3 weeks ago, and one of them happened to have been here the other day, Senator Curry, and it seems that the director of the experiment station there, who engages in experiments involving tobacco, requested a group of farmers to compute the best they could the cost per pound to make a barn of tobacco. Those figures, of course, vary, but under present conditions, and basing the schedule of wages similar to the schedule recognized by the Government under the N.R.A. operations, I do not believe that tobacco can possibly be made in my part of the country for less than 20 cents a pound, on the average. Of course, you understand, it costs as much to make a sorry grade of tobacco as it does a good grade.

The CHAIRMAN. As to what its cost is, I did not quite get your statement; did you say "probably" or "possibly"?

Mr. HANCOCK. I said "possibly" it could not be profitably made for less than 20 cents.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Did you mean 20 cents a pound to make a reasonable profit, or that 20 cents would be the cost of production?

Mr. HANCOCK. I think at around 20 cents the farmer could make a profit, under normal conditions.

Mr. MCCORMACK. That would include a reasonable return on capital investment and fixed charges?

Mr. HANCOCK. I doubt whether it would. There is not 1 percent of them that ever figure that, in arriving at the cost of their product, down our way.

Mr. MCCORMACK. I realize that, but I think they ought to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean it would take that price to make a decent living for the man and his family?

Mr. HANCOCK. That is correct, Mr. DOUGHTON.

Mr. VINSON. We thank you, Mr. HANCOCK, for your very fine statement.

I think it is only fair to state that from the first day I ever saw FRANK HANCOCK in Congress, up until this good hour, he has been waging a battle in the tobacco growers' interest as he saw it, and because of our having cooperated in this common cause, I am going to impose upon him and ask him to secure the data and submit it for the record showing the various rates of tobacco taxes in the 13 or 14 States that impose tobacco taxes.

We have been talking about Federal taxes so much I had forgotten almost that in Arkansas they have a 5-cent-a-pack tax on cigarettes.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I shall be glad to furnish that information for the committee.

THE VETO OF THE INDEPENDENT OFFICES BILL

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, on March 20, 1933, upon President Roosevelt's urgent recommendation, the Economy Act was passed, effecting definite savings in the civil expenses of the Government approximating annually about $125,000,000. These savings, along with $150,000,000 more, which had been made prior to the advent of the Democratic administration, expire automatically on the 30th of June 1934.

The Economy Act also revamped the entire pension system, beginning with the Spanish-American War and running down to date. The President was authorized to determine by regulations what pension should be paid to veterans of the different wars and their dependents. This power was given to him because it was believed that he was in a position to effect certain economies that were necessary for the stability of the Government and because the Congress trusted the President to do the job and do it right—and a little more, perhaps, because this was the first great delegation of power to the President in the hysterical situation in which the Congress and the President and everyone else were. It was impossible to realize the fundamentals of liberty and to realize what the delegation of authority meant. It was believed by most Members of Congress that the President would keep his word and would establish fair regulations which would give the veterans a fair deal and at the same time give the taxpayers a fair deal.

As administered, the regulations first put into effect accomplished reductions of about $440,000,000 in the expenditures of the Veterans' Bureau. That these regulations were bad, poorly drawn, ill considered, and not of the type that the country would stand for is evidenced by the fact that the President had already, at the time his veto message was signed on March 27, 1934, changed the regulations so as to place back on the roll of the Veterans' Bureau $117,000,000. At that time, he also signed regulations which would, for the fiscal year 1935, according to the best information I can obtain, cost the country $60,000,000 more. Thus, nearly half of the original savings were given back by order of the President, so that it is wrong to say that Congress wrecked the Economy Act.

There are still more than $250,000,000 of savings under the veterans' provision of the Economy Act.

Five hundred thousand non-service-connected veterans, put off the rolls by the Economy Act, are still off the rolls.

Let us recite some of the high points in the promulgating of regulations and in the administration of this act by the President. In the first place, the Spanish War veterans, approximately 200,000 in number, were all thrown off the rolls. They were given, however, a chance to establish service connection for their disability and the regulations stated that the burden of proof was placed on the Government to prove that they were not service connected. Because of the methods of the Veterans' Bureau practically all of the Spanish War veterans' cases failed to establish service connection.

Was this done in accordance with the regulations? No. In case after case I charge that the Spanish War veterans were thrown off the roll without their folder even being examined by a representative of the Veterans' Bureau. In case after case it has appeared that such an examination shows, on the face of the papers already in the Veterans' Bureau at the time the regulations were drawn, that the case is entitled to service connection. Nevertheless, seldom, except where it was requested by a Member of Congress, did they call upon the War Department for the Adjutant General's records to find out whether the veteran was entitled to service connection for a disability incurred in service.

This method of handling the Spanish War cases had created such a furore that prior to the end of Congress in June 1933 the President was forced by public opinion to modify his regulations so as to provide a non-service-connected $15-per-month pension to the Spanish War veterans. Thereby he disposed of any program of restricting the Spanish War group to service connection. The furore that was created at that time did not subside, but the bad administration of the Veterans' Bureau, insofar as the Spanish War cases go, was continued. Nothing apparently was learned from experience, and when Congress came back here in January the same failure to give fair consideration to the Spanish War cases continued. It was only possible to have their cases considered where the Congressman, in the individual case, went over and stood over the Veterans' Bureau with a sledge hammer. The furore reached such heights that by the time the independent offices bill had reached the Senate, Congress felt that unless it took the matter in its own hands and attempted to solve this problem in some practical way that the entire Economy Act would be wrecked.

With reference to the World War veterans, the regulations provided for a straight 10-percent cut in war-service-connected cases, and in addition, a change in the method of rating cases so that the war disabled were cut from 25 to 30 percent on an average, and in some cases were cut as high as 60 percent. I had one case of a man who had lost a leg on the battlefield where at first he was cut from $113 a month to $8, and only after I had raised a storm of protest was any kind of a fair adjustment made.

All presumptive service-connected cases—that is, most of the tuberculosis and shell-shocked cases—were thrown off the rolls.

The non-service-connected cases were thrown off the rolls, with the exception of about 32,000 who were totally and permanently disabled. These totally and permanently disabled non-service-connected cases were paid $30 a month.

In the administration of the direct service-connected group, reasonably fair speed was made in taking away from the war disabled, the 25 to 30 percent cut which was made. When it came to handling the presumptive cases, practically no speed and practically no results were obtained in determining whether these people were actually entitled to relief from the Government.

The Board of Appeals did not function in many cases, and the cases were permitted to pile up on the theory that Congress would meet this situation by legislation. This action, together with the furor that was aroused by the direct cut of the war disabled, created another storm of protest and resulted in the writing into the bill in the Senate of the restoration of $30,000,000 for the war disabled to restore them to their old rating schedule and to wipe out the cut of 25 to 30 percent which the President had placed upon them. It created a sentiment which demanded what the bill contained—restoration to the roll of all presumptives, the tuberculosis, and nerve cases—on a 75-percent basis, pending the review of their cases, with the burden of proof on the Government to show that their case was not service-connected. After these cases have been disposed of by the Board of Appeals in the Veterans' Bureau in accordance with this rule, they will either go on the roll as direct service-connected cases or they will go off entirely.

The independent offices bill carried the following increases to veterans:

1. For Spanish War veterans	$37,400,000
2. To restore the war-disabled veterans to the rates they were receiving prior to the 19th of March 1933	30,000,000
3. To restore the World War presumptively service-connected cases on a 75-percent basis	9,312,500
Total	76,712,500

As to presumptives, the President, by his Executive order of March 27, 1934, the date of the veto message, restored 29,000 to the rolls, as against 25,000 in the bill. Otherwise the President's action as to presumptives was practically the same as the bill.

As to the Spanish War veterans, he restored them pending a new review of their cases and final determination by the Board of Appeals without any limit as to the dates of service, or anything of that kind, and without limitation as to whether the cases were of misconduct origin. The President's regulations of March 27 would have cost, for the Spanish War veterans, in my opinion, nearly $50,000,000 for the fiscal year 1935, or more than it will cost to pay the pensions for the Spanish War veterans according to the bill.

The thing that the President did not approve of and did not want to go along on was restoring compensation to the war disabled, amounting to $30,000,000. On the other items he presents himself as almost in substantial agreement with the bill. The cost of his regulations of March 27 for Spanish War veterans and the presumptives would have been approximately $60,000,000 for the year 1935. On April 6, the President canceled his regulations of March 27, so nothing will ever be learned as to what they would cost by practical experience. It can only be estimated.

On the overriding of the veto there was presented to the Congress the question of whether or not they would spend $16,000,000 more for veterans than the President would and continue certain economies which were carried in the bill, which would die on June 30, 1934, if the bill did not become a law, amounting to $125,000,000; so that we had on the one side of us, Shall we spend $16,000,000 more than the President is willing to and save $125,000,000? There were in addition some small expenditures which the President had not recommended for the civil forces of the Government, but they were small as compared to the saving to be effected by the overriding of the veto.

It is true that the bill did not carry an extension of as great economies as the President had finally urged in his Budget message, but after a hard fight it was the best compromise that could be worked out and put through. No one believes that if this veto had been sustained that it would have been possible to pass any bill effecting economies in this session of Congress. To save one half of $250,000,000 of economies in civil expenses in the face of the President's orgy of expenditures reflects credit on Congress. To meet our sacred obligation to the veterans who were actually disabled in the World War is a credit and not a source of shame for Congress.

We have all learned, as a result of this whole thing, that nothing can come from a delegation of the authority of Congress to the President except disaster—in this measure and many others.

If Congress had not taken the bit in its teeth and made these reasonable adjustments, which will call for no additional taxes, the entire remaining savings of the Economy Act, amounting to $250,000,000 a year, would be wiped out.

By voting to override the veto Congress did not pass the bonus. The bonus was not in this bill.

Personally I have always stood and still stand for economy in government; for fair treatment of our soldiers; and for fair treatment of our Government employees. I do not believe that a failure to meet one's legitimate obligations is economy. Congress has been berated by many people who do not know what was in the independent offices bill. It has been exceedingly difficult to set the country right on this subject, in view of the false propaganda which has been put out by people who did not know what they were saying.

I hope that those who have been disturbed by the action of Congress in overriding the veto will now realize, after the facts have been presented to them, that Congress voted to override the veto because it was right that it be overridden, and that the overriding was in the interest of the taxpayers and saved money for the taxpayers.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Private Calendar, beginning at the star.

GIUGLIO ZARELLA

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 5415) for the relief of Giuglio Zarella.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JOSEPH RICCO

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5416, for the relief of Joseph Ricco.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JULIA SANTIAGO

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5579, for the relief of Julia Santiago.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

A. H. MARSHALL

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5588, for the relief of A. H. Marshall.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I withhold my objection to permit the gentleman from Missouri to make an explanation.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am going to object.

This is a bill to appropriate $20,000. The report from the Department shows that he was granted more benefits than the extent of his injuries, and that the Government owes him nothing. We must save this $20,000. I shall object to it, so what is the use of taking further time on it?

NORTHWEST MISSOURI FAIR ASSOCIATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5674, for the relief of the Northwest Missouri Fair Association, of Bethany, Harrison County, Mo.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MILLIGAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection a moment?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I withhold my objection to permit the gentleman to make an explanation.

Mr. MILLIGAN. I would like to know what the gentleman's particular objection to this bill is.

Mr. HOPE. I may say to the gentleman that this is a bill which proposes to appropriate $25,000 from the Federal Treasury to pay damages which are alleged to have been caused by a fire at the State fair grounds in Bethany, Mo. I have gone over the report very carefully and also the letter from the War Department and the findings of the military commission which held hearings in this matter. I am unable to find anything in that report or those hearings which would indicate that there is any liability whatever on the part of the United States Government.

Mr. MILLIGAN. I may state to the gentleman that the record does not show how this fire started, but it does show that this military unit was in absolute control of these fair grounds and had complete policing power of it, and that while they occupied this fair ground the fire did occur and destroyed the property.

The record, as I stated, does not show how the fire started, but this unit was in absolute control of these fair grounds at the time it occurred.

Mr. HOPE. The record does show that the fire started in the grandstand, I believe.

Mr. MILLIGAN. Yes.

Mr. HOPE. And at that time the grandstand was occupied by a crowd witnessing a baseball game.

Mr. MILLIGAN. And they had been invited by this military organization which had control of the fair grounds.

Mr. HOPE. The crowd was there to witness the baseball game between members of this military organization and an outside team, as I understand it; town people and members of the military organization, I assume, were there.

Mr. MILLIGAN. Not of this particular town where the grounds were located, but another town.

Mr. HOPE. As I understand it, none of the buildings were occupied by these troops at the time; they were simply camping there in the open.

Mr. MILLIGAN. It is true that the buildings themselves which were destroyed were not occupied, but they were on the fairgrounds, and the fairgrounds as a whole were under the control of this military organization. There is no doubt the organization was using the grandstand where the fire originally started.

Mr. HOPE. I think that if it could be shown that this fire was caused by the occupancy of these buildings by this military organization and that somebody belonging to the organization was responsible for starting the fire, either willfully or through gross negligence, there might be some claim against the Government of the United States; but the finding of this military tribunal which met to consider this matter clearly indicates, it seems to me, that such was not the case.

Mr. MILLIGAN. But they had complete jurisdiction and charge of these grounds. They held this ball game. They invited guests or at least allowed guests to come there and occupy the grandstand during this ball game.

The fire occurred in the grandstand which these guests were occupying at the time of the fire.

Mr. LOZIER. May I say to the gentleman from Kansas that this military unit was traveling from Fort Leavenworth to a fort in Iowa. On a Saturday afternoon they came into the town of Bethany and requested the privilege of camping in the fairgrounds. This privilege was granted. Troops took possession and had charge of the fairgrounds from Saturday afternoon until after the fire Sunday afternoon. They were occupying these fairgrounds by the generosity and courtesy of the fair association. They had complete charge of and policed the grounds. On Sunday afternoon they scheduled a baseball game in which a team drawn from this military unit participated, and to which the general public was invited. The troops had charge of the gates and in a military manner directed the traffic and crowd. During the progress of the game, fire was discovered in the rear part of the grandstand. No one knows how this fire originated.

The question involved in this bill is, Will the United States Government escape liability in a case of this kind, where its troops marching through the country are granted the privilege of camping on grounds owned by a county fair association and, while they are in possession of the fair grounds, $25,000 worth of property is destroyed? Of course, no one saw the fire originate, but in all good conscience and equity, certainly the Government of the United States should indemnify the fair association for the damages the property sustained while in possession of the troops and the Government ought not to put upon the Fair Grounds Association the burden of proof and compel the association to affirmatively show that this fire originated as a result of the negligence of some member of that troop.

I think in all fairness that the Government of the United States ought not raise this issue or resist this payment. The troops were there by the courtesy of the fair association, and it would be unconscionable to require the Fair Association to affirmatively establish the origin of the fire or to show that it resulted from the negligence of the troops. The military forces were in charge of the buildings. They were in charge of the grounds. They were in charge of the crowd which was there by the invitation of the troops. The visitors were guests of the regiment. While the troops were occupying these grounds, putting on a show to which the public was invited, $25,000 worth of buildings were destroyed. I repeat it is unconscionable for the Government of the United States under these conditions to say to the fair association: "You turned over these grounds to us. You permitted us to encamp here. While we are in possession, your buildings were destroyed by fire, which originated from an unknown cause. Now we are going to put upon you (the association) the responsibility to affirmatively show that the fire originated through some overt act or negligence on the part of some of these troopers." The Government of the United States, in all equity and good conscience, should be willing to respond for the reasonable damages sustained under these conditions.

Mr. MILLIGAN. It is true that they maintained a wire fence 10 feet high around the grounds. The gates were locked at all times, and were opened and unlocked for this organization, which put guards on the gates.

Mr. LOZIER. That is true. May I say that the evidence also shows that the troops in moving their trucks ran across a fire hose, damaging the hose and preventing it from functioning efficiently.

Mr. HOPE. There is some difference of opinion on that point. The evidence is quite conflicting.

Mr. LOZIER. There is no contradiction of the fact that the Government trucks did run over the fire hose and as a result the hose was damaged to such an extent that it was not able to deliver a sufficient supply of water to extinguish the flames. It is perfectly all right for the gentleman from Kansas to object, but I hope the time has not come when the Government of the United States can escape liability in a case of this character. A company of troops, marching from one State to another, enters a friendly community, asks the people to give them a camping place in a fairground owned by public-spirited citizens; and while in possession of this property, it is destroyed. Is it conceivable that the Government of the United States, after enjoying these courtesies, and doing this damage, can say to the people whose hospitality they have enjoyed, "We will place upon you the burden to affirmatively show that some member of the troop is responsible for the conflagration"? If the fire was caused by one of the guests of the United States dropping a cigar or lighted match in trash, certainly the Government of the United States ought not to escape liability.

Mr. HOPE. The gentleman is an attorney, of course. If these grounds had been leased to a tenant and a fire occurred while that tenant, a private individual, was in control and in occupancy of these premises, would the gentleman say that the tenant was responsible for any damage that might occur as a result of the fire?

Mr. LOZIER. Answering the gentleman, may I say that the question as to what caused the fire is a question of fact. If the evidence in this case were submitted to a jury to try the issue of fact as to whether or not this fire resulted from negligence on the part of the United States or some of its guests, the jury would find from the evidence that the Government of the United States was responsible for this conflagration.

Mr. HOPE. That is not answering the question. My question was, If this were a case where a private individual was occupying the property as a tenant and the property burned under these circumstances, no one knowing the cause of the fire, would the gentleman say the tenant was liable for the damage that occurred?

Mr. MILLIGAN. The agreement was when they took over the grounds that they would return them in as good, if not better, condition than when they received them.

Mr. HOPE. The gentleman understands an act of God, such as a fire, is always an exception.

Mr. MILLIGAN. This was not an act of God under the law, and there is no evidence to that effect.

Mr. HOPE. There is nothing to show that it was not.

Mr. LOZIER. May I answer the gentleman's question by saying that the gentleman is familiar with the principle that a greater degree of care is required when the bailee or the person in possession is there by tolerance, accommodation, and courtesy and not for hire?

Mr. HOPE. The gentleman understands that there was rent paid. The Army paid a rental charge of $10, as I understand, and the water bill.

Mr. LOZIER. Just a nominal rent.

Mr. HOPE. I do not know how nominal it was, but there was a charge made for the occupancy of these grounds.

Mr. MILLIGAN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. They did not charge for occupying these grounds, but the next day the lieutenant in command of this organization came and paid $10 and the water bill just before he left.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. HOPE. Whether there was compensation paid or not, I think the same principle would apply. Mr. Speaker, I object.

B. EDWARD WESTWOOD

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Private Calendar 297, the bill (H.R. 4516) for the relief of B. Edward Westwood, that was passed over yesterday without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to credit the account of B. Edward Westwood, postmaster at Youngstown, Ohio, in the sum of $891.17, such sum representing the deficit in the account of the said B. Edward Westwood, caused by burglary to the post office on December 25, 1931, and for which casualty the said B. Edward Westwood was in no way responsible.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VETERANS' LEGISLATION

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein a speech made last evening by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] on the question of veterans' legislation as affected by the independent offices bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following speech made last evening by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] on the question of veterans' legislation as affected by the independent offices bill.

Friends of the radio audience, I am greatly indebted to the National Broadcasting Co. for the invitation to speak to you tonight, not only because of the pleasure it gives me, but also because it may serve to clear up a considerable misunderstanding which seems to prevail concerning the independent offices appropriation bill. This is the bill which was recently vetoed by the President and subsequently passed by both Houses of Congress.

I have seen a number of editorial comments in daily papers concerning this bill and its effect on veterans that, to say the least, astounded me. It is quite apparent that those comments were written by men who had never read this bill, or who did not understand it even if they had read it.

So far as I have seen, there have been no comments about the employees' pay restoration, and I am going to confine myself solely, for the present at least, to the provisions of the bill specifically dealing with veterans' benefits, because these are the provisions which have been so greatly misunderstood and because of which most of the difficulty has arisen.

I have before me a letter from the Budget Bureau advising that the figure of increased benefits awarded to veterans by this bill is a total of $103,000,000, $20,000,000 of which comes in the fiscal year 1934 for the remainder of that year, and $83,000,000 of which is the estimated annual increase in appropriation for the year 1935. I have also before me a photostatic copy of the calculations of the Veterans' Bureau in which this $83,000,000 is detailed. In round figures this calculation shows the increased payments to World War veterans admittedly disabled in service equal to $30,000,000; the increased payments to 29,000 presumptives, pending disposal of their cases on appeal, at the rate of $11,750,000; the increased payments to Spanish-American War veterans equal to $37,427,000; and certain small miscellaneous items for pensions prior to the war of 1898, insurance, etc., amounting to approximately $4,000,000.

Turning now to the provisions of the bill itself, it will be found that the veterans' provisions come under title 3, being amendments 26 to 35, inclusive. It is these amendments which contain the appropriation of $83,000,000. I think I can show you that $61,750,000 of this amount was, or would have been, necessary to take care of expenditures authorized and to be incurred under regulations issued by the President.

Referring to the veto message, the President said:

"I intend now by regulation forthwith to direct an appeal by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs in each and every one of these disallowed 29,000 cases with the further direction that in the final determination of these cases every reasonable doubt be resolved in favor of the veteran, and every assistance be rendered in the preparation and presentation of these cases. While these cases are pending the veterans will be paid 75 percent of the compensation they received prior to the time they were removed from the rolls. If the appeal is allowed, they will receive back compensation. Only in cases disallowed by the Board of Appeals will the veteran thereafter be permanently removed from the rolls. This regulation will be put into effect at once."

The necessary initial cost incurred under this order is $11,750,000 annually.

Further the veto message said:

"By regulation 12 a presumption of service origin was extended to Spanish-American War veterans on the rolls on March 19, 1933. In order to take the same action which I am taking in regard to World War veterans, I am directing the restoration to the rolls, as of this date, at 75 percent of the amount they were receiving on March 19, 1933, all Spanish-American War veterans pending a final determination of their cases before the Board of Appeals."

The necessary initial cost of this order is at the rate of $50,000,000 a year. It will be seen that by adding the cost of these two orders the total expense authorized by the President is at the rate of $61,750,000 a year, which, deducted from $83,000,000, the amount provided by the bill, leaves a net increase of only $21,000,000 in round figures.

By calculations on the same basis, the Presidential regulations added $16,000,000 for the balance of this fiscal year, while Congress appropriated $20,000,000—an increase of only $4,000,000. Adding this $4,000,000 to the $21,000,000 shows that Congress only added $25,000,000 out of the total of $103,000,000 provided in the bill for the balance of this year and the whole of next year.

I have seen editorial comments to the effect that it was a "veterans' steal", that it restored undeserving cases to the pension roll, that Congress yielded to the pressure of the veterans' lobby because of fear of reelection. There is not a one of these statements true. I say unhesitatingly that this law does more for the deserving cases and less for the undeserving cases than any general law passed by Congress since the war. It affected three general classes of veterans—two of the World War and one of the Spanish-American War.

Not a single World War veteran was permanently restored to the rolls whose disability did not arise directly by reason of the service which he performed to his country. Some non-service-connected disabled men among the presumptives may have been restored temporarily pending appeals, but none permanently. Not a single veteran was restored to the roll who had not joined the Army prior to the expiration of the war, nor was anyone restored whose disability arose by reason of his own misconduct, and in Spanish-American War cases the pension was allowed only to veterans who did not have sufficient income to pay a Federal income tax.

Now let us take the actual bill and analyze it.

First. You will remember that under the Economy Act World War veterans suffering from disabilities admittedly proven to have been incurred by their service had their compensation reduced from an average of $43 a month to an average of $34 a month. This bill restored the previous compensation, or an average of $9 a month. The total cost, according to the Veterans' Bureau, of this provision, is $30,000,000 per year. There certainly can be no objection on the part of anybody to that feature of this law. The Government has a sacred obligation to these men who sacrificed their bodies and their health to our cause.

Second. This bill restored to the pension rolls, pending appeal, certain men who contracted a disability such as tuberculosis, dementia praecox, paralysis, etc., prior to January 1, 1925. Under a law passed in 1925 these men had been presumptively entitled to a service-connected rating, and that being true, they had not attempted to obtain evidence of the origin of their disability, but had relied, as they were entitled to rely, solely upon the presumption. Last year we provided, and the Chief Executive signed, a bill entitling these men to their compensation pending a review of their cases. The present bill gave these men 75 percent of their compensation pending an appeal from this review. This bill specifically provided, however, that the Government could show "by clear and convincing evidence" that their disability arose prior to or subsequent to their service. So that these men are not permanently on the rolls. They are entitled to the benefit of the doubt. They are relieved of the burden of proof, but if their disabilities did not arise by reason of their service they will go off the pension rolls after the decision of their cases on appeal.

If you will read the veto message, you will see that the Chief Executive offered to and actually did do exactly the same thing that this bill does, restore these men at 75 percent of their previous compensation pending appeal and giving them the benefit of any reasonable doubt. A very careful study of this regulation and this bill leads me to the conclusion that the result of the words used in the Executive order and in the bill will be almost exactly the same. The cost of this was $11,750,000.

The third class of veterans affected was the Spanish-American War veterans, and this case was the only one in which men whose disabilities were not strictly of service origin were put on the pension rolls. I might say in this connection that the Federal Government has granted these service pensions to the veterans of every war since the Revolution when they arrived at ages between 55 and 60. Spanish-American War veterans are now an average of 61 years of age and have received since 1930 service pensions ranging from $20 to $60 per month for total disability, irrespective of the origin of this disability. All this was changed under the Economy Act and in its place the Chief Executive allowed these men $15 per month if over 55 years of age, 50 percent disabled, and in need, and $30 per month if totally disabled and in need. All this bill did was to make this service pension begin at $15 for men 25 percent disabled and run up to $45 for men totally disabled. The total additional cost of this legislation would be $37,500,000.

In this connection let me call your attention again to the veto message, wherein the Chief Executive offered to restore all the Spanish-American War veterans who had previously been receiving pensions to the rolls at 75 percent of their previous amount, pending a review of their cases, to determine the service-connected origin of their disability. The total cost of this would be $50,000,000 a year for the first year. This was an increase of $13,000,000 over this bill, which arises by reason of the fact that the recent law excluded approximately 15,000 veterans, 12,000 of whom joined the service after the close of the Spanish-American War; approximately 1,000 of whom were suffering from diseases caused by their own misconduct; and 2,000 of whom were not exempted from the payment of an income tax and therefore not in need. Of course it might be said that these men, under the President's plan would ultimately go off the rolls because they cannot prove their service connection. I do not want to enter into the difficulty, even the impossibility, of requiring such proof from these veterans after 36 years of separation from the service. I know that difficulty, as does everyone who has tried to help them in the preparation of their affidavits. But I do call your attention to the fact that if the boards of review handled an average of 60 cases a day that it would take over 3,000 workings days—more than 10 years, to complete the review of all these cases.

Now if you will review these facts you will find that the additional cost of full compensation to men admittedly disabled by their service constitutes the increased annual cost of $21,250,000 over and above that recommended by the administration. I have said that this cost was $30,000,000, but you will remember that the administration recommended a $13,000,000 increase to Spanish-American War veterans. There are in the bill certain increases of 5 percent in the pensions of veterans of the Civil War, Indian wars, etc., amounting to about $4,000,000, and after deducting these amounts from the $13,000,000 it leaves the net increase of $21,250,000.

This bill passed the House originally without any legislation with respect to veterans. It went to the Senate and was amended to include a 15-percent pay restoration costing $187,500,000 and considerably increased veterans' benefits. When it came back to the House we wrote our own amendment, which afterward became the law, and by that amendment excepted from the provisions all soldiers who joined after the close of each war, all misconduct cases, all cases that were on by fraud, accident, or mistake, and all cases of Spanish-American War veterans who had sufficient income to be required to pay an income tax, all widows who remarried, and in every way limited the operation of this bill to veterans whom everybody admits are truly deserving.

We voted for it at that time and subsequently voted for it when the Senate again disagreed. It was our duty to make a study of the legislation, and we did so, and having reached that conclusion and voted that way, we could not go back on the conviction which had been formed.

The editorial comment has referred to this action of Congress as a revolt against the President. There is nothing further from the truth than that statement. The leadership of Franklin D. Roosevelt cannot be impaired by such a minor disagreement as this. There is no Member of Congress who today does not yield as great a measure of admiration and respect for our President as before this occurrence. The legislative branch of the Government had its duty to perform, the executive branch had its duty to perform; and the leadership in the White House remains unimpaired in the confidence of the Congress, just as whole-heartedly and as sincerely as it remains unimpaired in the confidence of the people.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

COAL-LEASE RENTALS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5703, to authorize the waiver or remission of certain coal-lease rentals, and for other purposes.

There being no objection the Clerk read a similar Senate bill (S. 606), as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to waive and remit all rentals due the United States and charged against the Alaska Matanuska Coal Co., holder of Anchorage, Alaska, coal-land lease no. 04794–05236, between April 3, 1926, and May 3, 1929, during which period the lessee company was out of possession and prevented from operating said mine because same was in the hands of a receiver appointed by the United States Court for the District of Alaska; also between July 10, 1931, and August 10, 1932, during which period the Alaska Railroad was in possession of said mine and operating same, reimbursing itself therefor by mining, removing, and using coal.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHARLES G. JOHNSON, STATE TREASURER OF CALIFORNIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5855, for the relief of Charles G. Johnson, State treasurer of the State of California.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the author of the bill present?

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, the author of the bill, the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT], is unavoidably detained at a very important committee meeting, but I know some of the circumstances.

The gentleman will, perhaps, recall that the President, a few days ago, vetoed a somewhat similar bill on the ground it could not be determined whether or not the interest coupons had ever been paid, as they had no means of checking that. However, in this case the bonds are in the denomination of $100,000. There are several of them—10, I believe—and it is the interest coupons that are lost. Now, owing to the fact that these bonds are of large denominations, the Treasury Department has been able to check them, and it finds that these coupons have never been redeemed. The 10 coupons set out here which were lost or destroyed, inadvertently, by the State treasurer of California, have never come in. The State treasurer offers to put up a bond to indemnify the Government in the event these interest coupons should ever appear.

Mr. TRUAX. In view of the fact the President did veto a similar bill, would not the gentleman be willing for this bill to be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. CARTER of California. Let me say to the gentleman that the President vetoed the other bill because they were of small denominations, and it would have taken months and months of search to determine whether or not the interest coupons had been paid. That is not the case here. A search has been made in this case, and they found the sacks in which interest coupons from bonds of the same series have been cashed, and the coupons on these particular bonds have not been cashed. This takes it out of the rule on which the President vetoed the other bill. I think the bill is absolutely fair. The Government is amply protected by the bond that the State of California, through its treasurer, will put up. A long time has already elapsed, and the interest coupons have not come in. If I could not make this statement with certainty, then the gentleman's objection would be absolutely good and valid.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman will note the concluding paragraph of Mr. Ogden L. Mills' letter, in which he states:

> I do not desire to make any recommendation as to this bill or to express an opinion as to its merits. If it is to be passed, however, it should not be in its present form, for the reason that it does not sufficiently identify the coupons for which relief is to be given. I am enclosing herewith a draft of the bill in the form preferred by the Treasury Department if it is decided to grant relief.

Mr. CARTER of California. That objection which the gentleman raises is perfectly reasonable and logical. If the gentleman will turn to the first part of Mr. Ogden Mills' letter, he will note that the number of the bill Mr. Mills is talking about is H.R. 11525. The bill the gentleman has in his hand is H.R. 5855, which is the bill that the Secretary of the Treasury said should be introduced.

Mr. TRUAX. But he did not recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. CARTER of California. In this form; yes. This is the bill he said should be passed.

Mr. TRUAX. In view of the circumstances, I ask the gentleman to let this bill be passed over without prejudice until the next call of the calendar.

Mr. CARTER of California. To be taken up later in the day? I should be very agreeable to that.

Mr. TRUAX. Either later in the day or at the next call of the calendar.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

OSCAR P. COX

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5935, for the relief of Oscar P. Cox.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Oscar P. Cox, United States marshal for the district of Hawaii, the sum of $524.37. Said sum represents the amount charged Oscar P. Cox by the United States by reason of his hiring extra guards to accompany Federal prisoners from Hawaii to Leavenworth, Kans.

With the following committee amendment:

At the end of line 10 insert "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MABEL CARVER

The Clerk read the next bill on the calendar, H. R. 6324, for the relief of Mabel Carver.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mabel Carver the sum of $2,500 for injuries sustained on August 24, 1929, as a result of being shot by a United States Marine while visiting the United States navy yard at Philadelphia, Pa.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this Act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 5, after the figures "$2,500", insert "In full settlement of all claims against the United States."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TO RESTORE WATER OF HIGH MINERAL CONTENT ON LAND OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

The Clerk called the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 6366, making appropriation to restore water of high mineral content on land owned and controlled by the Federal Government.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a sum not to exceed $250 is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the supervision of the postmaster at Lincoln, Nebr., for the purpose of providing a pump which will restore the flow of mineral water to the fountain, the well being dug on Government square about March 15, 1872. The well was put down at large expense by the citizens of Lincoln, Nebr., and was known as "Market Square Well." The well is now covered over by the Lincoln post-office building, but is in good state of preservation and can be restored to its former use without a large expense. After the well is restored to its former status the citizens of Lincoln are to maintain the well without expense to the Government. The Government owning and controlling the ground, the citizens in justification believe that this restoration of water of great mineral benefit to the community should be made by the Government by means of a small Federal appropriation, as stated, to purchase and install the necessary pump.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LUCIEN M. GRANT

The Clerk called the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 6386, for the relief of Lucien M. Grant.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Lucien M. Grant, lieutenant commander, Construction Corps, United States Navy, the sum of $184.02 for actual and necessary expenses incurred by him in transportation of his dependents and personal effects from Philadelphia, Pa., to Pensacola, Fla., and return, while carrying out orders of the Navy Department.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MRS. PLEASANT LAWRENCE PARR

The Clerk called the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 6890, for the relief of Mrs. Pleasant Lawrence Parr.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOPE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be passed over, and that we may return to it later in the day.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

J. F. HUBBARD

The Clerk called the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 6936, for the relief of J. F. Hubbard.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Reserving the right to object, I note from the record that this claim originated in 1902—32 years ago. It would look as if this claimant had slept on his rights.

Mr. COFFIN. I do not know when the bill was introduced.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It seems that he was guilty of lapses in not enforcing his claim until this late day. I think we ought to discourage the revival of these old claims.

Mr. COFFIN. I only know from the report that the money was placed to the credit of the United States Treasurer and shows an outstanding liability.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The gentleman sees that the claimant made no effort to collect it since 1907, when he made a feeble effort. I feel that I must object.

MRS. JOSEPH RONCOLI

The Clerk called the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 7028, for the relief of Mrs. Joseph Roncoli.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Joseph Roncoli the sum of $2,500 in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for injuries sustained by her when struck by a truck owned and operated by the Navy Department while alighting from a street car at Twenty-third Street and Seventh Avenue, in New York City: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ST. ANTHONY'S HOSPITAL, MICHIGAN CITY, IND.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7067, for the relief of St. Anthony's Hospital, at Michigan City, Ind.; Dr. Russell A. Gilmore; Emily Molzen, nurse; and the Hummer Mortuary.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the naval hospital fund, to St. Anthony's Hospital at Michigan City, Ind., the sum of $224.30; to Dr. Russell A. Gilmore the sum of $170; to Emily Molzen, nurse, the sum of $203; and to the Hummer Mortuary the sum of $10; in all, $607.30, for services and professional treatment rendered to Max Harmon Connelly, fireman, third-class (F-1), United States Naval Reserve, while ill with typhoid fever contracted during the period from August 8 to August 22, 1931, while on active duty.

With the following committee amendments:

Line 8, after the figures "$607.30", insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States"; page 2, line 6, after the word "duty", insert "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claims. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ESTATE OF NELLIE LAMSON

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7168, for making compensation to the estate of Nellie Lamson.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to inquire whether the author of the bill would have any objection to the usual formal amendments relating to the attorneys' fees and that the amount mentioned in the bill shall be in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to accept those amendments.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I don't think the Government should pay for the loss of some fox pups, which were alleged to have been killed by careless blasting. I think it would be hard to establish a cause of action.

Mr. DIMOND. Will the gentleman reserve his objection until I can make an explanation?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Certainly.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, while I was not present on the ground—I live within 200 miles of the place where the injuries occurred—yet I am familiar with the matter. The blasting was the cause of the death of these foxes just as much as if the gentleman were to shoot me and I should drop down dead. He could say that I died of heart disease and not of the shot, but after all, when a man has a bullet through him, that is generally considered the cause of his death.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Is it not true that along the Alaska Railroad they were continually blasting?

Mr. DIMOND. This was not the Alaska Railroad, it was the Alaska Road Commission.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. They were doing a considerable amount of blasting along that highway.

Mr. DIMOND. They were warned in advance, and orders were given by the superintendent to put the blasts off in such fashion that they would not do this particular damage, but instead of that the blasting was turned over to an inexperienced man, and instead of putting the blasts off in proper fashion he was grossly negligent and permitted the blasts to go off in such fashion that they caused this damage.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Could they not have taken the foxes and the pups away from there?

Mr. DIMOND. That was not possible. That would have resulted in the death of the foxes, anyway. Although I have never raised foxes, I am familiar with their breeding. You cannot move them when they are young.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Does the gentleman contend that this blast killed the adult foxes later on?

Mr. DIMOND. Yes; the blasts were the cause of the deaths of all these foxes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. They died the next day.

Mr. DIMOND. Foxes are very sensitive animals, and as nearly as anybody can arrive at a reasonable conclusion, these blasts did cause the death of all of them. Any loud or violent noise is liable to bring about the same result. I hope the gentleman will not object, because this is a very just claim.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Not being an authority on foxes or fox pups, I shall take the word of the gentleman from Alaska for it and withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $325 to Frank A. Lamson, as the administrator of the estate of Nellie Lamson, of Lower Tonsina, Alaska, deceased, as compensation for the loss of 19 foxes, the property of the said Nellie Lamson, which were killed as a result of careless dynamite blasting on the homestead of the said Nellie Lamson by the employees of the Alaska Road Commission while engaged in public work for the Government on May 2, 1931.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendments, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments by Mr. HOPE: Page 1, line 5, after the figures, insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States", and at the end of line 12, page 1, insert "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider laid on the table.

H. A. SODERBERG

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7289, for the relief of H. A. Soderberg.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is the author of the bill present?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman please explain this?

Mr. MURDOCK. This is a bill to compensate H. A. Soderberg, United States commissioner at Ogden, for services rendered by him during the time intervening between the expiration of one commission and his reappointment to the same office a few months later on. The matter was submitted to Comptroller General McCarl and the amount was reduced from $169, the original amount of the bill, to $147.

Mr. TRUAX. Does the gentleman mean that Mr. Soderberg was fulfilling the duties of his office in the interim that occurred between the two appointments?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. His original appointment had lapsed?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. And later on he was reappointed and continued his duty?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to settle and certify for payment to H. A. Soderberg, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $147 in full for services rendered as a de facto United States commissioner at Ogden, Utah, from January 4 to August 19, 1931: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ELIZABETH T. CLOUD

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 190, for the relief of Elizabeth T. Cloud.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the figures "$771.97" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$596.97"; page 1, line 9, after the word "building", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JACOB DURRENBERGER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 200, for the relief of Jacob Durrenberger.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PIERRE E. TEETS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 206, for the relief of Pierre E. Teets.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ANNE B. SLOCUM

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 210, for the relief of Anne B. Slocum.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

BENJAMIN STERN ET AL.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 265, for the relief of Benjamin Stern, and Melville A. Stern and Benjamin Stern, as executors under the last will and testament of Louis Stern, deceased, and Arthur H. Hahlo as executor under the last will and testament of Isaac Stern, deceased, all of New York City, N.Y., for compensation and in settlement of their damages and loss sustained by virtue of a lease in writing, dated September 12, 1919, between the said parties and the United States of America, by Daniel C. Roper, Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

WILLIAM A. REITHEL

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 290, for the relief of William A. Reithel.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Reserving the right to object, unless the author of the bill agrees to a reduction in amount to $3,000, I shall have to object to the bill.

Mr. RUDD. The author of the bill is sick.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ARTHUR RICHTER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 308, for the relief of Arthur Richter.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

DOUGLAS B. ESPY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 325, for the relief of Douglas B. Espy.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CON MURPHY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 326, for the relief of Con Murphy.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MORRIS DIETRICH

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 374, for the relief of Morris Dietrich.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BROOKHILL CORPORATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 458, for the relief of the Brookhill Corporation.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

YVONNE HALE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 492, for the relief of Yvonne Hale.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

JOHN N. BROOKS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 704, for the relief of John N. Brooks.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

KATHRYN THURSTON

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 878, for the relief of Kathryn Thurston.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LAMNECK. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. HOPE. I will withhold it.

Mr. LAMNECK. This is a case where a detective working during the time the railroads were under control of the Federal Government was murdered.

For a long time afterwards it could not be proven that he was murdered. About 12 years after his death a man confessed to his murder and the guilty party was executed. Now, according to all the rules and regulations the widow of this murdered detective was entitled to compensation for his death in the discharge of his duty. His widow is in destitute circumstances. At one time she was paid a small amount of money because it could not be proven that this man was murdered in the discharge of his duty; but later it was found that he had been murdered in the discharge of his duty and it was thought that this destitute widow was entitled to fair compensation for the loss of her husband. It is a just case and ought to be allowed.

Mr. HOPE. Of course, the former settlement was supposed to be in full settlement of all damages for which the Railroad Administration was liable, was it not?

Mr. LAMNECK. They could not prove any liability on the part of the Railroad Administration because they did not know that he was actually murdered until 12 years after his death.

Mr. HOPE. If, however, he was killed in the discharge of his duties as a watchman, there would have been some liability whether he was murdered or had been killed in some other manner.

Mr. LAMNECK. But they could not prove that he was actually killed in the discharge of his duties.

Mr. HOPE. Does the gentleman think the legal liability of the Railroad Administration would have been any greater had this man been murdered than if he had been killed in some other manner in the discharge of his duty?

Mr. LAMNECK. I certainly do. Had it been known at the time of his death that he was killed in the discharge of his duties, the widow would have been entitled to a much greater sum than she was paid.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. LAMNECK. She was paid $1,000. That did not pay even the funeral expenses. This woman is in terrible circumstances now and certainly is entitled to more than $1,000, as I see it.

Mr. HOPE. There is nothing in the report except the bare statement that indicates that there was any proof that this man was actually murdered. There is a statement in the report that later his murderer was found and confessed.

Mr. REED of New York. What are the facts in that connection?

Mr. LAMNECK. The facts were that at the time he lost his life the circumstances were mysterious. They did not really know what happened. Later when this criminal was caught and confessed, he said he had murdered this man, that he had broken into a box car and when the detective came up he shot the detective.

Mr. REED of New York. What amount is ordinarily allowed in such cases?

Mr. LAMNECK. It varies a great deal.

Mr. REED of New York. But it is more than $1,000?

Mr. LAMNECK. Yes; it is at least $5,000 or $6,000. Under the workmen's compensation law they are allowed $6,000.

Mr. REED of New York. Is it not the usual custom of Congress to allow $5,000 on a death claim?

Mr. LAMNECK. I urge the gentleman from Kansas to be lenient in this case, for the claimant is a worthy person. The widow is entitled to this money. If ever there was a just claim this is it.

Mr. REED of New York. Has the widow any children?

Mr. LAMNECK. Yes; she has a family.

Mr. HOPE. This was a claim which originated 15 years ago during the war period.

Mr. LAMNECK. That is right.

Mr. HOPE. The correspondence is set out in the report.

Mr. LAMNECK. I have absolute proof in my files. I did not know that we were going to cover a hundred bills in such a short time or I would have had my files here. I have a copy of the confession in the files.

Mr. HOPE. I am perfectly willing to take the gentleman's word for it. The only reason I made the inquiry was that in the report the matter is disposed of with the bare statement that later it was discovered that he had been murdered.

It seems to me, in view of the great length of time which has elapsed, and in view of the further fact that the former settlement was supposed to be a full and complete settlement, that this bill calls for a little too large an amount to be paid.

Mr. LAMNECK. I am willing to compromise on the amount.

Mr. HOPE. I would suggest that if the gentleman would be willing to accept an amendment reducing the amount to $2,500 I would not offer any objection.

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, I will accept the amendment the gentleman suggests.

Mr. HOPE. With that understanding, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. LAMNECK. That much is better than nothing.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Kathryn Thurston, widow of Charles Thurston, the sum of $4,000 in full settlement of all claims against the United States because of the death of the said Charles Thurston, who was an employee of the United States Railroad Administration and who was killed while in the performance of his duties as such employee on or about February 2, 1920, at Columbus, Ohio: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOPE: Page 1, line 6, strike out "$4,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MARY E. RONEY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 940, for the relief of Mary E. Roney.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, there are a number of reasons why this bill should not pass, I may state to our good friend from Maryland.

In the first place, we have established here a rule of practice for the guidance of all Members—and it is the Members themselves who have established it—that on a death claim the maximum shall be $5,000. This is a Washington case. This Government has done much for Washington and the people of Washington.

This man was killed by being struck by a police patrol; not a Government patrol but a District of Columbia police patrol. Under the law the widow did not have to go to court, she did not have to employ a lawyer, she did not have to go to any trouble like the gentleman's constituents and mine have to when they get hurt at home. The Commissioners of the District very promptly, under the law, granted her the full maximum for a death claim, $5,000; and they paid her in cash and she has received the money. Now, one of the most prominent Members of Congress, one of our most valuable Members, one of our popular Members, happens to be her Congressman, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS], and he comes in and wants the Government, in addition to the $5,000 which is the maximum for a death claim, which amount the claimant has received, to pay her $3,000 more.

Under all the circumstances the Government is not liable for one penny; it is not liable morally, it is not liable legally, it is not liable equitably.

Does the gentleman want us, because we are his good friends and because we appreciate him and because we would vote for him for probably any position for which he might run, to stand by and let this bill pass?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. The gentleman from Maryland only wants the gentleman from Texas to be willing to submit this matter to the conscience of the House and not deny this widow lady her day in court by a merely arbitrary objection.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman admits that she has received $5,000 in cash?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I do; but this one fact does not constitute the whole case.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is a just man. Does he not think that there have been some pathetic cases here where men have been killed and have left their widows and little children in a terrible state of dependency? Does not the gentleman think that, if we pass his bill, we ought to go back and open up all the other cases and increase the amount allowed them from $5,000 to $8,000?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. The gentleman is a very skillful actor from the courthouse, one can see. All I am asking you and other Members here is that this matter be submitted fairly to the conscience of this body. May I make a further statement of the facts in a most general way.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. George H. Rooney, a man 37 years of age, a World War veteran, privately employed as a certified watchmaker in the city of Washington, was on his way home on October 14, 1930. He was earning a salary of $4,000 a year. Alighting from a street car, he was run down by a police patrol automobile operating on the wrong side of the road.

Mr. BLANTON. In Washington, for Washington, and for the District of Columbia.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. If the gentleman has any doubt about the liability of the District of Columbia under this bill rather than the General Government, I shall thank him for an amendment which will relieve his doubt.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Does not the gentleman feel that when we have adopted a rule of thumb, you might say, over quite a period of time as to the amount that may be paid in a particular case we should stick to the rule?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I do not. A rule that violates the laws of conscience and justice lives long enough if it lives but one session; and I should not be bound by it.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Is it not true that the law of the District fixes $5,000 as the limit in such cases?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. The law probably does. This particular matter has been taken to the District Commissioners and they themselves confessed the injustice and inadequacy of the compensation paid. I may pay this tribute to their sense of justice. They tried to give the widow some sort of a position in the District service that would complete the compensation, but none could be found.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Was this man not an employee of the District?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. He was not. He was a private employee.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I mean the employee that caused the accident.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. The District police patrol was running along the wrong side of the road. As the decedent got out of the street car the police patrol struck him and hurled his dead body some 60 feet.

Mr. HOLLISTER. But a District employee did cause the accident and there is a limitation in the District of Columbia in such cases of $5,000.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. That is to govern litigation in a courthouse. The bill provides that nothing shall go to attorneys. The gentleman from Texas has told us that nothing has gone to attorneys so far. Here is a widow with a child to raise, and with a little property on which there is a mortgage.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. On what theory is there liability on the part of the Government?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. The liability is upon the District of Columbia and the bill is intended to fix the liability only of the District of Columbia. It asks for additional compensation of $5,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Where the District has a law fixing the maximum liability at $5,000 for death from a tort, and where the people of the District of Columbia have to respond in taxes for all the money paid out of their funds, and where their rights are in our charge—we are the custodians of their rights—does the gentleman think it would be fair for us to override their laws and regulations in a particular case because it appeals to his heart and his conscience, not general to everybody, but just in this particular case? Does the gentleman think we ought to throw the law and all rules aside and pay out more money?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, my answer to that is that whatever the rule of justice is when applicable to a private defendant is equally a rule of justice applicable to the District of Columbia. I know of no principle of justice upon which the District of Columbia may be permitted to reduce its obligation one half as compared with the liability of a private defendant.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to be fair with the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I want the gentleman to be fair to this case.

Mr. BLANTON. It is now 23 minutes to 2 o'clock. If the gentleman will ask unanimous consent that at 3 o'clock we take this bill up under the general rules for consideration and each side be given 15 minutes' debate, and then vote on the question, we will meet the gentleman on the issue and let the Membership vote. If the gentleman will ask unanimous consent to that effect, I will not object.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I think the gentleman's proposal has been made in good faith. The gentleman suggests that I ask that consideration be postponed until 3 o'clock?

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will ask unanimous consent that at 3 o'clock we take this up under the general rules of the House, allowing 15 minutes on the side for debate, and let the Membership of the House vote on this matter, I shall not object, because I do not believe the House, after such debate, will pass the bill.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I make such a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I point out again that we are establishing a precedent that is going to interfere with the orderly procedure in reference to the calling of the Private Calendar. A great many gentlemen have put aside a certain amount of time to come here and take care of their private bills. A precedent of this kind merely invites similar procedure in other cases, and I am therefore compelled to object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I object.

AMATEUR BOXING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table S. 828 to authorize boxing in the District of Columbia and for other purposes, with House amendments thereto, insist on the House amendment and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mrs. NORTON, Mr. PALMISANO, and Mr. WHITLEY.

BERYL ELLIOTT

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1000, for the relief of Beryl Elliott.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection a moment?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I withhold it, Mr. Speaker, to permit the gentleman from Oklahoma to make a statement.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been reported favorably and passed by the House on one or two occasions.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I also note it has been objected to on several occasions, I may say to my friend.

Mr. McKEOWN. The only man who ever objected to it was Mr. Stafford.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Let me say very frankly to the gentleman from Oklahoma that I admire him for his persistence and aggressiveness. I note he appeared for this claimant before the Compensation Commission in 1926 and pleaded her cause and then made an application to reopen the case and filed additional evidence. The gentleman was unsuccessful in both of these attempts. For some reason he did not file an appeal but has been introducing bills for this woman's relief from 1926 to date. However, it does not seem to me we should be called upon to sit here as a court of appeals.

Mr. McKEOWN. They made it quite plain that this is the only appeal she can have. There is really no appeal from the order of the Commission, and they did not give us any appeal. They were willing to grant the relief if they had the power to do it. As a matter of fact, this woman is sick with tuberculosis, and she is a widow with a child. All we have asked is that she be given the same thing that has been given everybody else under the present rules. This case came up at a time when the rule was different from what it is today, and for that reason she was denied this relief. At that time they did not permit such tuberculosis cases to be considered, and that is why this relief was not granted. Since that time the rule has been changed.

This party contracted tuberculosis while she was employed in this hospital and today has active tuberculosis, and the only reason I have been persistent is because of the merit in the case.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. We all admire the gentleman for his loyalty to his constituents.

Mr. McKEOWN. This woman does not even live in my district. She is now in San Antonio, Tex., where she has to live because of her tubercular condition. She was originally in my district, but in the early days she went into the service of the Government, and I have taken up her case, although she is not in my district. I have followed it with all the earnestness I possess, because of its real merit.

At the time this case was heard there was no allowance because of presumptive tuberculosis, and such claims were not paid.

This bill passed the House at one time, and I hope the gentleman will not press his objection. The gentleman will note that there is an amendment to the bill giving the Commission the right to consider this woman's case.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The Compensation Commission has specifically found twice, after very full hearing and careful consideration of the evidence to which the gentleman now refers, that the claim should not be allowed on the ground that the evidence did not show that the disease was incurred as a result of her employment by the Government. It is, of course, most unfortunate that anyone should have to suffer from tuberculosis, but there is no reason why the Government should pay an annual retirement allowance unless the disease was the result of her service with the Government. After careful consideration we have two decisions that the tuberculosis was not incident to such service, and I do not feel we are qualified here to overrule the decision of the Compensation Commission.

Mr. McKEOWN. I may say to the gentleman that Dr. Erwin, who was considered one of the ablest men on the gentleman's side of the House, went into this case very thoroughly, and he was the first man to report this bill from the Committee on Claims, based upon the evidence we have in these affidavits showing her contact with this disease.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. That evidence was before the Employees' Compensation Commission?

Mr. McKEOWN. Not these affidavits.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. And it was submitted by the Employees' Compensation Commission to the Committee on Claims of the House?

Mr. McKEOWN. Only part of the evidence was submitted to the committee. Mr. Underhill was chairman of the committee at that time and had this woman examined to ascertain her condition, and I am sure the gentleman does not want to do this poor woman an injustice.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It is extremely difficult to deny my friend from Oklahoma anything, but I do not think we are justified in overruling two decisions of the Employees' Compensation Commission, based on the same evidence.

Mr. McKEOWN. At the time those decisions were rendered, this new rule had not been adopted. If any such person contracts tuberculosis I think he ought to be paid just the same as he would be paid for losing a finger or anything of that sort.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I do, too, but that question has twice been determined by the Commission adversely to this claimant.

Mr. McKEOWN. But the decisions were not based upon that theory.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The gentleman's bill amounts to an adjudication that this woman is entitled to compensation.

Mr. McKEOWN. The committee had this matter up, and I am sure the gentleman does not want to do this poor widow an injustice. It does not mean a thing to me, because she does not even live in my district and she cannot even vote for me. I am simply pleading now that the gentleman, out of the goodness of his heart, will do the right thing by this woman, because I know the circumstances are just as set out here. She was a very healthy woman and was put in the room where these men were who were suffering from tuberculosis, and she was thrown in constant contact with them, and there was not proper ventilation, and so forth. There is no question about the facts.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I feel I must object to the bill for the present.

Mr. McKEOWN. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. If I can see it in any different way after further study, I shall ask that we return to the bill and consider it.

Mr. McKEOWN. That means killing the bill, and I have been working on this for 5 years. Mr. Stafford was the only man who ever objected to the bill, and the bill has been passed by the House.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I myself shall ask that it be reconsidered if, after further study, I come to the conclusion that the gentleman's viewpoint is correct, but at the present time I cannot see it in that way.

Mr. McKEOWN. I do not think the gentleman should object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAMNECK). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I object, Mr. Speaker.

LYDIA C. SPRY

The Clerk called the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 1248, granting insurance to Lydia C. Spry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

JAMES E. DETHLEFSEN

The Clerk called the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 1402, for the relief of James E. Dethlefsen.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to James E. Dethlefsen, who sustained injuries at Nenana, Alaska.

With the following committee amendment:

Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment: In line 5, after the word "appropriated", insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FIRST CAMDEN NATIONAL BANK & TRUST CO., CAMDEN, N.J.

The Clerk called the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 1488, for the relief of the First Camden National Bank & Trust Co., of Camden, N.J.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. I reserve an objection.

Mr. WOLVERTON. The purpose of the bill is to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the First Camden National Bank of Camden, N.J., the sum of $11,120.97 in full satisfaction of its claim for refund of taxes erroneously paid for the year 1927 on income from certain securities, through a mutual mistake made by the bank's accountant and by the representative of the Internal Revenue Department of the Government.

Mr. TRUAX. When was the claim filed?

Mr. WOLVERTON. I do not understand what the gentleman means by "filed."

Mr. TRUAX. With the Treasury Department.

Mr. WOLVERTON. It is not a case that comes within the statute permitting a claim to be filed with the Treasury Department. While the Treasury admits that the claimant made an overpayment, yet the Treasury Department takes the position that they cannot set aside the agreement which resulted in the overpayment and which was clearly an error. In other words, the Government of the United States is now in possession of $11,120.97 to which it admits it is not entitled because of the error made by the accountant of the bank and which error was likewise made by its own representative from the revenue department.

Mr. TRUAX. I will say that I am opposed to this bill on the same ground that I have objected to others, namely, that for years I have been protesting against the refund of income taxes to corporations and individuals. I believe we have drained our Treasury in the past 12 years through illegal and unjust refunds to large corporations and rich individuals.

In this particular case the sum of $11,120.97 is involved, which amount is considerably more than the salary of any one of us for a year.

Mr. WOLVERTON. It is not a question of amount. It is a principle that is involved. Should the Government retain money which it acknowledges was paid through a mutual mistake? It may be that in the past refunds have been made by the Treasury to large corporations and others which the gentleman may feel were not justified; however, that is not the case of this claim. This is an overpayment to the Government which has been acknowledged as such by the Treasury, but, unfortunately, holds that by the signing of a settlement agreement under section 606 of the revenue act, the Treasury is precluded from making a refund, even though the original payment was through an error, and one in which the Government participated through its representative. If such agreement had not been signed, this claimant would not be in the position it is now in; that is, required to obtain legislative sanction for the Treasury to repay the money. The bank had been honest and fair in making its return of income to the Government and should not now be penalized for having made a mistake and for having signed an agreement form presented in a casual way by the Government representative, and which form had no proper use in this particular case.

Mr. TRUAX. We have also advanced to the banks of this country $4,000,000,000 through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and other agencies. The banks have not passed this credit on down to the people who deal with the banks but they have hoarded this money to keep themselves liquid. As one Member of the House, I have reached the point where I refuse to go along on any plan that will help the banks and not the individual depositors. Hence my urgent and enthusiastic support of the McLeod bill.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I join with the gentleman in that. I have likewise signed the petition to bring the McLeod bill before the House for action.

Mr. TRUAX. I congratulate the gentleman on that.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Will the gentleman allow me to state the actual facts in this matter? I desire to show how unjust it would be to deny this claim.

Mr. TRUAX. I am sorry, but I must inform the gentleman in advance that I am going to object to this bill.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Will the gentleman hear me through?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I think the gentleman will find, from a careful examination of the underlying facts of this case, that whatever objection he may have to the Government making general refunds in tax cases, such would not apply to this particular case. Nor do I believe that if he gives careful consideration to the facts will any reason be found to justify an objection.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Will the gentleman withhold that demand?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I think that adequate explanation has been made. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] is either going to object or not object.

Mr. BLANTON. Let me appeal to my friend from Washington. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON] has done some of the most valuable work in this House on the Committee on Military Affairs that has been done by anyone, and he deserves some special consideration. I think the gentleman should be permitted to complete his statement.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Is this an $11,000 speech that he is making now?

Mr. BLANTON. He has saved for the Government 11 times $11,000 in some of the work that he has done.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Very well, I withdraw my demand for the regular order.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I thank you. With reference to the suggestion that large payments in the form of refunds have been heretofore made without proper justification, and to which the gentleman's approval——

Mr. TRUAX. Large and small, I would say.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I have voted every time the opportunity has been given on this floor against the method that permits that sort of thing to be done in the privacy of the departments without knowledge thereof coming to this House. But, my objection to such a procedure in some cases would certainly not apply to a case where it was apparent that the payment for which a refund was sought, was the result of a mutual mistake or error participated in by both the claimant and the Government.

Mr. TRUAX. Would the gentleman vote for a bill that would make it illegal for the Treasury Department to refund any income taxes back beyond the preceding calendar year?

Mr. WOLVERTON. I would be inclined to do so.

Mr. TRUAX. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I believe that there should be some change in the method or procedure by which refunds are made. Whether it should be limited to one calendar year or some other limitation is a matter for consideration.

Mr. TRUAX. Will not the gentleman concede that if it is wrong in the case of the big refund, it is wrong with the little refund, if the same principle is involved?

Mr. WOLVERTON. That might seem to follow, but in no case where it is agreed that the payment was made by error should any procedure be adopted that would preclude the Government from being just as honest as an individual should be. There should be the same duty to repay. The moral obligation is the same. The Treasury Department admits that this bank has overpaid the Government to an amount over $11,000. It also admits that the error made by the bank accountant was also made by the Government agent who examined the income-tax return of the bank. The gentleman has spoken about the attitude of banks. In reply to his suggestion that banks have been willing to receive help from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and unwilling to extend it to others, permit me to say that such a criticism does not apply to the First Camden National Bank, this claimant. In the strenuous days that followed the collapse of 1929, before there was any legislation to help banks, either by voluntary association or by means of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, this bank, being in a position to do so, loaned of its resources to other banks. It deposited large sums of its own funds in other banks. It also loaned large sums on long-term obligations to other banks in order that no loss might come to depositors by a closing of any bank in that city. The action of this bank, with the cooperation given to it by another bank, stabilized the whole banking situation in the locality in which it exists.

Mr. TRUAX. I do not doubt the gentleman's statement, and I think the bank is to be commended for its action, but I note in the report from Mr. Ogden L. Mills, Secretary of the Treasury, that the Treasury Department is opposed to the enactment of the bill.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Would the gentleman from Ohio take the opinion of Ogden Mills on anything other than this?

Mr. TRUAX. No.

Mr. WOLVERTON. The hypocrisy of the thing——

Mr. TRUAX. Does the gentleman mean the hypocrisy of the bill or of Mr. Mills?

Mr. WOLVERTON. Of Mr. Mills—that he should object to this payment, if it be true, that he has either individually through interests he has, by estate or otherwise, had the very benefits through the Treasury Department that his report denies to this bank.

Mr. TRUAX. Is not Ogden Mills the one who is wanting to reorganize the gentleman's party?

Mr. WOLVERTON. If President Roosevelt is as popular in 1936 as he seems to be today, I am fearful it would not help the Republican cause to give the Republican nomination to Ogden Mills.

Mr. TRUAX. That is about the strongest argument which the gentleman has made yet, but the point I wanted to make is this: That if a refund could not be obtained under either Mr. Mellon or Mr. Mills, then God knows who it could be obtained from.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I think the House should do so. There is no question about the moral obligation. Suppose you and I sat down today and went over our accounts, and tomorrow, or the next month or next year, we found we had made a mistake; that I had taken from you $11,000 by a mutual mistake that we both had made. Certainly the gentleman from Ohio would expect me to refund it, and if it were the other way about, I know the gentleman would refund it to me. There would be no question about that.

Mr. TRUAX. There seems to have been a mistake made in favor of the Steel Trust during Mr. Mellon's regime to the extent of $100,000,000.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I would prefer to talk about this particular case. When the auditor from the Department of Internal Revenue came to the bank, as they do each year, to check up, he found, as they always had found in the past, that there was no objection to be made to the return as rendered. In the same manner as theretofore the auditor representing the Department so reported to the officers of the bank and had them sign a slip of paper or form which they supposed was a certification that everything was all right. When the Government auditor had completed his examination he said: "I find everything all right. Here is a little slip of paper. Sign it." They signed it, thinking it was an O.K. Now the Department uses that form to say that it was a settlement and yet there never was anything in dispute. In other words, the Government used a form that should have been used in a case where there had been a dispute between the Government and the taxpayer as to what should or should not be allowed, but in this case there was no dispute. Now, the Department is standing on that form to preclude payment.

Here is a case where the Government acknowledges it has the money wrongfully, but cannot pay it back, and consequently this bank is obliged to come before this House and ask for favorable consideration of this bill. If there is one agency in this land that should be fair with its citizens, it is the Government, and if the Government expects its citizens to be honest with it, it should be honest with them. I know, and the gentleman knows, that if two individuals had made this acknowledged mutual mistake between them, they would settle it between themselves. I certainly hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection and permit the Government to do that thing which the Government and I and everyone else knows would be done in our private affairs, and thereby set a proper example.

Mr. TRUAX. I will say that the gentleman has made a most eloquent and forceful speech, and if words or if sincerity could change an inherent principle that I have agreed to stand behind upon all tax revisions coming on the Private Calendar, his eloquence and his sincerity and his convincing and evidently wholly truthful statement would accomplish that purpose. It would be a wonderful thing if this great Government of ours would today start to do simple justice to every one of our citizens. It would be a great thing if this Congress would permit the Frazier bill to be enacted into law so that 3,000,000 farmers who are hanging on by the skin of their teeth, threatened with foreclosure by money lenders and by banks and by the Farm Credit Administration, could be taken care of.

Mr. WOLVERTON. May I say to the gentleman that I do not think he will find many on this side of the aisle who have voted for more of the President's recovery measures than I have.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. It is with the deepest regret that I am compelled to object to this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

BENJAMIN STERN ET AL.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 342, H.R. 265, for the relief of Benjamin Stern, and Melville A. Stern and Benjamin Stern, as executors under the last will and testament of Louis Stern, deceased, and Arthur H. Hahlo, as executor under the last will and testament of Isaac Stern, deceased, all of New York City, N.Y., for compensation and in settlement of their damages and loss sustained by virtue of a lease, in writing, dated September 12, 1919, between the said parties and the United States of America, by Daniel C. Roper, Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Reserving the right to object, was the gentleman here when that bill was called?

Mr. BOYLAN. No. I was engaged in committee work.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. HOPE. I withhold it.

Mr. BOYLAN. May I ask what the gentleman's objection is based on?

This man actually suffered a loss of $43,000. The committee amended the bill to make it read $30,000.

The issue in question involves a lease. The claimant had an office building in New York in which the collector of internal revenue wanted to engage offices for the third district. The collector of internal revenue was so anxious to get into the building that the owner had to pay a bonus of $10,000 to a tenant to vacate in order that the Internal Revenue Bureau could get possession of the premises. The owner then spent $2,500 for alterations and repairs.

The Internal Revenue Department entered into a lease for 5 years and 4 months, but after the expiration of 8 months it moved out and abandoned the premises.

Surely the gentleman from Kansas would not say that this was fair or equitable treatment after a representative of the Government had actually signed a lease for a period of 5 years and 4 months.

Mr. HOPE. The gentleman from New York does not contend that a valid legal lease was signed in this case, does he?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes; a valid lease was signed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. HOPE. Clearly, the officer who signed that lease or who made the agreement had no right to do so under the provisions of the Federal Statutes. He had no right to make a lease for a longer period than a year; and this, of course, is the reason the Treasury Department has disapproved this bill.

Mr. BOYLAN. Similar leases are entered into every year in the city of New York. I can cite instances of leases that have covered a period of 10 years.

Mr. HOPE. Those leases in fact were annual leases renewable from year to year. As I understand it, there is no way that the Government can make a lease for a period longer than 1 year, because there is no authority of law for a lease to be made for a longer period. Is not this a correct statement of the law in the case?

Mr. BOYLAN. The owner having that in mind brought it up very particularly, as the gentleman will see by reference to page 2 of the report:

> But the claimants refused to lease unless the Department agreed not to put in the lease the usual cancelation clause and demanded assurances that the Department would remain in occupancy for 5 years and 4 months except on one contingency, that is, in the event that Congress failed to appropriate money for the entire Revenue Service. This was incorporated in the lease (see exhibit D), the clause in the lease was interpreted in a collateral letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue (Roper) to mean:
> "This means, therefore, that one lease binding for entire 5 years and 4 months period will be made subject only to cancelation in case Congress fails to make appropriation to revenue department, a condition that the agent should readily see could not arise."
>
> On receipt of this assurance from Roper and on Roper's agent McQuillan's similar assurance, the claimant owners signed and delivered the lease with a covering letter stating that the lessor understood the lease to mean:
> "That the failure to make appropriations for the payment of the rent applies for the whole of the Revenue Service and not to this particular lease. This is in accordance with the statement contained in the telegram of September 6 to the effect that cancelation is to be effective only in case Congress fails to make appropriations to the Revenue Service."

Now, the gentleman would not hold that the Government could idly sign a lease or a contract and then violate it. The gentleman would abhor that in private practice. The gentleman would say that a citizen was certainly without protection, that he was without a leg to stand on with the Government if after faithfully and honestly entering into a contract with the Government it was repudiated. The converse of this proposition is equally true.

Mr. HOPE. It may be true that some agent of the United States Government made some entirely unauthorized statements and representations in this matter, but if they were made they certainly were not binding on the Government of the United States in any way, and I fail to see any equities in this case which would justify us in granting this relief, or any more relief, than would be permissible under a strict interpretation of the law.

Mr. BOYLAN. Has the gentleman read the report? In the first place the owner had to pay a bonus of $10,000 to get the premises for the Government to occupy. There is no denial of that. In addition he had to pay $2,500 for the alterations required. Surely the gentleman from Kansas would not hold that the Government was acting fairly, after causing the owner to incur these expenses, if it did not compensate him for them. Surely the gentleman from Kansas does not believe that the Government ought idly to enter into a lease for a period of 5 and 4 months and then abandon the premises after 8 months. The gentleman does not consider that fair, I know.

Mr. HOPE. As I say, there may have been some unauthorized statements by representatives of the Government which might have misled the owner of this building. I would not say there were not, although that is disputed, I think.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. If our friend from New York would take 5 minutes and discuss one of his many humorous subjects, possibly he might get his bill through. We should like to hear him on some humorous topic.

Mr. BOYLAN. Well, if the gentleman will put the bill through I will talk on any subject he may name. [Laughter.] Not only for 5 minutes but for 30 minutes if it should be desired.

Mr. BLANTON. Give us a little talk about March 17.

Mr. BOYLAN. I shall be very happy to if this bill is passed.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, much as I regret it, I am obliged to object.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

HENRY STANLEY WOOD

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1802, for the relief of Henry Stanley Wood.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to this bill on the same grounds mentioned in the case of the preceding bill.

Mr. BEEDY. If the gentleman from Ohio has settled in his own mind that he is going to object, there is no use of my taking up the time of other Members. A Member is always anxious to do this duty by his claimant constituents, and we are always disappointed when we do not have a chance to present the case, but I think it is an imposition upon other Members to insist upon arguing these cases when a Member, who has given the matter some study, is conscientiously determined that he is going to object. If the gentleman has decided to object, I am sure he does so in good conscience, and I shall therefore not insist on detaining the House, much to my regret.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CORINNE BLACKBURN GALE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1870, for the relief of Corinne Blackburn Gale.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Corinne Blackburn Gale, widow of William Holt Gale, late American Foreign Service officer, retired, the sum of $8,000, being 1 year's salary of her deceased husband.

With the following committee amendment:

> Page 1, line 7, after the word "husband", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim.

any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PHILIP F. HAMBSCH

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1933, for the relief of Philip F. Hambsch.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the Secretary of the Treasury recommends a lesser amount than the amount contained in the bill. May I ask the gentleman if he would be willing to have the bill amended?

Mr. COLE. An amendment to that effect will be agreeable.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Would the gentleman from Maryland object to an amendment adding the usual attorney-fees clause to the bill?

Mr. COLE. Not at all. As a matter of fact, there is no attorney in this transaction.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to credit the account of Philip F. Hambsch, formerly a special disbursing agent of the Bureau of Prohibition, with the sum of $622.58, such amount representing sums disbursed by him and disallowed by the Comptroller General in certificate of settlement of account no. K-40891-TI, March 14, 1929.

SEC. 2. The surety on the bond of said Philip F. Hambsch, as such special disbursing agent, is hereby relieved of any liability on account of such disallowance.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment: On page 1, line 6, strike out "622.58" and insert in lieu thereof the sum of "$572.36."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TRUAX: Page 1, line 6, strike out "$622.58" and insert in lieu thereof "$572.36."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. At the end of the bill add the usual attorney-fees clause.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of New York: At the end of the bill add the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NORMAN C. BRADY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1935, for the relief of Norman C. Brady.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I object. I will reserve my objection if the gentleman desires to make a statement.

Mr. COLE. May I ask the gentleman what his objection to the bill is?

Mr. HOPE. I object to the principle of the bill. I do not believe we should start in and establish a precedent here that the Government of the United States is liable in damages which might occur from failure to deliver a letter. It seems to me that if we get started in that field there will be no limit.

Mr. COLE. I may say to the gentleman that I do not know whether there is any precedent for a bill of this character or not, but what remedy will a man have if the Post Office Department delivers a registered letter to the wrong addressee and the man suffers an admitted loss?

Mr. BLANTON. There is the remedy that he can use private messenger service. For the small fee of 18 cents which permits a return card showing receipt of the letter, there is no government in the world that could guarantee the safe delivery of a registered letter by paying damages. All of us who deal with the Government know that when we register a letter the Government is not informed of the importance of the letter and does not know what is on the inside of the letter.

Mr. HASTINGS. Why does the Government take the man's money?

Mr. BLANTON. Whenever we establish such a precedent, there would be all sorts of frauds upon the Government.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman does not answer the question. Why does the Government take this extra postage from the man, except to insure the speedy and safe delivery of the letter?

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman from Oklahoma know that if you establish such a precedent it would bankrupt the Government with all sorts of claims?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is not the point. The gentleman dodges the issue.

Mr. BLANTON. No; I do not. I say it is foolish for an American citizen to register something that is valuable and expect the Government to pay big damages.

Mr. COLE. Let me disabuse the gentleman's mind. There was no money in this particular letter. This poor fellow—and I know he is very poor—had pawned some valuable property.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. When he pawned this $265 article, did he not receive in return, say, $80 or $90? He pawned it for a consideration.

Mr. COLE. Yes. He had the pawn ticket, which, of course, entitled him to redemption of the goods.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. He would have had to pay a certain amount of money to get the goods back, if he had already received $90 or $100.

Mr. COLE. He has to be notified as to the expiration of the pawn ticket under the law of Maryland. The pawnbroker sent the notice by registered mail. The carrier was disciplined.

Mr. HOPE. There is nothing in the record to show that this was sent by registered mail.

Mr. COLE. My understanding is that it was sent by registered mail.

Mr. HOPE. That would not make any difference anyway.

Mr. COLE. I do not think in principle it would.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think we could ever afford to establish a precedent of having the Government pay losses on account of the failure of delivery of registered mail, because the gentleman from Oklahoma, who serves well and ably on the Appropriations Committee, could not put in enough hours during the year to appropriate money in order to pay all the claims arising therefrom.

Mr. HASTINGS. I believe the Government of the United States is broad enough and rich enough to do justice to every one of its citizens. If the Government has done an injustice, or if its agents have caused a loss to an individual on account of the failure of delivery of a registered letter and there was a loss by reason of that fact, then I think the Government should pay the loss. The man paid an extra amount to have the letter safely delivered. I do not know a thing about the facts in this case.

Mr. COLE. May I say that the letter was properly addressed. The Post Office Department had a forwarding address of a man with a similar last name. The postman delivered it to the wrong place. Later on he went and found all of this property had been sold by the pawnbroker and on pressing for an explanation he was told that he had been sent notice through the mail. He produced the receipts, went to the post office and they found that the letter, through no fault of this man, had been delivered to the wrong person.

Mr. TRUAX. Was it a registered letter?

Mr. COLE. It is my understanding the letter was registered.

Mr. TRUAX. But the gentleman is not sure about that?

Mr. COLE. No; I am not. Of course, all the Post Office Department could do was to reprimand the carrier for dereliction of duty, gross carelessness, and negligence.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, much as I regret to do so, I feel I must object.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

R. A. HUNSINGER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1977, for the relief of R. A. Hunsinger.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice, to be called up at the next call of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

LOTTIE NAYLOR

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2036, for the relief of Lottie Naylor.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the gentleman from Maryland, is unavoidably absent on account of illness, and I ask unanimous consent, in his absence, that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

ANNE B. SLOCUM

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 341, the bill (H.R. 210) for the relief of Anne B. Slocum. The gentleman from Ohio asked that the bill be passed over without prejudice, and the gentleman is agreeable to this unanimous-consent request.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is this bill?

Mr. BACON. It is a bill for the relief of Anne B. Slocum, the widow of a Foreign Service officer who died while on his post in Foreign Service. The State Department has no objection to the bill and there are long lines of precedents in favor of its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Anne B. Slocum, widow of Clarence Rice Slocum, late American consul at Fiume, the sum of $3,500, being 1 year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while in the Foreign Service; and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sufficient sum to carry out the purpose of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

At the end of the bill insert "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JEANIE G. LYLES

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2038, for the relief of Jeanie G. Lyles.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 8, strike out "$2,500" and insert "$1,500", and on page 2, line 3, insert: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WESTERN ELECTRIC CO., INC.

The Clerk called the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 2182, for the relief of the Western Electric Co.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, this provides for payment from the Treasury of the sum of $7,192.35 to the Western Electric Co., that is affiliated with the Power Trust of this country, on a cost-plus contract that goes back to June 1920. I can see no merit whatever in the bill, and therefore I object.

WESTERN ELECTRIC CO., INC.

The Clerk called the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 2183, for the relief of Western Electric Co., Inc.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. I object.

ENOCH GRAF

The Clerk called the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 2203, for the relief of Enoch Graf.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Enoch Graf, first lieutenant, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, the sum of $2,644.61. Such sum represents the net loss sustained by Lieutenant Graf due to financial irregularities and frauds against the United States by a civilian employee of the Quartermaster Corps at Camp Custer, Mich., during the period from October 1926 to October 1927, for which Lieutenant Graf was held responsible.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the usual attorney's fee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the bill the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUGUSTA BURKETT

The Clerk called the next bill on the calender, H.R. 2338, for the relief of Augusta Burkett.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I object.

JOE G. M'INERNEY

The Clerk called the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 5542, for the relief of Joe G. McInerney.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The gentleman has no objection to an amendment using the ordinary language, "back pay, pension, or allowance", in this bill?

Mr. McMILLAN. Not at all.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Coast Guard, their widows, children, and dependent relatives Joe G. McInerney shall be held and considered to have been discharged under honorable conditions as a coal heaver from the cutter Forward on December 13, 1902: Provided, That no pay or bounty shall be held to have accrued prior to the date of the enactment of this act.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "no", strike out "pay or bounty" and insert the words "back pay, pension, or allowances."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RUSSELL H. LINDSAY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5886, for the relief of Russell H. Lindsay.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LT. H. W. TAYLOR

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5780, for the relief of Lt. H. W. Taylor, United States Navy.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $52 to Lt. H. W. Taylor, United States Navy, to reimburse him for travel expenses incurred in connection with an airplane flight from Philadelphia, Pa., to Key West, Fla., in December 1925, under orders issued by naval authorities.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CERTAIN OFFICERS OF THE DENTAL CORPS, U.S.N.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6690, for the relief of certain officers of the Dental Corps of the United States Navy.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all commissioned officers now on active duty in the Dental Corps of the United States Navy who, while heretofore on active duty as reserve or temporary commissioned officers, had qualified for appointment to the Dental Corps of the United States Navy pursuant to an examination held at the United States Naval Medical School, Washington, D.C., in January 1920, and who since that date have continuously served on active duty, shall hereafter be entitled to a position on the precedence list in accordance with that attained in said examination: Provided, That such officers of the Dental Corps shall be assigned running mates for promotion purposes in accordance with their precedence as so determined: And provided further, That no back pay or allowances shall accrue to any officer by reason of the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

KARIM JOSEPH MERY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2339, for the relief of Karim Joseph Mery.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to Karim Joseph Mery, of San Antonio, Tex., out of any money not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 as compensation for the death of his son, Joseph Karim Mery, a minor, who was killed at San Antonio, Tex., on July 10, 1923, by the negligent driving of a United States Army truck.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "truck", insert: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RUSSELL & TUCKER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2340, for the relief of Russell & Tucker and certain other citizens of the States of Texas, Oklahoma, and Kansas.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice, to be returned to later in the day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN NEWSPAPERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2431, for the relief of certain newspapers for advertising services rendered the Public Health Service of the Treasury Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, this bill was drafted by the Treasury Department to pay a very honest debt that was contracted by the Government. There is no question about the moral obligation to pay for this advertising.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain why this account has been held up for 16 years and no action taken upon it?

Mr. LUDLOW. I cannot. I suppose I inherited the bill, I might say, by reason of the fact that I was so long associated with the press gallery, and this being the bill for the relief of various newspapers I was called upon to introduce it. I looked into the matter and consulted the Treasury officials, and satisfied myself that it is a perfectly good claim. There is no question about the facts. The services were rendered. These advertisements were published. The only reason why the accounts were not allowed in regular order was through inadvertence. They were placed by the Public Health Service in the regular way but through inadvertence they did not get to the Secretary of the Treasury for his formal approval.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It is not what we call a lawyer's bill, an old claim that has been revived?

Mr. LUDLOW. I think not. It was brought to my attention by one of the principal men in the newspaper business in the city of Indianapolis, who asked me to look after it. I know he is in entire good faith, and I know that the claim is a righteous one in that the service was rendered and the bill before you was actually drawn by the Treasury Department, as the report shows, in order to pay this claim. The Department recognizes that the claim is a valid one.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Where claimants have slept on their rights for a long period of years most of us have an inclination to object to their claims.

Mr. LUDLOW. I can appreciate that. These are great newspapers. They are not pressing this. They are not in financial straits or anything like that, but it is a righteous claim for services rendered.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It appears to be an honest debt.

Mr. LUDLOW. It is an honest debt, and it is up to the Congress to decide whether or not an honest debt is to be paid. That is all there is to it, and that is all I have to say.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I think the principle of the statute of limitations ought to apply after a lapse of years. I do not know just when that time arrives.

Mr. LUDLOW. As far as I know, there is no statute of limitations in a case like this.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. There would be as between private individuals, of course. The ordinary individual debt outlaws in 6 years.

Mr. LUDLOW. The service was rendered in 1918. The advertisements were published, and everything was done by the newspapers to comply with the requirements of the Government.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. My question is, Have they made any effort to collect this debt?

Mr. LUDLOW. Since that time?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Yes.

Mr. LUDLOW. I know only what is set forth in the report. I have an itemized statement here of the papers which published the items.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Has the gentleman introduced the same bill at previous Congresses?

Mr. LUDLOW. I did introduce it. It was reported out favorably in two previous Congresses.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I shall not object.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized notwithstanding the provisions of section 3828 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to settle, adjust, and certify the following claims for advertising services rendered the Public Health Service, Treasury Department, namely: The claims of certain Chicago newspapers for advertising services rendered October 3, 1918, amounting in all to $2,894, under the appropriation "Suppressing Spanish influenza and other communicable diseases, 1919"; the claim of a Houston (Tex.) newspaper, $65.17; and the claim of a New York newspaper, $30, for advertising services rendered between June and October, 1920, under the appropriations "Pay of personnel and maintenance of hospitals, Public Health Service, 1920", and "Maintenance, marine hospitals, 1921."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H.Con.Res. 35. Concurrent resolution requesting the President to return to the House of Representatives the bill H.R. 3521 for the purpose of correcting an error in said bill.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3022) to amend sections 3 and 4 of an act of Congress entitled "An act for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska, approved June 26, 1906, as amended by act of Congress approved June 6, 1924, and for other purposes.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

HOMER J. WILLIAMSON

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2432, for the relief of Homer J. Williamson.

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, this is another bill to refund income taxes in the sum of $1,045.81, and it was paid in 1918 and 1919.

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentleman withhhold his objection?

Mr. TRUAX. I will.

Mr. LUDLOW. I certainly hope that my friend will have a heart in this case, because I think there never was a more meritorious bill brought before this Congress. The beneficiary of this bill is a splendid young man, a candy manufacturer of Indianapolis. He was in doubt as to how to fill out his income-tax blank for the calendar year 1918. He wanted to fill it out honestly, so what did he do? He went to the Federal building in Indianapolis to consult the revenue agents there, the experts who among all persons are supposed to know how to fill out these returns. He took with him his trial balance and his other data and he placed all the information on the table right before this agent of the Government. The agent filled out his return for him, an agent of the Government, not the taxpayer, and the agent made a mistake. Owing to that mistake the taxpayer was overcharged in the sum of $1,045.81 on his taxes for the calendar year 1918. He knew nothing about it. It went along year after year and not until the 5-year period of the statute of limitations had expired, did another representative of the Government, in overhauling the same taxpayer's return for the calendar year 1919, discover that an agent of the Government had misinformed this man and had incorrectly made out his return, and as a result he had been overcharged in this amount.

Certainly, if there ever was an honest claim, it is this one. This man should be refunded that money for every reason in the world, because it was not due to any negligence of his. He wanted to do the right thing, and the Government is responsible for the error, and nobody but the Government is responsible for the error. Therefore, it is an obvious case of justice, where this man should have this money handed back to him that was erroneously paid to the Government.

Mr. TRUAX. I will say to my friend and colleague from Indiana that it is with extreme regret that I must object to his bill. Had the gentleman been on the floor yesterday and today all the time, he would have noted that on several occasions bills embodying the same principle, although for much larger amounts of money, have been objected to. The report of the Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, in the closing paragraph, says:

> In view of the foregoing and in fairness to other taxpayers whose claims for refund have been denied on the same grounds, the Department is unable to lend its approval to the proposed bill.

I have already taken the position and so stated on several occasions, that when Mr. Mellon, that champion refunder of all refunders, refuses to refund, then, there is evidently not much merit in the claim.

Mr. LUDLOW. On the statements of fact as I have made them here, does the gentleman not think that if this transaction had been between ordinary private citizens, one citizen would hand the money back to the other, when it was overpaid? Certainly, he would. It would simply be common honesty to do so, and the Government ought to be as honest as its citizens.

Mr. TRUAX. I will say to the gentleman that, as previously stated, I think the refunding of income taxes paid 10 or 12 years ago, and the credit abatements that go along with them, is the worst and most costly racket that has ever been practiced on this Government. The taxpayers and the Government have been robbed of millions of dollars through that practice.

There were thousands of illegal refunds made by Secretaries of the Treasury. If I had it within my power, I would stop the practice today of refunding any taxes paid during a preceding calendar year.

Mr. LUDLOW. The gentleman's remarks have no pertinency whatever, as attached to this bill, because there is no doubt about the facts of this bill. There was an overpayment of taxes through no fault of the taxpayer but through the fault of an agent of the Government.

Mr. TRUAX. That is the claim made with reference to other bills, as well as the gentleman's bill; and to the other bills I have already objected to.

Mr. LUDLOW. What is the purpose of these private bills if it is not to do justice in individual cases which cannot be reached by general rules and general laws?

Mr. TRUAX. Does the gentleman refer to the special cases dealt with in private bills?

Mr. LUDLOW. I say, What is the purpose of the Private Calendar if it is not to do justice in those instances which cannot be reached through generalization?

Mr. TRUAX. I would call the gentleman's attention to the procedure of passing bills on the Private Calendar. A Member introduces a bill, maybe not because he himself favors the bill but because he is practically forced to introduce it by a good constituent. The bill goes to the Committee on Claims and is referred to a subcommittee. The subcommittee reports it to the full committee and the full committee reports it to the House.

Mr. LUDLOW. I understand that, but let me ask the gentleman this one question: Disassociating this case entirely from all other income-tax refunds and considering it purely on its merits, does not the gentleman think it is a meritorious claim? As I stated a while ago, Homer J. Williamson took his figures covering the year 1918 and went to the Federal building at Indianapolis, and consulted a deputy collector, who prepared his return, which resulted in a tax of $1,442.48. The deputy collector inadvertently and erroneously included in the closing inventory the items of accounts receivable amounting to $5,000, and equipment and fixtures amounting to $1,642.35, which made the closing inventory a total of $15,302.15 when it should have been $8,659.80, thus making an overpayment for 1918 in the sum of $1,045.01.

Mr. Williamson relied upon the knowledge and the ability of the said deputy collector in the preparation of that return. His attention was not called to this error until July 5, 1924, when Revenue Inspector Earl D. Haley reported upon an examination of his records for the years 1919, 1920, and 1921. He is entitled to a refund. If he does not get it, I will just about conclude that there is no justice left in the world.

Mr. TRUAX. It might possibly be a meritorious claim if such claims could be called meritorious; but as stated before, in view of my position for the past 4 or 5 years of criticizing caustically Mr. Mellon for refunding income taxes going back as far as 1917 and 1918, war-profits taxes, taxes on incomes piled up by war profiteers, I cannot overlook this case.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. TRUAX. If I withdraw my objection in this case, I must do so for the gentleman from Michigan and the other gentlemen to whose bills I have objected.

Mr. Speaker, the regular order is demanded. The regular order is that I object.

RUBY F. VOILES

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2438, for the relief of Ruby F. Voiles.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $75 to Ruby F. Voiles, which represents the amount of a reward she should have received for furnishing information leading to the apprehension of the criminals who held up and robbed a mail truck at the Dearborn Street Station, Chicago, Ill., on April 6, 1921.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after "$75", insert the following: "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

Page 2, line 1, insert the customary attorneys' fee amendment, as follows: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

TREATMENT ACCORDED DR. WIRT HAS BEEN UNFAIR AND WITHOUT PRECEDENT

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, the first obligation upon the Membership of Congress is to retain public confidence in representative government. Confidence cannot be retained except that the representatives conduct themselves in absolute fairness in all public matters and toward all citizens who may have business before the Congress or any of its committees. In the matter of the select committee to investigate the charges presented by Dr. Wirt, I submit that the conduct of two members of the committee toward Dr. Wirt has been so obviously unfair that this committee can no longer retain the confidence and the respect of the people of the country. I refer to the treatment which has been accorded to Dr. Wirt by the chairman of the committee, Mr. BULWINKLE, and by another member of the committee, Mr. O'CONNOR.

In the House of Representatives on April 11, Mr. BULWINKLE said that if he had cared to go into the private character of Dr. Wirt, he would have brought out the fact that during the war on account of his pro-German activities he was confined in jail at Gary, Ind.

This statement is wholly false and has been completely repudiated by responsible citizens of Gary, Ind., including Democratic leaders, Rotary Club, Chamber of Commerce, Y.M.C.A., Teachers' Association, Federated Womens' Clubs, Catholic and Protestant ministers, and various mayors of the city during the past 20 years.

In the House of Representatives in open session on April 12, Mr. O'CONNOR, the ranking majority member of this committee, displayed public prejudice and bias toward Dr. Wirt in the most patent and obvious manner. His conduct was such as to condone the wholly false and malicious statement made against Dr. Wirt by the chairman, Mr. BULWINKLE.

Mr. O'CONNOR did this after he had a full and fair opportunity to know that the statements made against Dr. Wirt by Chairman BULWINKLE were false and malicious. Mr. O'CONNOR displayed obvious bias and prejudice against Dr. Wirt when he refused to permit me to put into the RECORD yesterday telegrams from citizens of Gary, Ind., which telegrams completely repudiate the false and defamatory statement of Chairman BULWINKLE that Dr. Wirt was in jail in Gary, Ind., for pro-German activities. Mr. O'CONNOR, in refusing to permit these telegrams to go into the RECORD, placed himself in a position where the public can reach but one logical conclusion, that is that his hatred for Dr. Wirt is so bitter that he is wholly unwilling for a false and malicious statement defaming the doctor's character to be corrected.

These telegrams were from Harry L. Arnold, for 19 years actively identified with the Democratic Party at Gary; H. B. Snyder, for 24 years a citizen of Gary and editor of the Post-Tribune; William F. Hodges, for 27 years personal attorney to Dr. Wirt and mayor of Gary during the war; Rev. Father Thomas Jansen, for 27 years pastor of a Catholic parish at Gary; H. S. Norton, president of the Gary Commercial Club and Chamber of Commerce; Harry Hall, for 27 years an acquaintance of Dr. Wirt, and worked under Dr. Wirt as chairman of war activities in Gary; and R. O. Johnson, the present mayor of Gary and mayor of Gary during the war.

No court of five judges would be permitted to pass judgment upon the statements of any witness, which court had so openly and flagrantly displayed its bias, prejudice, and hatred for the poor victim before it, should one of the five judges publicly make the false statement that the witness had been in jail for disloyalty and should another of the judges refuse to permit to be made public the irrefutable evidence that such defamatory statements against the witness were wholly false. Such conduct on the part of a court would not be unlike the treatment this committee has accorded to Dr. Wirt.

The people of the United States can have no confidence in the findings of this committee if those findings are to be made up by Members who have displayed the bias and prejudice against Dr. Wirt which has been openly displayed by Mr. BULWINKLE and Mr. O'CONNOR. From the standpoint of the House of Representatives, I realize that the great embarrassment is that if Mr. BULWINKLE and Mr. O'CONNOR do withdraw from the committee, they will have to be replaced by those appointed by the Speaker. That will bring up something else which will be shocking to the public confidence. The public cannot help but wonder about the Speaker's fairness and impartiality in making the new appointments. This is due to the fact that the Speaker was reported in the press as saying, before Dr. Wirt appeared before the committee, that Dr. Wirt would be put in jail if he did not testify. There was no occasion for that statement. Dr. Wirt had not refused to testify. There is only one logical construction which can be placed upon the Speaker's statement and that is that in advance the Speaker was undertaking to discredit Dr. Wirt before the people of the country.

There is still something else which is most embarrassing when the House of Representatives undertakes to correct this condition so that the public confidence can be retained in the absolute fairness of the House, which is that on Wednesday about 30 minutes after Mr. BULWINKLE had made the malicious statement that Dr. Wirt had been in jail at Gary, Ind., during the war, I took the floor as a mere courtesy, and as a matter of common justice, at the request of James A. Reed, the attorney for Dr. Wirt, and said:

> The Honorable James A. Reed, former United States Senator, has just called me on the telephone and requested me to state to the House that the charge made a few moments ago by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] that Dr. Wirt had served a term in jail during the World War is wholly malicious and wholly false; that Dr. Wirt's record is clean and that he has never been arrested.

Mr. BYRNS, the majority leader, interrupted me with the statement:

> I thought that we had agreed to quit and attend to the business of the House and not play petty politics on this floor while there is important business to attend to.

Now, the American people essentially like fair play. The American people cannot believe that there is fair play when the floor leader of this House makes a statement that it is petty politics for a Member to consume 1 minute of the time of the House in merely correcting a false and defamatory statement which had just been made upon the floor against a citizen of the country.

There is something else which is shocking to public confidence for which the House of Representatives is not to blame. I refer to the press report yesterday of Secretary Ickes when he undertook to discredit and defame Dr. Wirt before a press conference by making the charge that Dr. Wirt had been endeavoring to mulct from sacred Public Works funds money for his own personal benefit. Dr. Wirt has made the statement that this statement on the part of Secretary Ickes is false. Whether this statement be true or false, this much is obvious, that the real purpose of Secretary Ickes in making the statement at this time is to defame the character of Dr. Wirt and to discredit him. If, in this matter, Secretary Ickes' purpose had been to render a public service, he would have made public his statement of yesterday at the time that he, Ickes, claims Dr. Wirt tried to despoil this sacred Public Works fund, which was at a time before Dr. Wirt had made his public statement which is now so irritable to Secretary Ickes.

The public will understand that it is more pleasant for Secretary Ickes at this time to defame the character of Dr. Wirt in this manner than it would be for Secretary Ickes to appear before this committee to tell to the committee and to the country by what authority of law he used a million dollars of Public Works funds to purchase stock in a corporation known as the Electric Home & Farm Authority, incorporated under the laws of Delaware by the directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority, which corporation is authorized by its charter to manufacture, buy, sell, and deal in electrical appliances, and goods, wares, and merchandise of every class and description necessary or useful for the operation of the corporation, also to lend money and to extend financial assistance and guarantee the obligations of individuals, firms, corporations, and others with or without security, also to borrow money and issue evidences of indebtedness of all kinds whether secured by mortgage, pledge, or otherwise without limit as to amount and also to purchase, deal with, or dispose of stocks, bonds, or other securities of any person, firm, association, trust, or corporation.

While it may be more pleasant for Secretary Ickes at this time to question the character of Dr. Wirt than it would be for him under oath to tell this committee and the country by what authority of law he is taking a million dollars of Public Works funds to buy the stock in a corporation authorized to do the things which this Delaware corporation is authorized to perform—and which will be done with Government money which was appropriated by Congress for the primary purpose of taking care of unemployment—yet I am quite certain that the public would much rather have Secretary Ickes come before the committee to tell by what authority of law a million dollars of Public Works money has been used for the purpose of purchasing the stock in such a corporation.

If it develops that there is no authority in law for Mr. Ickes, Public Works Administrator, to permit $1,000,000 of Public Works funds to be invested in the stock of a corporation authorized to perform such business, then at least one statement in the charges of Dr. Wirt will have been proved conclusively, namely, that one high official in the executive department of the Government, none less than a Cabinet officer, is conducting his affairs without regard for the laws of the Republic under the Constitution.

In order for the American people to understand fully the magnitude of the effort to destroy the character of Dr. Wirt, I think that the people would be very much interested if they could have the full and complete report of a most important press conference in Washington on Wednesday morning. By a full report, I mean the "off the record" report as well as the record report. From the information which I have been able to receive, the off-the-record report includes the statement from one high in the executive circles:

> I advise you to look into the private character and private life of Dr. Wirt. I am not in a position to tell it to you now.

The conduct of the chairman of the committee, the ranking majority member of the committee, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the majority floor leader of the House of Representatives, and Mr. Ickes, a Cabinet officer, toward Dr. Wirt presents an issue far greater than the issue presented in the original Wirt charge. That issue is, Can an American citizen appear before a committee of Congress without being besmirched by members of the committee, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the majority leader, and a Cabinet officer? This is an issue which leaves Dr. Wirt as a mere pawn in the game. If the time has come when any citizen, high or low in financial or social caste, white or black, Jew or Gentile, cannot appear before a committee of Congress under subpena without his character being falsely and maliciously defamed, then the rights and liberties of the American citizens are gone. If that time has come, then the America of Washington, Jackson, Jefferson, Cleveland, Theodore Roosevelt, and Woodrow Wilson is dead. This is the real issue now involved in the controversy originally presented by Dr. Wirt.

If the American people of this generation have the courage of their patriotic fathers and mothers they will arise and stamp out the un-American and unconscionable treatment which has in the last few days been heaped upon Dr. Wirt by falsely defaming his character and his loyalty and patriotism to country. When the American people make this fight they will not alone be fighting to obtain justice for Dr. Wirt, they will be fighting to retain justice and liberty for themselves and their posterity.

Whenever the rights of the American citizens are completely restored, not only will an American citizen have the right to appear before a congressional committee under subpena without his character being falsely defamed, but he will also have the traditional American right to make his opening statement to the committee and to have counsel in the usual American manner. Dr. Wirt has been denied both of these rights. When he was denied the right to make his opening statement, he was denied the right and privilege which has been enjoyed by all the hundreds and thousands of citizens who have heretofore appeared before congressional committees. He was allowed the right of counsel, but it was with the humiliating restriction that counsel could only propound questions after he had first presented his questions to the committee in writing. This was a most humiliating and un-American restriction. Its only purpose could be that the committee was afraid to permit the American people to know the questions which were propounded by the counsel and unduly to hamper the counsel in asking questions.

Mr. Speaker, in the speech yesterday by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE], chairman of the select committee which is supposed to inquire into the charges made by Dr. Wirt, he said——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. I thought we settled this Wirt matter yesterday. Now, the gentleman from Kansas is an entertaining speaker, and I should like to hear him on any other subject.

Mr. McGUGIN. I think that is true.

Mr. BLANTON. But there ought to be an end here to this Wirt matter. We have referred that to a committee.

Mr. SIROVICH. Does the gentleman think the gentleman is going from bad to "Wirt"?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and vice versa.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I refuse to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman is going to insist on delivering his eloquent address, I think he should have an audience to listen to him.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I refuse to yield further and have my time taken away from me.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present, although I may withdraw it later.

Mr. McGUGIN. The gentleman may make his point; let us have a good crowd.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, he moved to strike out the last word; we should like to hear the gentleman on the subject of "the last word", so I withdraw the point of order that there is not a quorum present in order that the gentleman from Kansas may discuss "striking out the last word."

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. (After counting.) Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and eighty-five Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. BYRNS, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, am I recognized?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, in the first place, may I say to the Members of the House that I am not responsible for their being called over here.

In the speech yesterday of Mr. BULWINKLE, Chairman of the Select Committee——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman moved to strike out the last word. The last word is "1921." If the gentleman will confine himself to the subject, I shall not interrupt him any more, but we do expect him to confine himself to the subject.

Mr. McGUGIN. Does the gentleman from Texas seriously object to my reading six telegrams from substantial citizens of Gary, Ind., stating that Dr. Wirt is an upright citizen and that he was never in jail, as was charged on the floor of this House yesterday?

Mr. BLANTON. What has that to do with the business of the Congress?

Mr. McGUGIN. When did the gentleman from Texas decide to confine himself to the business of the Congress?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows that his speech has to be answered. That will take up more time. If he wants to put a prepared speech in the RECORD by extending his remarks, I shall not object.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield further to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Kansas desires to speak out of order, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 5 minutes to speak out of order and that I have 5 minutes to answer him.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object.

Mr. BLANTON. I want some Democrat to answer the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand there is a unanimous consent request before the House. As a member of the special committee, the gentleman from Kansas did me the honor yesterday of paying me a few compliments.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield the right to the gentleman from New York if he wants to answer the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I understand the gentleman from Kansas used 10 minutes. I imagine he will use at least 10 minutes today, according to the size of the manuscript he has before him. I do not now know whether I will dignify his speech with a reply, but I would like to have the opportunity and I ask unanimous consent to answer the gentleman for 10 minutes if I see fit, and I hope I do not see fit to answer him.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I will modify my request and ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes, that I be given 3 minutes to answer him, and that the gentleman from New York may have 10 minutes, if he desires.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, in the speech yesterday of Mr. BULWINKLE, chairman of the select committee——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Kansas is not confining himself to the subject, which is a motion "to strike out the last word."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has not proceeded far enough to determine that.

Mr. BLANTON. This motion to strike out the last word has nothing to do with the speech yesterday of Mr. BULWINKLE. I imagine the last word that will be said on "Dr. Wirt" will be at the next primary in Kansas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas will confine himself to a discussion of the pro forma amendment.

Mr. McGUGIN. I am sorry that those on the Democratic side do not see fit to let me read to the House six telegrams from Gary, Ind., which completely refute the slanderous statement made here yesterday against Dr. Wirt; but having already obtained permission to extend my remarks, I will simply include them in my remarks.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman cannot do that without permission.

Mr. McGUGIN. I already have permission.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that under the rules of this House no one can insert anything in the RECORD, whether it is a telegram or not, without unanimous consent.

Mr. McGUGIN. I have already obtained unanimous consent.

Mr. O'CONNOR. To insert these telegrams in the RECORD? No!

Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no one can insert in the RECORD a document written by anybody else, or even read them on the floor, without unanimous consent as to those particular documents.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is correct. The Clerk is looking up now to see what the unanimous-consent request was.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN] be allowed to proceed for 5 minutes and that the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] may have 5 minutes to answer.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McGUGIN. What is the ruling of the Speaker? Am I denied the opportunity to put these telegrams in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that the gentleman was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD. Therefore the gentleman is denied permission to put the telegrams in the RECORD.

Mr. McGUGIN. Then, I will have to go over to the Senate and get them in.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. Is it possible that the Democratic gag rule here is going to be such as to not allow Republicans to put statements in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not state a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RICH. It is high time that the House of Representatives dignify itself with the business before it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. McGUGIN. In the speech yesterday by Mr. BULWINKLE, chairman of the select committee, which is supposed to inquire into the charges made by Dr. Wirt, he said:

> The gentleman from Kansas knows we are not prosecuting or persecuting Dr. Wirt; not in the least. He was not here to be investigated. If he had been, I would have gone into his private character. If he had been, I would have brought out from him the fact that during the war on account of his pro-German activities he was confined in the jail at Gary, Ind. I did not bring any of that before the committee. There was not the least bit of persecution of Dr. Wirt.

These were the exact words which Mr. BULWINKLE uttered upon the floor. I copied them from the original transcript as it came from the reporters. This statement is a bold, outright statement on the part of Mr. BULWINKLE when he said:

> I would have brought out from him the fact that during the war on account of his pro-German activities he was confined in the jail at Gary, Ind.

When this speech was reported in the RECORD this morning I find that it has been changed to read as follows:

> I would have brought out from him the fact that during the war whether or not, on account of his pro-German activities, he was confined in the jail at Gary, Ind.

The words "whether or not" were added to the original reporter's transcript of this speech. I submit that adding the words "whether or not" is a case of hedging on the bold and actual charge which was made on the floor by the gentleman from North Carolina. It is not only hedging but it is presenting a wholly unfair statement.

Supposing Mr. BULWINKLE had asked Professor Wirt this question: "Please tell us 'whether or not', on account of your pro-German activities, you were confined in the jail at Gary, Ind.?" If Dr. Wirt had answered "yes", it would have meant that he was in the jail at Gary, Ind., for pro-German activities. If Dr. Wirt had answered "no", it would have meant that he was not in jail for pro-German activities but in the jail at Gary, Ind., for something else. Any way he could answer such a question, he would have been left in the position of admitting that he was in the jail at Gary, Ind., notwithstanding the fact that he was never in jail.

Adding these words "whether or not" to the Bulwinkle statement as it was actually made on the floor is not unlike the insidious stock question which is frequently referred to, namely, Have you quit beating your wife? If the witness answers "no", of course, it is left as an established fact that he is still beating his wife. If he answer "yes", then it stands that he formerly beat his wife but has now quit. This, of course, leaves a witness who has never beaten his wife in a most embarrassing position.

It is not for me or any other member of the committee to be called upon to defend or bolster up Dr. Wirt. It is simply up to Dr. Wirt to make his statement and let the public be the judge.

The responsibility is upon me and every other member of the committee to insist that Dr. Wirt have the same square deal as should be accorded any witness appearing before a congressional hearing.

I submit that in the light of the record he has not had the fair, courteous treatment which should be accorded to any citizen appearing before a congressional hearing.

First, before Dr. Wirt came to Washington, the Speaker of the House was quoted in the papers as saying that if Dr. Wirt does not answer the questions presented, we will put him in jail. What occasion was there for such a statement from the Speaker of the House? Dr. Wirt had not said that he would not answer questions. The only possible purpose for such a statement from the Speaker would be to discredit in advance a witness in the eyes of the people.

Second, when Dr. Wirt appeared before the committee he had with him his counsel, the Honorable James A. Reed, former United States Senator from Missouri. Senator Reed was denied the opportunity to appear for Dr. Wirt with all the liberties and privileges which counsel for other witnesses have enjoyed.

Third, Dr. Wirt was denied the opportunity to make an opening statement. When Dr. Wirt was denied this opportunity he was denied a courtesy and a right which has been enjoyed by all the hundreds and thousands of other witnesses who have appeared before congressional committees.

Fourth, the majority members of this committee have refused to call all the people named in Dr. Wirt's testimony. They have refused to call Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Tugwell, both of whom were named by Dr. Wirt, and of whom there is documentary evidence to substantiate and prove the statements made by Dr. Wirt pertaining to these two gentlemen.

The denial to Dr. Wirt to have counsel in the usual sense, to make the usual and customary opening statement, and the refusal of the committee to subpena all the people who were named by Dr. Wirt, including Secretary Wallace and Professor Tugwell, were done by the three majority members of the committee, over the protest of the two minority members.

When it is said that the committee has refused to do certain things in this matter, let it always be remembered that it has been the three majority members who have denied these rights, commonly extended to other witnesses, to Dr. Wirt, while the two minority members, Mr. LEHLBACH and I have insisted at all times that Dr. Wirt should have the right to make his opening statement, the right of counsel, including the right of his counsel to cross-examine anyone who refutes the statements of Dr. Wirt, and that all witnesses named by Dr. Wirt be called.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BLANCH BROOMFIELD

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2518, for the relief of Blanch Broomfield.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JOHN L. HOFFMAN

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2556, for the relief of John L. Hoffman.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MEAD. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. HOPE. I withhold it temporarily, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I may say in explanation to my distinguished colleague that this claim affects a railroad employee who was going to his work on June 16, 1917, and was attacked by a soldier who was guarding a bridge. The soldier was intoxicated and attacked this railroad worker, who was on his way to his work. As a result of the injuries inflicted upon this man he was confined to his home from June 16 until July 23. The soldier was in the Federal service and was not a member of the National Guard at the time, and therefore no relief could be given by any State agency.

This man has suffered ever since this accident. He has a hole in the top of his head that did not heal and he has had to wear glasses because of impaired vision. It is possible that he may eventually lose his rights as a railroad trainman because of defective eyesight. The man is permanently injured and he is asking the only government that can consider his claim, the Federal Government, because it was a Federal officer who struck him down, to provide this relief.

I may also say that this soldier admitted in court that he was intoxicated and did not know anything about what he had done. He was sentenced to 6 months at hard labor for assaulting this worker and was dishonorably discharged from the Army on account of this attack.

Under the circumstances and because of the fact that this man has suffered so much and has waited so long for this meager measure of relief, I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I have found nothing in the report to indicate that this man has suffered any permanent injury or has suffered any severe injury of any sort.

Mr. MEAD. I have a letter here in my file that explains to the Secretary of War that his report was inaccurate and in no way conveyed the correct information to the committee, and I furnished the Secretary of War with a letter from the superintendent of the Lehigh Valley Railroad to disprove the one claim that the War Department made, which was that he was only away from his work 1 day. The records of the railroad company indicate that he was away from his work from June 17 until July 23.

The next objection was made when the bill came before the House a year ago. It was claimed then that the soldier was a member of the National Guard and that the State should pay the claim. I have a letter from the deputy attorney general of the State giving the day and date when the regiment was Federalized and indicating it was clearly and purely a Federal claim.

I have all the records here and I have answered every claim made by the War Department and I have given the committee every bit of evidence, and I may say further I have here such information as the gentleman may desire.

Mr. HOPE. I would have no objection to considering any evidence the gentleman may have, but the report of the committee is certainly very different from the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. MEAD. No; the report of the committee indicates he was away from work from June 16 until July 23. That is in the report of the committee.

Mr. HOPE. The report of the committee, however, furnishes no information whatever as to any permanent injury which this man may have suffered. I think that is a matter of very great importance, and if the gentleman has any evidence showing the existence of a permanent injury, I would be quite willing to consider it, and I am going to suggest that under the circumstances——

Mr. MEAD. The report of the committee indicates that this man has a serious injury. It goes on to say that he suffered an injury to his head and that he had stitches taken to sew up a wound on his head and that his right ear was also lacerated. It indicates that he suffered from dizzy spells, and that the soldier was intoxicated, was arrested, and found guilty and sentenced to serve 6 months.

Mr. HOPE. There is nothing in the report that I have been able to discover to show that this man suffered any permanent injury. If he did, of course, that alters the case considerably, and I am going to suggest to the gentleman that we permit this matter to be passed over for the present.

Mr. MEAD. If the gentleman will permit, here is an affidavit from Wayland W. Williams, an eyewitness, and here is another statement from the superintendent of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, and another one from Charles Benson. These were furnished to the committee and indicate not only the nature of the attack but the permanency of the injury to this man as well as the time he lost.

I know this man and I know that after a period of 12 or 15 years he is broken in health as a result of this injury. All that is requested for him in this bill is such money as will pay the actual expenses incurred, including the loss of time and medical treatment.

Mr. HOPE. Was there any medical evidence furnished the committee to show that his present condition of health is directly due to this attack?

Mr. MEAD. This occurred during the war. The evidence furnished the committee was submitted years ago. The evidence furnished at that time indicated that this man was permanently disabled. There was no objection and the claim was not questioned in this manner before. The only question brought up before was that this claim should be referred to the State. I took it up with the Attorney General and he advises that it is not a State case, because the regiment was federalized.

If I had know anyone was going to object today I would have furnished the information concerning his present physical condition.

This man is asking for only $2,000 to reimburse him for the expenses involved in connection with the injury which resulted from a brutal attack on the part of an intoxicated soldier who confessed his guilt in court.

Mr. HOPE. Let me say to the gentleman that I was going to suggest that if he would accept an amendment reducing the amount to $500, I would not object, but I do not think $500 is enough if his injuries are as the gentleman has stated; but I would like to have time to make a further investigation as to the permanency of these injuries. So I am going to suggest that we let the bill be passed over for the present, and that the gentleman furnish me with such evidence as he may have to show the permanency of these injuries, and I shall agree to offer no objection if I am satisfied as to such injuries.

Mr. MEAD. I shall be very sorry if the gentleman objects at this time, because 2 years ago an objection was made, and that was about 14 years after the war was over, and was based on the alleged fact that this was a National Guard regiment.

I have furnished information to disprove that contention. Now, if objection is made again, it will probably go over for 2 years more.

The $2,000 will only pay the doctor and hospital bills, and the expenses resulting from his loss of work. This is not a constituent of mine, but I know this man and I know the condition he is in. The bill only calls for a small amount of money, and I would like to have the gentleman withdraw his objection.

Mr. HOPE. The Private Calendar will be considered again shortly. I am willing to have it come up at the next call of the calendar, and if I find the facts to be as indicated by the gentleman, I shall be glad to help him get the bill through. But I would like to have time to look up the facts.

Mr. MEAD. There are several affidavits in the report.

Mr. HOPE. I have read the affidavits. If the facts are as the gentleman indicated, I think the man is entitled to the full $2,000, but if not, I think $500 is ample.

Mr. MEAD. Five hundred dollars would hardly pay him for loss of time on the railroad. The doctor who attended him has since died, and therefore it would be impossible to get an affidavit from him.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over for the present, and called up as the second bill on the next call of the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIROVICH). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

JACOB DURRENBERGER

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 339, a bill (H.R. 200) for the relief of Jacob Durrenberger. The gentleman from Ohio, through a misunderstanding, asked that it go over without prejudice. I have since talked to the gentleman and he stated to me that he has no objection to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to returning to Calendar No. 339?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Jacob Durrenberger, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000 as compensation for personal injuries caused as a result of an accident involving an Army vehicle at Jamaica, Long Island, N.Y., on September 16, 1929.

With the following committee amendments:

In line 6, strike out the words "as compensation" and insert in lieu thereof "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

At the end of the bill add the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOSEPH A. M'CARTHY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2641, for the relief of Joseph A. McCarthy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FRANK W. CHILDRESS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2651, for the relief of Frank W. Childress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS. The facts found by the committee are that this man was a rural-mail carrier, that he was serving a 20-mile route, but was paid for an 18-mile route. The report states that he earned $1,191.18 more than he was paid. If the gentleman will look at the letter from the Post Office Department, the last one in the committee report, he will see that the Department does not advise against the bill; that is to say, they do not say that this is an unjust claim, but they say that it is not in the interest of efficient administration. In view of these facts, what objection has the gentleman to letting the bill go through?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, if I understand the bill correctly, here is the case of a mail carrier on a rural route who carried the mail over that route during a period of years, apparently well satisfied with his contract. After he severed his connection with the Government he discovered that during all that period he was traveling a little farther than he thought, and he comes in now and asks to be paid an additional amount of money because while he thought he was traveling only 18 miles, really, as a matter of fact, he was traveling a 20-mile route.

Mr. SANDERS. He was not responsible for that, because the Government determined the mileage.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I agree with my colleague about that, but it does not seem to me that this is a case where the Government is properly liable. It would open up discussion in a thousand cases, just as the Department says. It is not as if the man had made a claim and had been refused at the time, but after he severed his connection with the Government he discovered that he had traveled more miles than he thought he had.

Mr. SANDERS. The gentleman is not serious that he thinks there would be a thousand cases like this?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I am sure I do not know. I know only that the Department called attention to the fact that it would open up a very large field. I do not say that other claims would be on all fours with this, but it would open up cases where people had possibly done more work than they thought they had. I suggest the gentleman should introduce a general bill and take it up before the proper committee and decide whether such cases should be paid for. It has often seemed to me, in these individual cases, where a general principle is covered, that we should first find out whether the Congress wants to recognize the principle; and if so, consider the individual bills afterward.

Mr. SANDERS. I do not think the gentleman will find any parallel case to this, and I do not see the necessity for a general bill. Of course, if the gentleman insists upon his objection, that is all there is to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

D. F. PHILLIPS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2666, for the relief of D. F. Phillips.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and hereby is, authorized to consider and pass upon the application of D. F. Phillips, former rural free delivery carrier at Resaca, Ga., for the benefits of the Compensation Act approved September 7, 1916, on account of an injury occurring in the year 1919, notwithstanding the provisions of section 20 of said act requiring that all claims be filed within 1 year from the date of injury.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of New York: At the end of line 10, insert: "Provided, That no benefit shall accrue prior to the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PAUL I. MORRIS AND BEULAH FULLER MORRIS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2669, for the relief of Paul I. Morris and Beulah Fuller Morris.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER] whether there is any legal liability upon the Government in this claim?

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, this bill is exactly, in principle, like one in favor of Leo Byrne passed during the Seventy-first Congress, except in that case the claimant was in training in the Reserve Officers' training camp, whereas this decedent was in training in the civilian military training camp. In this case the trainee died, as recognized by the War Department, as a result of exposure to meningitis while in training at Fort McClellan, Ala. The bill proposes to accord to his parents benefits they would have received had he died as a civilian employee of the Government in service of the Government as a result of the discharge of his duties. It is to my mind inconceivable that there could be any valid objection to it. It is, as I said, in line with the precedent already established, except that this man was a private and in the other case the man was an officer.

Mr. TRUAX. I asked the gentleman whether there was any legal liability and responsibility upon the part of the United States Government, and not merely for a precedent.

Mr. TARVER. I think there is a moral responsibility upon the part of the Government.

Of course, none of these bills would have to be introduced and considered by Congress if there were a legal way by which the claims could be collected without special legislation. It is on a parity with every other claim bill passed, as far as that particular feature of it is concerned.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman is hardly accurate when he states that the bill in hand is identical in principle with the Byrne Act passed a year or two ago. In that case a young man named Byrne was attending an officers' reserve training camp and was injured during the training period. He was given pay and allowance not to exceed $150.

Mr. TARVER. One hundred dollars a month?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. No. A total of $150.

Mr. TARVER. If the gentleman will examine the report, I think he will find it was $100 a month.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I have the act before me. It is no. 470 of the Seventieth Congress, an act for the relief of Leo Byrne.

Mr. TARVER. I am sure the gentleman is mistaken, but if he has the act before him, of course that will show.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Well, I have the act right in front of me. It is a very short bill.

Mr. TARVER. The pay allowance in that case awarded to the claimant might not have been in excess of $150, as the gentleman says. My impression is that the allowance was $100 a month, but the difference in amount does not affect the principle involved.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. In the case before us, the parents are asking for a pension, and, as the War Department points out, to do so would establish a precedent which would undoubtedly lead to many similar claims. It has never been done before, according to the War Department.

Mr. TARVER. It is not a precedent for this reason: The Byrne case is a precedent. In that case there was awarded what was considered to be fair compensation for the injury sustained by the trainee in service. That is what we are asking in this case. It makes no difference that the amount is different. The question involved is the same—that is, whether or not the Government should assume responsibility for damages incurred as the result of injuries sustained by a trainee in either the Reserve Officers' training camp or the civilian military training camp. It does not make any difference whether the amount is $150 or $1,500. The only question is, Should the Government pay under those conditions?

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. The precedent cited is the case of Leo Byrne?

Mr. TARVER. That is right.

Mr. TRUAX. In that case the Government paid the individual himself who had been injured?

Mr. TARVER. Correct.

Mr. TRUAX. In this case the parents of the individual are to be reimbursed. As I understand it, the War Department recommends the enactment of section no. 2, but not of section no. 1. Is that true?

Mr. TARVER. Section no. 2 relates only to the payment of the doctor's bills and the funeral expenses incurred by the father of the trainee in the amount of $764. The War Department recommends the payment of that amount, and I apprehend, of course, there would be no objection to that in any event; but while the War Department does not recommend payment of the amount provided for in the first section of the bill, it offers, as I understand it, as its only objection, the fact that there is no law which authorizes such payment. That, of course, is true. If there were such a law it would not be necessary to enact one now. My position is that the Congress has already established a precedent by which the Government has recognized responsibility in such cases, and that in line with that precedent this legislation should properly be enacted.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Does the gentleman think it wise to pass special bills in preference to general legislation, considered in the committee and debated in Congress, to take care of an entire class of cases?

Mr. TARVER. I think it would be wiser to handle the question by general legislation, but until action is taken by Congress looking toward that end, it occurs to me that Congress would not like a moral injustice, although, perhaps, not a legal injustice, to be done to the dependent parents of this deceased trainee. I think it is the purpose of Congress, in passing bills on the Private Calendar, to take care of individual instances not provided for under general law, where a moral injustice might result if it were not done.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It is a very inequitable and unsatisfactory way of doing business.

Mr. TARVER. I quite agree with the gentleman. I think it should be done by general legislation, but, pending consideration by Congress of general legislation, it seems to me we should endeavor to do equity in each individual case as it may be presented to us.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I remember a similar bill about a year ago in behalf of a trainee in a citizens' military training camp in Texas, where objection was made. If we are to follow precedents, that is one that I recall, which would justify an objection to this bill.

Mr. TARVER. I am not familiar with the precedent stated by the gentleman. No doubt that is correct, but I do not recall the case.

Mr. TRUAX. In this bill, the report states that this youth, between 17 and 18 years of age, contributed slightly to the support of the family. I assume that this pension is for what he would have contributed had he lived for a period of 8 years.

Mr. TARVER. That is correct.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman thinks the pension mentioned, of $15 a month, would be proper and sufficient to cover whatever his contribution would have been?

Mr. TARVER. I doubt if it would be enough to cover what his contribution might have been, but it is in line with the allowance usually made by the Compensation Commission in similar cases.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Is the gentleman from Ohio willing to take the responsibility along with me of establishing a precedent of paying pensions to parents of boys injured at training camps? That is the question that is put up to us squarely.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. What about the boys in the C.C.C. camps?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. They are covered by general law. The Federal Employees' Compensation Act applies to the men employed in the C.C.C. camps.

Mr. TARVER. That is the question we were discussing a while ago. We have no general law here, and for that reason must deal with these individual cases by special acts. But is there not every justification for saying that if such responsibility should be assumed by the Government in the case of employees in C.C.C. camps it should likewise be held at least morally responsible in the case of the training camps?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. There is general law covering the C.C.C. camps. I call the gentleman's attention to this statement in the report of the War Department:

> The payment of compensation to parents of citizens' military training camp students is not authorized by existing law under any circumstances. The War Department does not favor the payment of such compensation in this case. To do so would establish a precedent which would undoubtedly lead to many similar claims.

Mr. TARVER. It is not a case of setting a precedent, for the precedent has already been established; but it must be recognized by the gentleman that the justice of the proposition is settled if we agree that it is just that the Government should pay similar compensation in the cases of employees in the C.C.C. camps, there can be no valid distinction made.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I understand there is a law covering the compensation of men injured in C.C.C. camps.

Mr. TARVER. There is; and, therefore, it is not necessary to pass special bills. In the case under consideration it is necessary to pass a special bill in order that justice may be done by reason of the fact that Congress has not passed a general law.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman from Georgia be willing to agree to a unanimous consent request that this bill be passed over until the next call of the Private Calendar in order that we may investigate?

Mr. TARVER. I would, of course, be compelled to accede to the gentleman's request should he insist upon it; but let me point out to the gentleman that this boy died 4 years ago, and this bill has been reported favorably to every Congress since that time by the Claims Committee. We have now reached the bill for consideration. If there is further delay it renders less probable the passage of the bill through the Senate. The parents of this deceased boy are in very distressed circumstances. They have waited almost 4 years. It seems clear that the bill, in spirit, is in accordance with previous actions of the House, and I sincerely trust the gentleman will not insist upon his suggestion.

Mr. TRUAX. I may say to the gentleman from Georgia that I have understood that perhaps bills on the Private Calendar may be considered tomorrow, or, if not tomorrow, at least very soon.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice until the next call of the Private Calendar.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman means, I hope, that it shall be assigned third place on the calendar at the next call?

Mr. TRUAX. That is right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

ADA T. FINLEY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2673, for the relief of Ada T. Finley.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the bill in its present form is practically a direction to the Compensation Commission to find that the claimant is entitled to compensation and to pay her whatever amount the law allows. I think the bill should be so amended as to leave open for determination by the Compensation Commission the question of whether or not the claimant sustained the injuries complained of in the performance of her duties.

Mr. TARVER. I want to be perfectly frank with the gentleman from New York. The bill is intended to be mandatory in its provisions. The case has already been considered by the Employees' Compensation Commission. A claim was filed by the claimant within the time allowed by law.

The insistence in this case is that the undisputed evidence in the files shows clearly that the claimant's disability of valvular heart trouble, while existing in a mild form upon her employment by the Government was severely aggravated during the time of employment which was as a follow-up nurse for the then Veterans' Bureau from 1920 to 1926.

It is a question which involves a matter of policy. I would not have the gentleman consent to the passage of this bill upon the theory that the bill asks merely permission for the claimant to present her case to the Employees' Compensation Commission, since it is intended, as I have said, to give mandatory instructions to the Commission to allow the claim.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. That is the way the bill reads?

Mr. TARVER. Yes.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I understood that the gentleman had a new theory upon which this claimant was to proceed, or that there was some new evidence and that he was merely asking that the Compensation Commission again take jurisdiction, because of the new developments since the previous determination.

Mr. TARVER. No.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I would have no objection to a rehearing, but I object to any bill which attempts to make of Congress a court of appeals, and which bill overrules the considered action of the Compensation Commission.

Unless the bill can be amended in order to be consistent I shall be obliged to object. I have objected to several similar bills.

Mr. TARVER. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that evidence appears in the report in the form of an affidavit by Dr. J. D. L. McPheeters, the physician under whom the claimant did her work, in which he testifies as to the circumstances which led him, her superior officer, to believe that the aggravation of her disability was occasioned by the performance of her duty. Upon that affidavit, as well as upon other evidence which appears in the report, it seemed to me to be conclusive that the claimant's disability did arise because of her service; and since it seemed that the Commission had improperly refused compensation, I thought it was a proper subject matter for presentation to Congress by a special bill.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I read Dr. McPheeter's affidavit and understood that on the strength of his statements the gentleman hoped for a reversal of the previous decision of the Compensation Commission.

Mr. TARVER. No; that is not it.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded; is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ALBERT H. JACOBSON

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2803, for the relief of Albert H. Jacobson.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. TRUAX. Then, I object to the bill, Mr. Speaker.

JAMES B. CONNER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3056, for the relief of James B. Conner.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "Agriculture", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WILLIAM J. RYAN

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3066, for the relief of William J. Ryan, chaplain, United States Army.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I reserve my objection.

Mr. SUTPHIN. I understand this bill is the result of an accident which occurred in San Francisco several years ago when Father Ryan's car had a collision with an Army truck. His car was damaged to the extent of $225, or whatever the bill calls for. The amount is recommended for payment by the Army Department. This bill has twice passed the Senate. Once before it has been objected to in the House.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTPHIN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TRUAX. Who will be the recipient of this money?

Mr. SUTPHIN. Father William J. Ryan, who is a Catholic priest, stationed at Fort Hancock, N.J. He is not a resident of my district. He came in there only recently. This claim originated some years ago, when he was stationed on the Pacific coast, and I sincerely trust the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. TRUAX. This gentleman is a chaplain in the Army?

Mr. SUTPHIN. He is a priest in the Army at the present time.

Mr. HOLLISTER. While I appreciate the War Department has recommended favorable action on the bill, I am unable to see under what principle such a recommendation was made.

Mr. SUTPHIN. I may say in answer to the gentleman that I hope no personal prejudice enters into this in any way.

Mr. HOLLISTER. There is no personal prejudice of any kind on my part.

Mr. SUTPHIN. I know the gentleman is usually fair.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I shall have to object unless the gentleman wants me to make a statement as to my reasons.

Mr. SUTPHIN. I wish the gentleman would.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Here is a case of injury to property by a Government vehicle, driven by a Government employee, but there is no evidence whatsoever of any negligence. It does seem to me that we should as far as possible confine allowances in these cases to the same situation where an ordinary private corporation would have been responsible under similar circumstances.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Has not the Committee on Claims considered all of these elements in connection with the question of negligence?

Mr. HOLLISTER. The committee may have.

Mr. SUTPHIN. This bill has passed the Senate twice and has been objected to in the House once before.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If the only objection the gentleman has is whether or not the proof has been established as to contributory negligence, I think I can relieve the gentleman's mind.

Mr. HOLLISTER. There is no question of contributory negligence. It is simply a question of whether there is negligence on behalf of the Government employee, and this does not appear. Therefore, it does not seem to me right to allow the claim. I think the gentleman will find that the Committee on Claims occasionally reports bills out even though there is no negligence shown.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Not to my knowledge, and I know something about the Claims Committee.

Mr. HOLLISTER. But the report so states.

Mr. SUTPHIN. The report also shows that the street was slippery when the truck and the car collided.

Mr. HOLLISTER. That is true.

Mr. SUTPHIN. We are not claiming any negligence, but nevertheless, the damage occurred, and the Chaplain is certainly entitled to reimbursement.

Mr. HOLLISTER. The gentleman perhaps misunderstood me. I understand his position, but we on this side and the gentlemen on the other side are taking the position that proof of damage alone is not sufficient; that in cases of this kind there must be the same proof of negligence as would permit recovery against a private corporation.

Mr. SUTPHIN. The gentleman is an able lawyer, and he knows the only redress a civilian has today where he incurs damage as the result of collision with an Army or Navy truck, whether it results in death or otherwise, is to come to Congress and have a bill for damages passed.

Mr. HOLLISTER. And we must treat them in the same way as they are treated in a court of law.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Relative to what the gentleman from New York said about bills passed in the Claims Committee, if the gentleman will get the bound volumes respecting claims that were taken up in the Sixty-fifth and Sixty-sixth Congresses in that committee, you will find a bound volume of minority reports that I filed myself against claims in that committee.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Some of them were pretty big bills, running into hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I happen to be very high up on that committee, and I do not think the gentleman will find the committee reporting any bill that the committee did not have all the details.

Mr. BLANTON. This was before the gentleman's time.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. We do differently now.

Mr. BLANTON. The committee got into a bad practice back yonder and has not altogether got rid of the practice.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. We do not do that now. In all of these bills where there is negligence or contributory negligence involved we go into the question, and if there is any contributory negligence on the part of the claimant we kick the bill out.

Mr. BLANTON. It is lots easier to get a bill reported favorably by the Claims Committee than it is to get a bill to stop immigration reported out of the gentleman's committee.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I hope the gentleman will not take up immigration, but will let us talk about this bill. The fact of the matter is that the Claims Committee is a hard-working committee and it seems to me that when that group reports out a bill after giving the matter consideration and finding it has merit, it is very hard that one man should get up here and object to it.

Mr. BLANTON. Any committee that reports out hundreds of bills during each session is a hard-working committee. It is the large number of bills they report favorably that makes the committee hard working.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Does the gentleman know how many bills are denied a favorable report? The gentleman does not believe every bill is reported out of the committee?

Mr. SUTPHIN. May I ask the gentleman from Ohio if this is not constructive negligence?

Mr. HOLLISTER. May I ask the gentleman to give me a definition of constructive negligence?

Mr. SUTPHIN. I shall have to refer the gentleman to one of my lawyer friends.

Mr. BRUMM. May I say to the gentleman that that is a principle of law that is as old as the hills.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I shall have to apologize to the gentleman for not being familiar with the term.

Mr. BRUMM. It is very familiar in Pennsylvania under the common law. If there are three parties and the third or innocent party suffers by the act of one of the parties, although there is not absolute negligence in the ordinary sense, as between the two parties, the one who commits the act is negligent under what is known as "constructive negligence."

Mr. HOLLISTER. The gentleman means he is negligent, whether he is negligent or not?

Mr. BRUMM. He is negligent under the law, and that principle is as old as the hills.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I am afraid I do not understand that theory of law.

Mr. BRUMM. Here is an actual case in Pennsylvania. I am driving a car and there is a young girl in the way, and to turn out and save the life of that young girl I strike a third party, a man who is coming along on that side of the road. I am guilty of negligence as to the third or innocent party.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Of course, that is not this case.

Mr. BRUMM. I understand that it is.

Mr. SUTPHIN. The truck slid and hit this chaplain's car and damaged it to the extent of $225, and I trust the gentleman will give this bill his favorable consideration, because it is a very meritorious claim.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

C. K. MORRIS

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill (H.R. 2322) for the relief of C. K. Morris. This bill is no. 255 on the calendar, and on April 3 there was an agreement between the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER] and me that it would be agreeable to return to this bill.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to find out the nature of the bill to which the gentleman from Texas wants to return.

Mr. KLEBERG. This is a bill to which the objector, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER], requested me to provide him with some legal authority to establish the connection between the master and servant in this case, which involves an Army truck that collided with a passenger vehicle driven by the claimant, Mr. Morris.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I have no objection to having a demonstration of legal talent at this time, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIROVICH). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman from Texas wish to make a statement?

Mr. KLEBERG. Yes; I would like to call my friend's attention to the request he made on the last private calendar day when this bill was up. The gentleman stated he would like to have some authority on the principle involved in this bill which, in the first place, does not show definitely that the soldier was driving the truck within the scope of his employment.

I would call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in the case of McClung v. Dearborn (134 Penn. State 396) it was stated:

> It was the master's duty, not only to give orders in such a case, but to see that the orders were obeyed.

Judge Cooley, on torts, states:

> It is immaterial to the master's responsibility that the servant at the time was neglecting some rule of caution which the master had prescribed or was exceeding his master's instructions or was disregarding them in some particular and that the injury which resulted is attributable to the servant's failure to observe the directions given him.

In this case the servant was ordered to turn in the truck at half past 3 in the afternoon. The accident occurred at 5 o'clock in the afternoon. The soldier was found in a drunken condition and was fined in the city court for being drunk and disorderly and for driving recklessly at the time the accident occurred.

Now, with reference to the deviation, whether or not he was still on the job, it is perfectly clear that the pilot that goes out of his route is still acting within the master's liability. A servant, while he makes a deviation for purposes of his own, must remain liable, even though he drives out of the more direct road for purposes of carrying out his master's orders.

In the case of Gibson against Dupre, it was held that the liability of the master is not affected by slight deviations of the servant for his own ends when about the business of the master.

The servant, prior to the accident and after he had obtained that for which he had been sent, had gone upon an errand of his own. The jury having found that the accident occurred while the servant was acting within the scope of his employment the finding was approved.

In the case of the Cleveland-Nehi Bottling Co. against Schenck it was held:

> Error is assigned to the refusal of the trial court to instruct the jury that, if the collision resulted from Tucker's violation of his instructions, the appellant was not liable. No complaint is made of that part of the charge dealing with the measure of appellant's responsibility if the jury found that Tucker was intoxicated. The contention is that the taking of a drink by Tucker in violation of his instructions was such a deviation from his duty as to sever pro tempore the relationship of employer and agent and relieve appellant from liability for his negligent act of running the truck into the automobile. We cannot accept the affirmation of that proposition. Where the servant steps entirely aside from his duty and goes off to serve some purpose of his own, there is, of course, a severance for the time being of the responsible relationship of the master.

So here we have a clear case of deviation.

We know that in the case of the Army there is no place where discipline is more strict, no place where more of an effort is made to see that the orders are carried out. Had this man taken the truck back and thereafter gone out in it without orders and had an accident, nevertheless both he and the truck were in the service of the Army per se, and the question does not apply for the purposes for which he was given instructions but rather to the scope of the act as to its being in the service of the employer. Under this case, the master would still be held. It was the duty of the Department to see that the orders were obeyed. It was its added duty to see that its property, the truck in question, was not used ad libitum in the absence of express authorization.

In either case, merely the use of the truck by the soldier would have been sufficient to establish the master-and-servant connection, and if he in returning to turn the truck in got drunk en route, intoxication would not be a defense.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, the question of deviation, which the gentleman has argued so forcibly, is always a matter of degree. This seems to be one of those borderline cases where there is a question whether such deviation leaves the employee still in the scope of his employment. In such a case, I believe the doubt should be resolved in favor of the claimant. The gentleman has made such a forceful presentation of his case, that I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to C. K. Morris, San Antonio, Tex., the sum of $3,450. Such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States on account of damages sustained by the said C. K. Morris due to personal injuries suffered by his wife and damages caused to his automobile by a collision with a United States Army truck in San Antonio on November 10, 1930.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 6, strike out "$3,450" and insert "$1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

FRANK A. SMITH

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3130, to extend the benefit of the United States Employment Compensation Act to Frank A. Smith.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the author of the bill to the fact that the Compensation Commission thinks that the case has equities, but does not think that the man should be paid compensation for that period while he was working; that is, between November 15, 1922, and September 30, 1924. If the gentleman is willing to accept that as a recommendation to go along with the bill, I have no objection.

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. Speaker, this bill merely gives the claimant the right to file his claim with the Compensation Commission. The bill does not call for compensation in any amount. I would be willing, however, to have that amendment embodied.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman accept the amendment containing the usual proviso that no benefit shall accrue prior to the passage of the act?

Mr. BURNHAM. Certainly.

Mr. TRUAX. Would the gentleman agree to have this recommendation of the Commission inserted as a part of the report upon the bill?

Mr. BURNHAM. What objection would there be to passing the bill merely giving the claimant the right to file his claim with the Compensation Commission? The statute of limitations had run against him. He did not file his claim within 1 year. He endeavored to continue to serve with the Navy, without any thought of filing a claim for compensation.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman has given a good explanation of that feature which I mentioned, and it probably will be taken care of when it goes before the Commission. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 17 and 20 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, are hereby waived in favor of Frank A. Smith, a former employee of the War Department.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the bill insert: "Provided, That no benefit shall accrue prior to the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOHN W. BARNUM

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3146, for the relief of John W. Barnum.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized and instructed to receive and determine the claim of John W. Barnum, a former employee of the United States Shipping Board, without regard to the limitation of time within which such claims are to be filed under the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANCHARD: At the end of the bill insert: "Provided, That no benefit shall accrue prior to the approval of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

RUFUS HUNTER BLACKWELL, JR.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3188, for the relief of Rufus Hunter Blackwell, Jr.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PETROLIA-FORT WORTH GAS PIPE LINE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3293, to provide for the settlement of damage claims arising from the construction of the Petrolia-Fort Worth gas pipe line.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a similar Senate bill, S. 2315, will be substituted for the House bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to transmit to the General Accounting Office for payment, in accordance with the approved findings contained in the report rendered by Lt. Ira P. Griffin, Civil Engineer Corps, United States Navy, to the Navy Department under date of July 29, 1921, all unpaid claims for rights-of-way and damages to private property sustained in connection with the construction on behalf of the United States during the years 1918 and 1919, of a gas pipe line extending from Petrolia to Fort Worth, Tex.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Navy is also authorized to transmit to the General Accounting Office for payment the claim of W. S. Wakeman in the sum of $65 in addition to the sum for said claimant approved in the above-mentioned report.

SEC. 3. That acceptance by any claimant of an amount offered for settlement pursuant to this act shall be deemed to be in full settlement of his claim against the United States.

SEC. 4. No payment shall be made to any claimant under the provisions of this act who has received satisfaction from any other source for the damages sustained due to the laying of said gas pipe line.

SEC. 5. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of this act, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $7,356.75.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

WHITE B. MILLER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3295, for the relief of the estate of White B. Miller.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of White B. Miller, former special assistant to the Attorney General, the sum of $25,000 in full satisfaction of the claim of said estate against the United States for compensation for legal services rendered by the said White B. Miller on behalf of the United States in connection with the tax litigation involved in the Cannon against Bailey cases, a final report of which litigation was rendered by the deceased on March 14, 1929.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 3, after the figures "1929", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF RUSSELL & TUCKER

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Calendar No. 373, H.R. 2340, for the relief of Russell & Tucker and certain other citizens of the States of Texas, Oklahoma, and Kansas, be made no. 4 on the next day the Private Calendar is called. It so happened that I was unavoidably absent from the Chamber at the time the bill came up. I have an agreement with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], who had an amendment that he wished to offer to the bill. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be made no. 4 on the calendar the next day the Private Calendar is called.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. PARKER, for the remainder of the week, on account of urgent business.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

FRANKLIN SURETY CO.

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H.R. 3459, for the relief of the Franklin Surety Co.

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, and I will not object, I would like to ask the distinguished leader when we are going to adjourn?

Mr. BYRNS. I had understood that we would adjourn right away, but the gentleman from Illinois says he has a bill.

Mr. BRENNAN. Reserving the right to object, I have been here all day waiting for this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, Mr. Speaker, somebody else would want to take up his bill next. We had a tentative understanding we would quit at 4:30. The ones who work on this calendar have a great deal more to do than the Members who are present only to pass their private bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a similar Senate bill (S. 1076) will be substituted for the House bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of the Franklin Surety Co. for extra work performed in connection with the completion of contract of April 10, 1929, between the United States and the Wiglan Building Co., Inc., for remodeling the Government warehouse at New York, N.Y., and to allow thereon not to exceed $11,725.71 in full and final settlement of all claims by the said Franklin Surety Co. against the United States arising out of said contract. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $11,725.71, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for payment of said claim.

With the following committee amendment:

At the end of the bill insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and the special orders made or that may be made by the House, it may be in order to continue the call of bills unobjected to on the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I understood that there were six bills which it was agreed should be taken up at the beginning of the next call of the Private Calendar. I have no objection to considering these bills, but I am wondering whether the gentleman has given any thought to the work involved in preparing the bills on the Private Calendar and that we have had 2 steady days of the Private Calendar.

Mr. BYRNS. I may say to the gentleman that I have not. I realize a great volume of work and responsibility is entailed on the part of the gentlemen on both sides of the Chamber designated by the House to do this work.

I suggest that we proceed tomorrow until these gentlemen get ready to quit. I am sure the House will be disposed to quit at that time; but I should like to dispose of as many bills as can be disposed of.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, do we understand that at the close of business tomorrow the House will adjourn over until Monday?

Mr. BYRNS. That is the present intention.

Mr. BLANTON. Will not the gentleman submit that request now so we will know what we are going to do and arrange our program accordingly? Also, will not the gentleman state to the House that the District bill will not come up for consideration until Monday? This will stop a flood of inquiries.

Mr. BYRNS. The District appropriation bill, I may say, will not come up for consideration until next week. Whether it will come up Monday will depend upon the calendar for that day. Bills on the Consent Calendar will be considered, and bills will be considered under suspension of the rules. I had hoped that possibly the District bill might be called up on the afternoon of Monday.

Mr. BLANTON. But it will not be called up before next week?

Mr. BYRNS. No; it will not.

Mr. BLANTON. Why does not the gentleman ask now that when we adjourn tomorrow we adjourn until Monday, so we can arrange our program?

Mr. BYRNS. I have no objection to making that request.

Mr. SNELL. I may say to the gentleman from Tennessee that the Members charged with the preparation of bills on the Private Calendar have 10 bills ahead now.

Mr. BYRNS. Perhaps they will have another 10 bills by tomorrow.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. That may be possible, but that will be about as much as we can do.

Mr. BYRNS. The only object in my insistence is that I had hoped we might complete the call of Private Calendar to give every Member who has a bill on it an opportunity to have his bill considered. Of course, we made good progress both yesterday and today, and I think that in two or three more meetings we can get through with this Private Calendar.

Mr. SNELL. So far we have been considering bills on the Private Calendar under the old rules. Does the gentleman expect to call them up under the regular rules of the House at any time during the session of the House?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I think it was shown pretty conclusively that that rule was no good, for we spent a whole day under its operation and passed but four bills.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman says it has been conclusively demonstrated to be no good. I disagree with him. I have a bill I should like to have considered. Many similar bills have been passed since, and I should like to have that bill of mine fairly considered.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman might call it up under suspension of the rules.

Mr. SNELL. I will not ask that it be taken up under suspension of the rules.

Mr. BYRNS. At the present time the House is considerably ahead of the Senate in the matter of legislation. Of course, the Senate has the tax bill under consideration. It will have the tariff bill and possibly some other legislation. I am not saying that there will not be other legislation to come before the House which the committees have not reported; but I do think that we should get through with these bills, and then, as the gentleman from New York suggests, we may have an opportunity of considering the Private Calendar under the regular rules of the House. Then the gentleman from New York will have his day in court.

Mr. SNELL. I shall not object to the gentleman's request.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, why could we not have an understanding that we will consider say 25 bills on the Private Calendar and then adjourn?

Mr. BYRNS. I shall be very happy if we could consider that many.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Why not have it understood that we will adjourn at a certain hour? There is no telling how long it may take to consider a certain number of bills, I may say to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TRUAX. That suits me.

Mr. BYRNS. I think we can arrange it satisfactorily without any objection on either side of the Chamber.

Mr. Speaker, I renew my request that after disposition of business on the Speaker's table tomorrow and following such special orders as may be pending before the House that we proceed with the call of the Private Calendar and consider bills unobjected to, beginning where we left off this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk tomorrow I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand it, we are to consider the Private Calendar tomorrow following a 30-minute address by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON]?

Mr. BYRNS. That is true.

Mr. TRUAX. Then we are to have a 15-minute address by the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes; if the request is granted.

Mr. TRUAX. Can we not consider a certain number of bills tomorrow?

Mr. BYRNS. No; but we will adjourn at a time satisfactory to the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object to any more unanimous-consent requests at this time.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I have not taken up much of the time of the House, and this is a very important question.

Mr. TABER. Things have happened today indicating a disposition on the part of the majority to prevent the truth coming out.

Mr. BYRNS. The truth is what we want.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. TABER. I object, Mr. Speaker.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 163. An act for the relief of Capt. Guy M. Kinman;

S. 3022. An act to amend sections 3 and 4 of an act of Congress entitled "An act for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska", approved June 26, 1906, as amended by the act of Congress approved June 6, 1924, and for other purposes; and

S. 3209. An act limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in the case of United States of America against Weirton Steel Co., and other cases.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 43 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, April 13, 1934, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WALTER: A bill (H.R. 9087) to authorize the conveyance of certain Government land to the borough of Stroudsburg, Monroe County, Pa., for street purposes and as part of the approach to the Stroudsburg viaduct on State Highway Route No. 498; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PROPOSED SUGAR LEGISLATION

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, without reflecting in any respect on any Member of the Senate or on the Finance Committee, which is carefully considering the subject, and solely for the information of the Senate as to the urgent need for the promptest possible action, I ask to have read at the desk, placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and appropriately referred a telegram dealing with the administration's sugar bill, received from an authoritative spokesman for the beet growers of the Intermountain West.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Finance and read, as follows:

GREELEY, COLO., April 12, 1934.

Hon. EDWARD P. COSTIGAN,
Senate Chamber:

Mass meeting of estimated 1,100 beet farmers at Greeley, Colo., April 11, appeals to Members of both branches Congress to rush passage Jones-Costigan bill, as beet-planting season is rapidly passing. Great Western sugar-beet contract now offered has been rejected because contract contains provision giving company right and option to nullify it if Secretary of Agriculture or competent Government official or tribunal does not sanction company contract by public notification on or before August 1. Beet growers, labor, and business are suffering from delay.

J. D. PANCAKE,
Secretary of Mass Meeting and Mountain States Beet Growers' Marketing Association.

AMENDMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS BILL

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I present and ask that there be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a petition and communications from very distinguished religious organizations of New York in relation to a proposed amendment to the communications commission bill.

There being no objection, the communications and petition were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, without the signatures on the petition, as follows:

ST. IGNATIUS COUNCIL, No. 362,
KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS,
New York, April 11, 1934.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: The following resolution adopted by our council is sent to you for your kind consideration. It reads as follows:

"Resolved, That we the members of St. Ignatius Council, No. 362, Knights of Columbus, of the city of New York, State of New York, call upon our Senators and Representatives in Congress to support the amendment to section 301 of Senate bill 2910, providing for the insurance of equity of opportunity for educational, religious, agricultural, labor, cooperative, and similar non-profit-making associations seeking licenses for radio broadcasting by incorporating into the statute a provision for the allotment to said non-profit-making associations of at least 25 percent of all radio facilities not employed in public use; and further

"Resolved, That we place ourselves on record as approving the valiant struggle of the non-profit-making associations conducting radio stations to preserve their ideals of serving in the public interest."

The foregoing resolution was adopted by the unanimous vote of the members of St. Ignatius Council, No. 362, Knights of Columbus, of the city of New York, State of New York, having a membership of over 200, on the 6th day of April 1934.

We hope that you will give your support to the amendment, and any effort on your part in its favor will be greatly appreciated.

Closing with best wishes for your personal health and welfare,

I am respectfully yours,

PHILIP C. HENNESSY,
Grand Knight.

APRIL 10, 1934.

HONORABLE DEAR SIR: This is an appeal on behalf of Radio Station WLWL of New York City, the only Catholic broadcasting outlet in the entire northeast section of the United States.

For the past several years WLWL has courageously struggled against many of the obstacles and handicaps so that this station could continue, and that the work which is being done by the Catholic Church in one of the principal Catholic centers will not be jeopardized or completely wiped off the air.

Since 1927 WLWL has been discriminated against unjustly. Once a station with unlimited time, it is now reduced to 15½ hours a week. Columbia Broadcasting has profited by the curtailment of WLWL's time, contrary to the regulations of the Federal Radio Commission.

The efforts to obtain WLWL's just rights from the Federal Radio Commission up to the present have been unsuccessful. Columbia Broadcasting holds the wave length on which WLWL has only 15½ hours and refuses to give it up; its attitude is clearly expressed in a letter received by WLWL from Mr. Edward Klauber dated March 7, 1934, in part, as follows:

"Let me say once more, in order that our position may be entirely clear, that we do not feel that we can conscientiously or with due regard to our own interests or those of our audience surrender any of this wave length to you, nor do we know that the Commission would allow you to have it, even if we were willing."

Educational and religious radio stations that are striving to render real service for educational and moral life of their listeners are given but a few hours and are thereby sacrificed for unnecessary and commercial programs.

The Radio Commission has consistently discriminated against educational agencies in the allotment of broadcasting facilities, though the development and extension of education is a deep-rooted policy of our people.

I would request that you carefully consider the amendments as follows: Section 301–A, 301–B, and 301–C, and use your best endeavors to support these bills. By so doing you will aid the cause of moral, educational, and religious progress in our country, whose proudest boast is its devotion to the cause of education.

With due appreciation of your loyal support to the amendments sections 301–A, 301–B, and 301–C, I am,

Yours very truly,

CATHOLIC WOMEN'S UNION OF NEW YORK STATE,
MARY FILSER LOHR, President.

MARCH 31, 1934.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR WAGNER: May I ask your support for the amendment to Senate bill 2910, section 301, presented on March 15, 1934, by Station WLWL of New York, N.Y.?

I believe the amendment is a fair and just one and in line with the best principles of our democratic government. It will help to preserve the rights of the radio stations devoted to important and necessary public work, such as Station WLWL, in which I am particularly interested.

Very truly yours,

——— ———.

Mr. GORE, from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, to which was referred the bill (S. 3247) for the relief of the Playa de Flor Land & Improvement Co., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 724) thereon.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 2899) establishing certain commodity divisions in the Department of Agriculture, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 725) thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on today, April 13, 1934, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 163. An act for the relief of Capt. Guy M. Kinman;

S. 3022. An act to amend sections 3 and 4 of an act of Congress entitled "An act for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska, approved June 26, 1906, as amended by act of Congress approved June 6, 1924, and for other purposes; and

S. 3209. An act limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in the case of the United States of America against Weirton Steel Co. and other cases.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A bill (S. 3360) making receivers, liquidators, referees, trustees, or other officers, or agents, appointed by any court of the United States and authorized to conduct any business, or conducting any business, subject to taxes levied by any State the same as if such business were conducted by private individuals or corporations; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3361) for the relief of Nancy Catherine McBride; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 3362) for the relief of Horace G. Wilson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BARBOUR:

A bill (S. 3363) for the relief of the George A. Fuller Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BYRNES:

A bill (S. 3364) for the relief of G. T. Fleming;

A bill (S. 3365) for the relief of C. J. Holliday;

A bill (S. 3366) for the relief of C. O. Meyer; and

A bill (S. 3367) for the relief of J. B. Trotter; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 3368) to authorize contribution of Federal funds to aid the State of New York in the improvement of a section of the Erie Canal (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. 3369) to repeal section 389 of the United States Code, being section 239 of the United States Criminal Code (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COPELAND, Mr. VANDENBERG, and Mr. MURPHY:

A bill (S. 3370) granting the consent of Congress to any two or more States to enter into agreements or compacts for cooperative effort and mutual assistance in the prevention of crime, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SCHALL:

A bill (S. 3371) to provide for the advancement on the retired list of the Army of John A. Lundeen, a colonel, United States Army, retired; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GLASS (for Mr. TYDINGS):

A bill (S. 3372) for the relief of John L. Alcock; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3373) granting an increase of pension to Fannie B. Kinsella (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GIBSON:

A bill (S. 3374) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Lake Champlain from East Alburg, Vt., to West Swanton, Vt.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. ADAMS:

A bill (S. 3375) to provide for the distribution of power revenues on Federal reclamation projects, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

By Mr. BARBOUR:

A bill (S. 3376) to amend the provision in the act approved March 3, 1931, governing the computation of commissioned service of Naval Academy graduates who have been retired for age or service ineligibility for promotion; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. STEIWER:

A bill (S. 3377) for the relief of the Coast Fir & Cedar Products Co., Inc.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HAYDEN:

A bill (S. 3378) granting a pension to Lewis G. Simpson; and

A bill (S. 3379) granting an increase of pension to Lorenzo D. Walters; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WALSH (for Mr. TRAMMELL):

A bill (S. 3380) providing for the appointment of Richmond Pearson Hobson, formerly a captain in the United States Navy, as a rear admiral in the Navy, and his retirement in that grade; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 3381) authorizing the Secretary of War to lend certain Army equipment to the city of Price, Utah, for the accommodation of persons attending the interstate musical contest to be held at such city during the year 1934; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS

Mr. McGILL submitted the following resolution (S.Res. 222), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized during the Seventy-third Congress to send for persons, books and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

AMERICA MUST CHOOSE—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BANKHEAD

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I tender at this point the radio speech of the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], made last night, upon a current problem which is now before the Senate. I ask that it be included in the RECORD at the appropriate place.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I shall discuss the subject "America Must Choose" from the standpoint of agriculture.

What interest have the producers of cotton, wheat, corn and hogs, tobacco, rice, and fruits in foreign trade? The distance of foreign markets from our inland farms is so great that it is difficult for our farmers to actually and vividly observe the movement of their export crops as they flow into the channels of commerce. The average farmer carries his commodity to his local market and sells to the local buyer. He may note the train or truck moving it, as it starts to a destination unknown to him. He knows that people somewhere will consume it. He does not ordinarily give any thought to the location of the people who will ultimately buy and consume the products of his year's labor. He does not concern himself with investigating how many bales of cotton and bushels of wheat and pounds of tobacco are consumed in the United States. He does not figure how much will be left, without a market in our country, and where the excess will find buyers for consumption. He does not picture the cargoes of his farm commodities as they move out into the oceans, carrying to the peoples of foreign countries farm surpluses in excess of American consumption.

When I say he does not concern himself with the things I have pointed out, I mean that he did not do so, and had no reason to do so, until very recent years. Domestic and foreign consumers supplied markets for his crops.

In 1930 surpluses began to pile up and prices started down. Something had happened in the market places, remote from the farms. Whatever had taken place was bearing down heavily upon basic agriculture.

Our farmers worked as hard as before. They continued to produce the material that feeds and clothes all of our people, but month after month for 3 long years the farmers got closer and closer to the call of the sheriff—once! twice! three times! sold!! as their farms went under tax and mortgage foreclosures.

In 1930 the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill was passed. Tariff tax rates were added to the Fordney-McCumber bill, which levied the highest tariff taxes in the history of our country prior to that time. The old formula of protection was abandoned, new and excessive taxes were added, not for mere protection, not for the benefit of workers in industry, because none of the new taxes were added to workers' pay rolls. The new rates had the following effects:

First. They put into effect a practical embargo on many items formerly imported here in exchange for some of our exports.

Second. For a short time the new tariff rates increased the profits of protected industry. That was the purpose of the law. It did not continue effective because it killed the goose that laid the golden egg.

Third. It started a world-wide tariff war which has continued to increase in volume and ferocity to this good day.

Instead of commerce moving in the normal stream of international trade we are now confronted, wherever we turn, with high-tariff barriers, with quotas and embargoes.

Other countries vigorously protested against the passage of the Smoot-Hawley bill. More than 1,000 leading economists of all political faiths presented a joint statement, warning us with what we now know was prophetic wisdom, of the dire results which would follow the passage of that bill.

The nations of the world are now engaged in trade warfare with each other, and especially with the United States. Foreign countries are not fighting the commerce war by assembling their legislative bodies on the field of battle, and with calm and dignity, and after months of weary debates, formulating tariff laws with thousands of separate specific tariff rates.

All of the important trade countries have intrusted to their executives—their generals in command—the plenary power to deal with international commerce. Reciprocal trade agreements of mutual advantage to the contracting countries are being made in various parts of the world. The United States stands out alone. Our President has no power to make trade agreements with other nations. When he is given that power, we will be in position to take a brick here and there from the top of our tariff walls, for specific imports from countries entering into reciprocal trade agreements with us, and at the same time we will find a way through the tariff walls of such countries for products of industry and agriculture produced in this country.

When we examine the loss of foreign markets for our principal agricultural products, we can better realize why surpluses have piled up and prices have gone down.

In 1928 the grand total of the value of exports of principal agricultural products was $1,863,100,000. The most important items were cotton, wheat, lard, tobacco, rice, and fruits.

In 1932 the total value of agricultural exports dropped to $662,300,000. More than $1,200,000,000 lost to the farmers of the United States in 1 year, and the same amount lost to the capital assets of our country. The loss was, in fact, much more to our farmers.

The backing-up on the farms and the local markets of the huge quantities of farm products, previously sold in foreign markets, brought about a reduction of about 66⅔ percent in the price of the entire crops of most of the export agricultural commodities. Wheat and flour have almost disappeared from the list of exports.

In 1928 we exported bread grains valued at $214,500,000. In 1933 the total value of bread grains exported was only $19,500,000, a shrinkage of $195,000,000.

Cotton decreased from $920,000,000 to $398,000,000, a shrinkage of $522,000,000.

In 1928 our total exports were valued at $5,128,000,000. The total value in 1932 was only $1,611,000,000.

Our imports during the same period decreased from $4,000,000,000 to $1,300,000,000 in round figures.

Our tariff walls kept out imports. New tariff barriers abroad stopped our exports. Foreign countries could not continue to buy our products, when they could not pay by selling us their products. The balance of trade in our favor had brought to us more than one third of all the gold in the world. The United States and France and England hold more than half the gold money stocks of the world. The other large trading countries do not have gold enough to properly support their currencies. They cannot continue to ship gold to us to pay for our products. They can buy from other countries and pay with exchange of goods. They cannot deal with us on that basis. Our tariff laws prevent it. We have no agency with legal authority to negotiate trade agreements. It is highly important for the whole country, and especially for agriculture, that a way shall be provided for reopening foreign markets for our surplus farm production.

Theoretical economists who never produced any wealth, who are merely brain workers, loudly protest against any suggestion looking to less production by farmers although they admit it means more money for the farmers. Many of the same objectors favor a 6-hour day for industrial workers, thereby reducing the production of industrial commodities. The same objectors in large numbers favor the tariff policy which has so greatly reduced the markets for farm products. They ignore the fact that industry cannot succeed without purchasing power by the millions of our people engaged in agriculture.

Until normal consumption has been restored, the farmers owe it to themselves and their families to adjust their production to the effective demands of the limited markets. By doing so they can get as much money for the smaller crops as they got for full crops before their markets were taken from them.

The people who protest against the reduction of farm crops make no objection when industry closes plants and discharges employees as a result of decreased buying power for industrial commodities. What answer would these absentee farm economists make if it should be proposed that farm implement and fertilizer factories should continue to produce at full capacity, and sell their products to the farmers at whatever price they could get for them? They would promptly announce that any management which followed such a course should be removed. It has never occurred to them that it is just as destructive to the farmer's financial affairs to use his full farm plant and manpower to produce and sell below cost of production as it would be for manufacturers to follow that plan.

To adjust the supply to the effective demands of the market is recognized as good business management in industry. But it is insisted that the farmer should toil 14 hours a day, produce all he can, and sell it for what it will bring, regardless of the financial loss to the farmer. I have no sort of patience with men who reason that way.

What would happen to the cotton industry in this country if we had no foreign markets? Our average production is around 15,000,000 bales a year. We consume in this country about 6,000,000 bales. We must look to foreign markets for approximately 60 percent of our cotton crop. The importance of cotton in the economic life of our country is not generally understood. Cotton constitutes nearly 25 percent in value of all of our exports.

Total exports of the United States from 1791 to 1933 amounted to $150,000,000,000. In this period the excess of merchandise exports over merchandise imports amounted to $36,600,000,000.

In the same period exports of unmanufactured cotton amounted to $30,000,000,000. From 1826 to 1933, inclusive, all exported cotton manufactured goods were valued at $3,750,895,000.

Without cotton our balance of trade and the increase of our national wealth from foreign trade for 142 years would be only $2,850,000,000.

Cotton has furnished 92 percent of the total amount constituting our balance of trade since the establishment of our Government. Very little cotton is produced anywhere in the world, except the long-staple Egyptian cotton, which compares favorably with our grade and staple of cotton. People throughout the civilized world need and want our cotton. They bought the usual quantity in 1919, when the price was 36 cents a pound. They will continue to buy it at a fair price if they can pay in goods. They cannot continue indefinitely paying in gold. We are near the end of securing the payment of the balances of trade in gold. We cannot renew and expand our foreign trade on the basis of paying in gold.

By granting power to our President to make trade agreements we will be adopting the same formula that is now being successfully executed by the other nations of the world. Increase in foreign trade will result and without injury to any industry in this country which produces in substantial quantity.

Agricultural producers in this country will be the most direct beneficiaries as a result of enlarged foreign trade.

When normal consumption for farm products is reestablished, farmers will gladly return to normal production. Until that time arrives, wise farmers know that they should protect their own household by adjusting the supply to the reduced trade demands.

THE FARMER-LABOR PARTY OF MINNESOTA—ADDRESS BY STATE SENATOR ROCKNE

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask leave to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a radio speech delivered by State Senator Rockne, of Minnesota, on Thursday, April 5, about the recent Farmer-Labor convention held in St. Paul, and the platform it adopted.

Senator Rockne has well stated the issues in Minnesota in a courageous manner, and deserves credit, not only up there, but in the entire country. We are just being treated to an exposé of the thoughts and plans of the "brain trust"; and Governor Olson, who is responsible for the platform, was the local representative of the Democratic national administration on the N.R.A., and then resigned to take charge of the C.W.A. for my State.

Last Tuesday Dr. Wirt, in his testimony, referred to a conversation in which some high official here in Washington stated that the quickest way to advance the cause of a planned economy was to shut off food for the hungry; that that would agitate the people into action and violence quickly.

Not only Minnesota, but the whole country, may be interested to know whether the "brain trust" had a hand in drafting this platform to test public opinion and whether the recent demonstrations of violence in Minneapolis, inspired by Communists, is not part of this revolutionary philosophy, both on the part of the "brain trust" and of the Governor when he says:

Now, I am frank to say that I am not a liberal * * * I am what I want to be—I am a radical.

I ask unanimous consent that the address of State Senator Rockne be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SPEECH OF SENATOR ROCKNE

For the second time in their history as a State, the people of Minnesota are called upon to make a momentous decision.

In 1860 our forefathers were required to say whether the State of Minnesota, though far from the region of slavery, should be loyal to the Union and send troops to defend it.

Their answer is written in the blood of the men who were later thrown into the breach at Gettysburg to successfully stem the charge of Pickett's brigade.

No law that the Minnesota Legislature has passed since that time has altered or materially changed the course of the people. The decision to stand by Abraham Lincoln, however, was of such importance that its influence still lives in every citizen of the Commonwealth.

Today the people of Minnesota—the sons and daughters, the grandsons and granddaughters of the men who, nearly three quarters of a century ago, went to the defense of the Union—must decide whether they will permit, through confiscation and taxation, the destruction of the State of their fathers and grandfathers.

It is the second big moment in the history of Minnesota. I am confident that we will acquit ourselves as gloriously as did the men and women who met the issue in 1860.

Millions of men and women throughout the Nation were stunned a few days ago as the leaders of the Farmer-Labor Party, and later a majority of the delegates to the State convention in St. Paul, committed themselves to a program of socializing the State through the medium of taxation—to the overthrowing of the Government of the United States—to the abolishment of private ownership of property referred to as "capitalism" or "the system", and finally as they launched a campaign to attain the objects of their platform by setting class against class.

I want it clearly understood that my remarks do not apply to the rank and file of the Farmer-Labor Party.

I have reference to a small group of willful leaders who first came into prominence with the organization of the Nonpartisan League in North Dakota, the membership of which, as you know, was almost exclusively among farmers. This group was instrumental in doing untold damage to the faith and credit of North Dakota by promoting the same program they now propose for Minnesota. When they failed in North Dakota, they moved into this State and formed a union between the farmers and the city laborers and called that union the Farmer-Labor Party. Gradually they have eliminated the farmer except as he is useful in helping them politically, until today we find that they have stolen the organization which is the Farmer-Labor Party in name only, and have turned it over to the Socialist-Communist element consisting for the most part of city radicals.

It is to these few men who exploited North Dakota and who now desire to exploit Minnesota and its people that I refer throughout this period of broadcast. Nothing that I say is to be construed as a criticism of the thousands of men and women who have honestly subscribed to the original principles of the Farmer-Labor Party, but who now find their party betrayed into the hands of the Socialists and Communists by a clique of promoters.

After many years of preliminary work these men are today ready to turn Minnesota into a laboratory for political experiment, and they have thus given the people of the State an opportunity to eliminate them forever as political factors. I know the people will not fail.

I have paid for this opportunity to address the citizens of Minnesota for several reasons:

The first is my conviction that the Farmer-Labor program puts every home and every farm in Minnesota in jeopardy, and I would feel negligent in my duty if I did not raise my voice in protest.

The second is that Governor Olson last winter announced his intention to invade my district and personally oppose my return to the State senate, for which I am again a candidate and for no other office, and I am taking this means of accepting his challenge and his choice of weapons—the Farmer-Labor platform.

The third reason is that the Republican county conventions and the Democratic organizations which will soon be in session should be in no doubt or disagreement as to the issue of the day, and I am addressing my remarks to them as the only going political organizations that will oppose this iniquitous Farmer-Labor program.

I cannot too strongly urge them to make proper and careful endorsements of candidates to the State legislature and to never lose sight of the fact that every legislative candidate who carries the Farmer-Labor endorsement is committed to the party program. Repudiate it as some of them undoubtedly will, they cannot escape the obligation imposed on them by the Farmer-Labor Party to accept the program in full without reservation in return for an endorsement by the organization. The Farmer-Labor platform, adopted in St. Paul last week, will be the platform on which will stand the Farmer-Labor candidates to the legislature. Make no mistake about that.

In the coming campaign there will be just one issue, and there will be just two sides to that issue.

Either we will favor the confiscation of private business property by the State government, thereafter to be managed by politicians, or we will not.

Either we will favor the destruction of individual rights or we will fight to preserve them.

We will be in favor of destroying all that men have saved, be it much or little, or we will oppose it.

Either we will favor academic freedom in the broadest and most liberal sense of the phrase, or we will resist insidious influences in the education of our young people.

We will be for the Constitution, or we will be against it.

There can be no halfway, no in-between ground in this fight.

There can be no idle hands in a campaign which is to determine whether Minnesota shall be industrially and individually free, or governmentally controlled—whether it is to secede, as it were, from the Union and exist as a mongrel among State governments.

In order that there can be no doubt as to the design and purpose of the Farmer-Labor Party leaders, I shall read a few words from the platform adopted at the convention. I quote:

"We demand public ownership of all mines, water power, transportation, and communication, banks, packing plants, factories, and all public utilities. Provided, that this shall not apply to bona fide cooperative owned and operated enterprises."

Here, then, is the first and major objective of the Farmer-Labor Party which will become effective as soon as it has taken over complete control of the State government, including the legislature. Succeeding in this, the Farmer-Labor Party proposes to set up a form of society in Minnesota so contrary to the purpose of the Constitution, so different in fundamental principles, that the individual will thereafter count for nothing, and the State for everything.

In support of this statement may I quote from a recent editorial which appeared in the Minneapolis Tribune. Referring to this new socialized state, the editor of the Tribune said:

"It does not mean taking money away from the rich and giving it to the poor; it doesn't mean giving every man a day's work and every farmer a fair price for his product. It means that every working man, every capitalist, and every farmer becomes simply an ant in the hill or a bee in the hive."

What a gloomy prospect!

The people of Minnesota should understand thoroughly what it is the Farmer-Labor Party proposes to do.

It proposes to take over all the machines of production—all the power companies, telephone companies, street-car lines, railroads, bus lines, packing plants, and ore mines. It proposes moreover, to have its own bank and its own general-insurance business.

How is this to be done? By armed force? Or is it to be done by purchase? Is the constitution which provides how the State shall acquire private property to be upheld or is it to be scrapped?

If all these private enterprises are to be acquired through the peaceful and lawful means of purchases, where is the money to come from?

The State owned and operated enterprises will pay no taxes. Government expenses will be greater because there will be operating losses to pay and emergencies to meet, to say nothing of bigger pay rolls, and all of this must and will come out of the farmer, the home owner, the small-town business, the professional men and women, the salaried workers who may be employed by the few private enterprises the State does not absorb.

You will be told that there will be no operating losses—nothing but profits. Write to your friends in North Dakota and find out from them the results in that State with this same bunch managing the various State activities. Before I finish this broadcast, I will tell you what they were.

The Farmer-Labor Party makes a direct appeal for votes when it provides that public ownership shall not apply to bona fide cooperatively owned and operated enterprises.

Will someone please explain to me the difference between a cooperatively owned enterprise and an enterprise owned by 100 shareholders?

The Farmer-Labor leaders make another direct appeal for support from the farmers of Minnesota when they declare, by implication, that public ownership will not apply to the farms.

How well they know that the farmer is and always has been, by reason of his very choice of occupations, the greatest individualist in the entire classification of society.

In the great Russian experiment the government first seized the industrial machinery—the machines of production. Then came the seizure of the productive as well as the undeveloped land. Such a plan is of necessity a part of the socialization theory. Control of the product of the machine and of the man power cannot be achieved without equal and complete control of the means of producing food.

Where would the socialized industrial state find itself with productive lands in private hands?

Such a combination is impossible under the Marxian theory of government. Nor have the farm and its owner escaped socialization in any of the great experiments.

The farmer of Minnesota, as in other countries, will be used where and when and how the State dictates.

My friends, do not be lulled into sleep by the splendid oratory of the Farmer-Labor Party leaders who will smile engagingly and assure you that no such violence is contemplated.

Let me say to you that no longer than 2 days ago none other than the manager of the Farmer-Labor Party—himself a public servant—was present at a meeting in Big Stone County where he was engaged in arousing the farmers of western Minnesota to a deeper sense of hatred for what he spoke of as "the system."

He heaped abuse upon the newspapers, upon all the business institutions of the State; and when he felt that he had the farmers sufficiently aroused, he urged them to close their ears and their minds to argument and reason and to fight for the Farmer-Labor socialistic program regardless of its consequences.

Now, there must be something wrong with any program that cannot submit to the fullest public discussion. Any policy as broad and far-reaching as that which the Farmer-Labor Party proposes, should, in my judgment, be subjected to the most careful study, and it should be the topic of the widest possible debate.

And yet, here comes the manager of the Farmer-Labor Party to urge the farmers, who are so vitally affected, not to reason, not to read, not to think, not to listen or discuss the plan with anyone who opposes it.

They do not want the farmer to realize that with labor in control of the machines of production, labor will fix not only its own rate of pay, but the price of goods to the farm, and the farmer will pay it, because in the eyes of the socialized state which they claim to favor, the farmer will still be a capitalist.

They do not want the farmer to realize that as the means of production become more and more socialized, the Government pay roll will become more and more topheavy until we reach a stage where a majority of the people of the country are paid from public funds, and when that time comes, what will happen to the minority, to the farmer, and the home owner? That is what they do not want the farmer to think about. That is why the Farmer-Labor Party leaders are urging the farmers to shut their ears and their minds to argument and to reason.

It is the Farmer-Labor way of warning the people its program is going to be exposed. The Farmer-Labor Party leaders know very well that it should be and will be exposed and by this method they hope to minimize the damaging effect of these disclosures.

To anyone who may console himself with the belief that this is just a gesture—just a program to attract votes—a plan which the Farmer-Labor Party does not really mean to enforce, let me say that the Farmer-Labor Party leaders were never more serious in their lives. They believe this is their day.

They are so bent on enforcing their will that they have a committee of five appointed by the executive committee of the party (I quote from the convention proceedings) "to see that the legislators who are weak in their votes and strong in their protestations are called to account", and that "the party owes it to the State that when a man is put up and the Farmer-Labor label placed over him, he carries on."

Is there any comfort in these statements for the farm owner, the home-owner, the small business proprietor, the professional man, the mother, the clergyman, who may feel that no group would seriously attempt to overthrow the government?

Why, my friends, the Farmer-Labor platform is so radical and so revolutionary that some of the party's most loyal members cannot subscribe to it. I have before me the statement of one of the party members from Winona County—a leader in the legislature, a representative of railroad labor, a member of the shopcrafts organization—who said—I quote: "I am a liberal, but a conservative one. In fact the Winona County delegation thought the party platform adopted too radical and did not support it."

This party leader says the platform was too radical for his delegation, but it is not too radical for the Governor. Governor Olson says he is not a liberal, but a radical, and the program which is proving too much for some of his followers, is none too radical for his blood.

This breaking-away on the part of the Winona County delegation is clearly an indication that the rank and file of the party is beginning to desert the leadership of the willful few. It is evidence that within the Farmer-Labor membership there is strong opposition to the Socialist-Communist program of the convention.

Permit me to quote briefly from the Governor's published speech before the convention. He said: "Now, I am frank to say that I am not a liberal. I enjoy working on a common basis with liberals for their platforms, etc., but I am not a liberal. I am what I want to be—I am a radical. I am a radical in the sense that I want a definite change in the system."

Those who have followed the Governor in the last two campaigns, believing him to be a liberal, now find him to be a self-advertised radical. They find that his program is not the program of Jefferson, of Jackson, of Wilson, or of Franklin Roosevelt; not the program of Washington, of Lincoln, or of Theodore Roosevelt; but of Karl Marx, of Debs, of Haywood, of William Z. Foster.

The Governor has thus announced himself in complete accord with the Farmer-Labor program. It is, as a matter of fact, the Governor's program, because he is the party. Therefore any disposition on his part to pretend that the program is subject to modification or to milder interpretations should be regarded as just an adroit guard which he throws up to ward off the blows of those who do not agree with him.

This is Governor Olson's program. He inspired it, and he has dictated its terms. He will rise or fall on it. The actual writing of it he left to Julius F. Emme and other Communists, but it is the Governor's child, and no amount of oratory or side-stepping can distort its likeness to make it resemble anyone else.

I have previously referred to the group of willful leaders who are standing at the Governor's right hand—the small group of individuals who attempted the same radical program in North Dakota.

Who are these men?

Henry Teigan, a member of the State senate, an employee of the banking department, who was general secretary of the Non-Partisan League in North Dakota for 7 years. He was secretary also of the Socialist Party of North Dakota for 10 years prior to the organization of the league.

George Wallace, member of the Minnesota State Tax Commission, who was tax commissioner of North Dakota from 1912 to 1922.

Vince Day, secretary to Governor Olson, who wrote the famous House bill No. 44, the constitutional measure by which North Dakota was put into business. Mr. Day was legal adviser to the league in North Dakota.

George Griffith, chief oil inspector of Minnesota, who was North Dakota State manager of the Non-Partisan League for several years.

William Anderson, at present employed by the Minnesota Tax Commission, who was industrial commissioner of North Dakota during the days of the league.

I pause at this point to call to your attention the interesting fact that Mrs. Arthur Le Sueur, of Minneapolis, who was recently appointed by Governor Olson to the State board of education, has been a Socialist-Communist writer for many years under the name of Marian Wharton. She was at one time principal of the People's College, of which Eugene V. Debs was chancellor, where they developed Communist lecturers and writers. Mrs. Le Sueur was in charge of the speakers' bureau of the National Non-Partisan League and was active in the Minnesota Non-Partisan League campaign in 1918.

Here is the damage that has been wrought in North Dakota:

After approximately 12 years devoted to recovery from the experiments, the people of North Dakota are still more than $10,000,000 in the red, not counting rural credits, home builders' association, highway, and other cash funds diverted. The grand total, I am confident, would be several times this amount.

You may judge from this what the damage will be in Minnesota under the same brand of management.

We have known for many years that the underlying motive of the Farmer-Labor Party was socialistic, but the party would never admit it. Now the party is out in the open. The Governor has spoken, and the program is before us. Carried to its one and inevitable conclusion, it will destroy not only all human rights, but all property rights upon which human rights have rested for nearly 3 centuries.

This country was founded upon the human right to own property, to possess homes, to own factories, and to carry out enterprises all for the benefit and advancement of human rights. Our forefathers enacted the copyright laws, the patent right laws, the homestead laws, the transportation laws, and all these great agencies which have been the inducement to bring to America people from over all the world.

Particularly has this been true of the Scandinavian, the German, the Irish, and the French races. Here they have been permitted to worship their God and educate their children as they saw fit. When enterprises became too large to be carried on by individual effort or capital, we permitted the partnership and the corporation to be formed, where the thrifty and the energetic put their individual savings together for the common purpose of developing transportation, industries, conveniences—all in the interests and for the benefit of humanity.

We have encouraged these agencies in the past by permitting individuals to join with other individuals in putting their savings into one organization until today the ownership of these enterprises is vested in millions of our own people.

For thousands of years civilization made slow and painful progress away from the absolute power of the state—away from the cruelty of the mailed fist that took away the human rights about which the Governor speaks so feelingly—and only within the past 150 years has civilization been successful to any marked degree.

Within that period the individualists of all lands, the hewers of wood, the herders of geese, have found in America a haven. Under the Government of America they have found the opportunity to exercise their initiative and their enterprise. It is now proposed that we burn the pages of history and that we fall in behind the dreamers and the carpet baggers who will return us to the state whence we came.

Within the past century, in the wake of the German revolution of 1848, thousands of Germans, including the immortal Carl Schurz, came to this country—to this Northwest—here to make history, here to find the right to live their individual lives, and to escape the power of the state.

Shall we turn back the hands of the clock and return to the evils from which our ancestors escaped at so great a cost?

In closing, may I leave this word with the thoughtful people of the State—draft and elect candidates to the legislature who will represent your opinion, not the opinion of a few men who are ready to scrap the past and gamble with the future.

The fight is on. We are not unmindful of the responsibility, but we welcome the opportunity to meet the issue.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 2315) to provide for the settlement of damage claims arising from the construction of the Petrolia-Fort Worth gas pipe line.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1076) authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Franklin Surety Co., with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 190. An act for the relief of Elizabeth T. Cloud;
H.R. 200. An act for the relief of Jacob Durrenberger;
H.R. 210. An act for the relief of Anne B. Slocum;
H.R. 878. An act for the relief of Kathryn Thurston;
H.R. 1402. An act for the relief of James E. Dethlefsen;
H.R. 1870. An act for the relief of Corinne Blackburn Gale;
H.R. 1933. An act for the relief of Philip F. Hambsch;
H.R. 2038. An act for the relief of Jeanie G. Lyles;
H.R. 2203. An act for the relief of Enoch Graf;
H.R. 2322. An act for the relief of C. K. Morris;
H.R. 2339. An act for the relief of Karim Joseph Mery;
H.R. 2431. An act for the relief of certain newspapers for advertising services rendered the Public Health Service of the Treasury Department;
H.R. 2438. An act for the relief of Ruby F. Voiles;
H.R. 2666. An act for the relief of D. F. Phillips;

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment with reference to the tax on sales of produce for future delivery disposed of. I understand that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] wishes to discuss it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 237, after line 11, it is proposed by the committee to insert the following amendment:

SEC. 611. Stamp tax on sales of produce for future delivery: (a) Effective on the day following the enactment of this act subdivision 4 of schedule A of title VIII of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, is amended by striking out "5 cents" wherever appearing in such subdivision, and inserting in lieu thereof "1 cent".
(b) Section 726 (c) of the Revenue Act of 1932 is repealed.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, in the revenue act passed a little over a year ago there was a tax of 5 cents per $100 applied on futures trading. A similar provision was in the pending bill as it passed the House, but the Senate Committee on Finance has proposed to strike out the provision. That is the committee amendment which is pending before the Senate at this time.

I wish to comment just briefly on the statement made before the Finance Committee by a representative of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, Mr. Paul J. Christian. He said:

We wish especially to point out, Mr. Chairman, that increasing this tax from 1 cent to 5 cents has practically driven the small speculator out of the cotton market and has left the trading that is done on the futures exchange dealing in cotton almost entirely to the mill trade.

A little further on he placed in the record at the committee hearings a statement of the amount of cotton produced for several given years and also the volume of futures traded in on the cotton market. The 5-cent tax did not go into effect until the 21st of June 1932, so the figures he gave for 1931 and 1932 were applicable before the 5-cent tax went into effect, and came under the tax of 1 cent per $100 on futures trading. The total crop of cotton produced in 1931–32 was a little over 17,000,000 bales, and the average price according to these figures was 5.89 cents per pound. The volume of futures trading was 67,489,620 bales. The 5 cents per $100 tax went into effect on the 21st of June 1932.

The figures for the next year, 1932–33, under the 5-cent tax, dropped to 13,000,000 bales produced, the average price being 7.15 cents, and the number of bales bought and sold on the market was 76,562,000. The year before under the 1-cent tax there were only 67,000,000 bales sold and under the 5-cent tax there were 76,000,000 bales sold, an increase of 9,000,000 bales. The representative of the cotton exchange of New Orleans to whom I have referred, said that the little speculators were being driven off the market and they did not have a good market because of that fact. The fact remains that the average price went up from 5.89 cents to 7.15 cents, and the trading on the cotton exchange increased by 9,000,000 bales. His statement would seem to be rather inconsistent.

I do not care to give other figures, but I want to quote a little further from his statement. He went on to say that the tax accomplishes the very effect it was not intended to have. The total income from the 5-cent-revenue tax for the last year, 1933, was $4,206,597.74. If there had been the same amount of trading under the 1-cent tax there would have been an increased amount returned, and that increase would have amounted to $3,365,278. That is a mere bagatelle, I admit, and probably not worth quarreling about when we are endeavoring to raise revenue for the Government. A little over $3,000,000 is hardly worth discussing. The committee informs us that the bill as reported by the committee will raise all the revenue that is needed for the Government for the next fiscal year, enough to pay the interest on loans and all that, and that we will have a little to spare, and that no more money is needed. I am not going to insist that the committee amendment be rejected for that reason, but I do want to make a few statements in regard to it.

This representative of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange submitted the views of that exchange to the committee. I understand that is one of the big cotton exchanges of the country, especially for spot cotton. The New York Cotton Exchange is really the gambling exchange for cotton and handles a great deal more fictitious cotton than is handled by the New Orleans exchange. On the New Orleans exchange they handle the real cotton, though, of course, there is some speculating done there.

Here is another item in the statement of this representative of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange:

> While the volume of trading has varied from year to year, we have seen that in the year 1932–33 it was approximately six times the size of that year's crop.

Mr. President, last year—1932–33—the cotton exchange handled six times as much cotton as was produced in the United States during the same period. The manipulations of the market in the buying and selling of cotton were six times as much as the actual amount of cotton produced, and that is what they claim regulates the price and fixes the price of cotton for the farmers who produce this product of the Southern States. It seems to me quite strange that a great farm product such as cotton, one of the necessities of life, should have its price regulated and fixed by gamblers upon the stock market. There is one firm of cotton brokers, I am reliably informed, which deals both in the South and in New York, which makes more money each year in gambling on cotton than all the cotton farmers of the South make in net profits.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes; I am glad to yield.

Mr. LEWIS. My able friend does not make these comments as applicable to the grain market in Chicago?

Mr. FRAZIER. I will come to that a little later. I have some figures on the grain market also.

Mr. LEWIS. I will not interrupt the Senator, then, if he expects to discuss the matter later. I should like to hear the detail of his argument.

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes; I will discuss that phase of the matter later. I desire to read further from this statement:

> While the volume of hedging has varied from year to year, we have seen that for the year 1932–33 it was approximately six times the size of that year's crop, which would mean at current prices that every hundred bales of cotton would be subjected, in addition to other taxes and charges, to a "futures" tax of approximately $18, which would be reflected back to the farmer.

This witness is figuring on the 12-cent basis of cotton, which, as I understand, is practically the price at the present time. In the table that he put in the record, however, for the 1932–33 crop, he figures the average price at 7.15 cents; but in this estimate, in figuring the tax, he figures the whole crop at 12 cents. That is all right. I am not making any objection to that. At 12 cents a pound, a bale of cotton of 500 pounds would sell for $60; and the tax at 5 cents per hundred dollars, on the $60 that that one bale of cotton brings, would mean the vast amount of 3 cents tax under this provision—3 cents on a bale of cotton weighing 500 pounds—and 3 cents per bale of 500 pounds means three five-hundredths of 1 cent per pound.

I congratulate the Committee on Finance on being so anxious to save three five-hundredths of a cent per pound for the cotton growers of the South. They need it. Oh, yes; they need to save everything they can, because their conditions have been going from bad to worse for years and years. The condition of the cotton growers of the South has been getting just a little worse each year.

Before our Committee on Agriculture and Forestry the other day there was a hearing on a measure to distribute free cotton to families who were needy; and a lady who had done community work throughout the South came before the committee and told us how, in a certain county in one of the Southern States, she and others had gone out teaching the farmers how to make cotton mattresses out of the raw cotton, and that they were accomplishing a good deal; and she said she hoped the bill before the committee could go through, so that more of this cotton could be distributed throughout the South. I asked this lady if she meant to give us the impression that the farmers who produced cotton in the Southern States in great quantities were so hard up that they could not even afford to buy cotton mattresses, and she said that seemed to be the case. So, Mr. President, they need to save, and the Congress should be interested in those poor cotton farmers, and save them three five-hundredths of a cent on each pound of cotton if they can do it, of course.

The chairman of the committee said that all the testimony before the committee was that this tax would be passed back to the farmer. It would be mighty hard to pass back to the producer directly this three five-hundredths of 1 cent on each pound of cotton. It is absolutely impossible, because they do not figure in these small fractions of cents on the price of cotton. Even if it were passed back, however, it would not hurt the farmer very much. There were practically 13,000,000 bales of cotton produced last year in the South. According to the Agricultural Department there are approximately 2,000,000 cotton farmers. That would mean an average of 6½ bales of cotton to each farmer. If the tax is 3 cents a bale, that would mean 19½ cents on the total production of the average farmer of the South that he would be penalized if the tax were passed back to him directly, which I am satisfied is not the case. Even if it were passed back, however, this tax would cost him 19½ cents on his year's crop if he paid all of it.

The fact is that this tax is only on future trading. The six-and-a-half-bale average, of course, includes the big cotton planter, the big landlord who raises hundreds of bales of cotton; so the average of the individual farmer is mighty small. Many of them are much below the six and a half bales, which is the average for all the cotton farmers of the United States. The average farmer takes his bale or two or three bales of cotton to town and sells it, and does not hedge on it by any means. He needs the money just as quickly as he can get it, and he takes that money. He sells his cotton as spot cotton at whatever price the gamblers are willing to fix for his cotton the day he sells it, and so the average farmer pays no futures tax, at least not directly, on that cotton.

On the other hand, of course, if this $18 tax was on each bale—which is pyramided six times, because it is six times the amount of actual sales, according to what is shown by the record here—if this was $18 a bale and could be added to the $60 a bale which the cotton farmer of the South gets at the present price, it would make $78 per bale, or 15⅗ cents per pound, for his cotton; and that would be a mighty nice increase. But it will not be done.

Let me read you what this representative of the cotton exchange says the reduction of this 5-cent tax to 1 cent will do for the cotton farmers. He says that every hundred bales of cotton—

Would be subjected, in addition to other taxes and charges, to a "futures" tax of approximately $18, which would be reflected back to the farmer.

He says this $18 tax per 100 bales would be reflected back to the farmer. The figures I have quoted, however, show that last year, under the 1-cent tax, the farmers got 5.89 cents, on the average, for their cotton; and the first year, with the 5-cent tax, they got an average of 7.15 cents; and this witness is figuring it at 12 cents, which is the price, or was the price a few days ago, of cotton in the southern cotton market.

The cotton exchanges say that this $18 tax that they claim would be paid would be reflected back to the farmer. It is not paid, however, because, according to the figures of the Treasury Department, only a little over $4,000,000 is collected on all future commodity trades, which includes wheat and many other commodities; and there were bought and sold on the Chicago market alone over 10,000,000,000 bushels of wheat last year—10,000,000,000 bushels! The 5-cent tax was not paid on all of that, either, because if it had been paid on all that wheat and on all this cotton the tax would have been at least a million dollars more than the Treasury reports.

I think the whole 5-cent tax should be taken off, and that the cotton exchanges should give $18 a bale additional to the farmers; but, of course, it is obvious how utterly foolish this man's reasoning is. There were 13,000,000 bales of cotton produced last year, and $18 per 100 bales additional would be $2,340,000 additional money. Mr. President, this argument of the cotton-exchange representative is absolutely absurd under the existing facts, and I am satisfied that there was not one "round turn" more of cotton sold or not sold on the market because of this 5-cent tax.

I am not very familiar with cotton-marketing processes, but I have obtained some figures which it seems to me, at least, are rather interesting. It seems that the cotton exchanges charge nonmembers $25 for a "round turn" of 100 bales of cotton. I did not know what a "round turn" meant, but it seems that that is the way they sell cotton, and that is the expression they use. If on all this cotton that was brought and sold on the markets for the last year they had charged a commission of $25 per "round turn", it would mean a charge for commissions of $19,140,500, Mr. President—$19,000,000 for commissions—and yet they complain about a 5-cent tax per $100, or 3 cents a bale; and the total amount received by the Government for all commodity trading was only a little over $4,000,000. If the cotton brokers sold all of this cotton to their own members—I understand that they charge their own members per "round turn" $12.50—if they sold it all at $12.50 commission, it would mean that the total commission on this total amount sold would be $9,570,250. That is what the amount would be if they sold it all to their own members. Of course, it is not all sold to their own members, and it is certain that they do not pay a tax of 5 cents per $100 on all of it. If they did, it would amount to more than half of all the taxes collected by the Treasury Department on futures trading.

I do not know just how much money they have to put up when they sell one of these "round turns" or buy a "round turn", but it is only a small portion of the actual cost of the cotton.

Mr. President, it is evident to me, from the statement of this representative of the cotton trade of New Orleans, that the 5-cent tax made no difference whatever in the gambling in the markets, because they bought and sold 9,000,000 more bales, or thereabouts, in 1932–33 than they did the year before.

Now, I want to speak briefly about the wheat situation. This 5 cents per hundred dollars means a tax of one twentieth of 1 percent. Shortly after the bill was passed, a little over a year ago, the grain men made a good deal of complaint about it. I remember that the Senator from Illinois received a telegram, signed, as I recall, by about a hundred or more workers in the exchanges of the Chicago Board of Trade, saying that if that 5 cents per hundred dollars tax were imposed it would put them out of business—that it would close the exchanges. They were worrying about their jobs, because this tax of 5 cents per hundred was to be imposed on trading in futures. The Senator from Illinois came to me and said, "Senator, you are largely responsible for having this tax put on and I want you to tell me how to answer these people." I read the telegram and then went on to explain it to him. He said, "I do not want your explanation. I want you to write a letter on which I can base a letter to them giving an explanation of this tax." So I wrote a letter and gave it to the Senator, and I did not hear any more from it; I do not know what the effect was.

In my own State there was a good deal of criticism. One of the opposition papers, on June 10, 1932, carried a little article attacking my colleague and me. It said we were responsible for this 5-cents-a-hundred tax on future trading in grain, and it said that it meant that it would saddle a direct tax of more than $5,000,000 annually on the wheat growers of North Dakota. They went on to say that it was the worst blow the wheat farmers had ever had, and they laid it to the so-called "friends of the farmers" here in the Senate, referring to my colleague and me.

As I said, this 5-cents-per-$100 tax amounts to only one twentieth of 1 percent. A year ago wheat was bringing approximately 50 cents a bushel, and at that price a thousand dollars would buy on the option market 20,000 bushels of wheat. One who purchased put up 5 cents a bushel margin in order to buy these options. That is the general price. On this thousand-dollar transaction there would be a 50-cent tax. The commission men charge nonmembers one fourth of 1 cent a bushel commission for handling their sales. On this thousand-dollar option the nonmember of the board of trade would pay a tax of 50 cents, the Government tax, and would also have to pay a commission of $50 to the commission men for handling this option. A lot of them engaged in such buying of wheat last summer.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Respecting the letter which I asked the Senator to write, and which he did write with great accommodation, giving great details to my grain men, setting forth his reasons for the measure he advocated, it is only fair for me to tell the Senator that, while his logic was attractive, it was in nowise convincing.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, before I conclude I will give the Senator from Illinois some figures which I think will convince him. I did not have the figures a year ago, but I have them now.

When the price of wheat started to rise about a year ago, a great many thought they could make some easy money by dabbling in the market, buying a little wheat. Wheat continued to go up in price for several weeks. The man who bought a thousand dollars' worth, or 20,000 bushels, on option, when his wheat advanced 5 cents in price, could pyramid and take another 20,000 bushels on option without expending any more money, further than paying the extra 50-cent tax to the Government and the extra $50 commission to the commission man. They kept on pyramiding. As fast as the wheat went up 5 cents a bushel, they would pyramid and double the amount of their options.

Wheat got up to about $1 a bushel, or a little over, and the commission men began to get worried. They were afraid it would drop suddenly, or that something would happen, and they raised the ante. They thought 5 cents a bushel was not enough and they raised it to 15 cents a bushel, so that one would have to put up 15 cents a bushel in order to buy or sell wheat in the grain market, because they were afraid of what might happen. So purchasers could not pyramid until there was a 15-cent rise, and when there was a 15-cent rise they would pyramid again, doubling the amount of their holdings. That went on until the price of wheat rose to $1.26 a bushel. On July 19 or 20 they decided that the price of wheat was high enough, that there were too many independent fellows dabbling in the market, that they would have to teach them a lesson. So in those 2 days, July 19 and 20, the price of wheat dropped in the market 28 cents a bushel. Although on the Chicago Board of Trade there is a rule that if the market moves either way more than 5 cents in 1 day the directors may close the market for that day and prevent any of their members from being gouged, either by an increase or a decrease of more than 5 cents a bushel. But in this case they dropped the market 28 cents in 2 days and did not close the market, because it was not their own men who were being fleeced. Their own members had evidently sold short and made a profit. But when the price went down 28 cents in 2 days the average little buyer who had been raising his ante and pyramiding for weeks was frozen out. He lost all the money he had in wheat. One could not walk the streets up in my State in the larger cities without meeting someone who would say, "I have made so many thousand dollars in the wheat market." But after the 20th of July we did not hear any more of that talk at all. They did not even tell us how much they lost; but they did lose all they put in.

Mr. President, I have the figures here from the Department of Agriculture showing the volume of future trading on the Chicago Board of Trade by months for the years 1930 to 1933. I do not intend to give all of them, but I should like to give some.

As I stated previously, this tax went on in the latter part of June 1932, so July was the first full month when the 5-cent tax was really in effect. In June 1932, 711,075,000 bushels of wheat were handled on the Chicago Board of Trade.

In July, the first month after the 5-cent tax went on, the trading dropped to 482,360,000 bushels, a little over 200,000,000 bushels less than during the month before the tax was on. That was to demonstrate to the people of the Nation that this 5-cent tax was putting the grain market out of business. What happened the next month? The speculators forgot about this lesson they were teaching the people about the effect of the 5-cent tax when they saw a chance to make a little money. In August, the next month, the trading in wheat in the Chicago market amounted to 1,018,240,000 bushels. That was in August, the second month after this 5-cent tax went on. They increased their trading in wheat from 482,000,000 to 1,018,000,000 in 1 month.

Normally there is raised in the United States about 900,000,000 bushels of wheat, and in 1 month on the Chicago Board of Trade they sold over a billion bushels. They say they are doing that for the benefit of the farmer, the poor, down-trodden farmer, who needs a little better price for his wheat, so they speculate, they gamble in wheat, which goes to make the staff of life, and they fix the price of it by their gambling methods on the Chicago Board of Trade.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator has ever noticed that every time we start to regulate these racketeers they tell us to go easy; that we are liable to put them out of business. I wonder if the Senator has ever stopped to think where any real harm would be done if these thieves were taken out of control of these institutions altogether?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I will comment on that a little later.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I will ask if the able Senator from Louisiana refers to the cotton market of the town of New Orleans?

Mr. LONG. I refer to the Cotton Exchange of New Orleans as being run by a gang of rotten thieves, and I have told them in New Orleans that they are a gang of rotten crooks who rob the farmers, and the only regret of my life is that I was not strong enough to force this bunch of crooks out of there. I do not want their support in any respect.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator from Illinois can sympathize with the Senator, and he knows there are some who might be similarly classified on the board of trade in Chicago.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I would rather take my chances in any nigger crap game that ever existed than in these exchanges.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I am not an expert on "a nigger crap game", but I will say to my able friend the Senator from North Dakota that I cannot accept that the standard which has been set as to the cotton exchange in New Orleans can be applied to the grain exchange in the great and imperial city of Chicago.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I do not want to reflect upon the grain exchange, because it may be that my friend in Illinois has gone in there and given them a coat of whitewash that will make better men out of them; but I will say that if his outfit has received a spiritual blessing of some sort, I do not know of it, and that the Senator had better look around and be very careful if he puts his money in one of them, because anyone who has no better sense than to play his money in that game ought to be bored for a hollow horn. He has not the chance of a last year's birdsnest to come out of there without being fleeced.

Mr. FRAZIER. I agree with the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I do not hesitate to say, with the indulgence of my able friend from North Dakota, that I would not venture to put my money in such an enterprise for two reasons—one is that I have no money; the other reason is unnecessary. I, however, must add that my friend's estimate as to the grain exchange upon the theory that it needs any coat of whitewash I am sure is made under a misapprehension. Whatever was wrong with them before, whatever their previous shortcoming, was cured by the exchange going Democratic and voting for the President.

Mr. LONG. Probably that might be true of the New Orleans Exchange if they had voted for me, but they have never done it.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I want to say for the benefit of the Senator from Louisiana and any other Senators from the Southern States who are familiar with the cotton situation and perhaps not so familiar with the wheat situation, that the cotton gamblers are pikers compared with the wheat gamblers. They only bought and sold six times as much cotton as was raised in this country last year, but in Chicago they bought and sold on their Board of Trade alone 20 times as much wheat as was raised in the United States last year.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. LONG. The trouble is there was enough left out of the wheat farmer so they could take twenty slices out of him, but when they take six of the kind of slices they take out of the cotton farmer there is not anything left.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, it is to the genius of the Board of Trade of Chicago that we have the ancient scriptural admonition to make two grains and two blades grow where only one grew before.

Mr. FRAZIER. They surely do, with a vengeance, make two grains grow and then some, where only one grew before.

In the whole of the year 1932 there were sold on the Chicago Board of Trade a little over 8,000,000,000 bushels of wheat; in 1931 almost 7,000,000,000 bushels, but in 1933, when this tax of 5 cents a $100 was in effect, which tax, it was claimed, would put them out of business, their trading amounted to 10,355,912,000 bushels of wheat.

The trading in all grains, which include corn, oats, rye, and barley, last year in Chicago amounted to over 15½-billion bushels. And still they will say that the 5-cent tax is putting them out of business.

Mr. President, if I could have my way I would put this tax high enough so I would put the exchanges out of business. The farmers' organizations have been trying to change the marketing system for years. The farmers' organizations throughout the Nation are opposed to this gambling in farm products. So long as we have this gambling market for farm products, so long as speculators or traders set our markets, do Senators think the Agricultural Department down here, with their so-called "farm-emergency legislation" which we passed at the special session, is going to give the farmers an honest market for their grain? Oh, no, there is no chance of that, Mr. President. There is no chance under the existing conditions that the farmers will get an honest market for their grain or cotton.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator as to the exact situation? I understand there is a tax now of 5 cents.

Mr. FRAZIER. There now is a tax of 5 cents a hundred dollars on future trading.

Mr. BORAH. And the committee amendment reduces it to 1 cent?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from North Dakota is opposed to that amendment?

Mr. FRAZIER. Inasmuch as it only amounts to about three and one half million dollars I am not going to insist on the amendment being stricken out or even insist on a vote being taken on it, because they say they do not need the money here in the administration, and then they say it will be that much more for the farmer; and if it is, all good and well.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator think it would be that much more for the farmer?

Mr. FRAZIER. Not directly. It is not passed back to the farmer directly. It is impossible for it to be passed back to the farmer directly, because it is such a small item on each bushel of grain or on each pound of cotton. The farmers and the workers, however, pay most of the taxes indirectly. I cannot think of many taxes which they do not pay indirectly.

Mr. BORAH. I still do not understand why, if the Senator's able argument is to be taken—and I am impressed with it—that tax should be reduced.

Mr. FRAZIER. I think it should be increased; but if they are going to leave it at 5 cents, it might as well be 1 cent, because the gamblers gamble just as much and the Government, it is said, does not need the money.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. LONG. My mentality operates so slowly that I thought of something that I should have been able to think of at the time when the comments were passing between the Senator from North Dakota and the Senator from Illinois. I believe the Senator from Illinois stated that the stock exchange in Chicago went Democratic in the last election, thus purging them of all their dishonest practices.

Mr. LEWIS. I never conceded that any of my people have ever indulged in dishonest practices.

Mr. LONG. But after denying the dishonest practices, as I understand, the Senator said they went Democratic. The facts are though, Mr. President, that they do not have to go Democratic or Republican. They never go out of office. They are sitting in both parties. They do not ever have to change. They have just as good a hold in one party as in the other.

Mr. FRAZIER. These exchanges are nonpartisan. I am coming to that.

Mr. LONG. That raises the question as to the Nonpartisan League. My friend from North Dakota may think he was in the Nonpartisan League when it was first formed, but the Nonpartisan League was formed in these stock exchanges. That was the beginning of the Nonpartisan League.

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes; it was formed a long, long time ago, before we ever thought of it in North Dakota.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to remind the Senator from Louisiana that the Nonpartisan League began when the Democrats joined the Republicans on the tariff question; it did not begin in the stock exchange.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I believe I owe it to the Senator from Louisiana to say that if he wishes to confess here that he was rather slow of mind he will find back in Louisiana there are those who will certify he is fast in other directions. [Laughter.]

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I think the Senators have missed the point, because the Nonpartisan League started in Wall Street long before we ever came to the Senate.

Mr. FRAZIER. I think there have been a number of nonpartisan leagues started in the business world.

In 1933, according to the figures from the Department, the total amount of wheat sold and handled on the Chicago Board of Trade was 10,355,912,000 bushels. Last year, according to the Department of Agriculture, we raised in the United States the smallest wheat crop that we have grown for years—515,000,000 bushels.

The amount bought and sold on the Chicago market was just a little more than 20 times as much as we raised in the same year in the United States, and it was 5 or 6 times as much as all the wheat grown in the world in the same period of time. But the gentlemen on the Chicago Board of Trade—very respectable gentlemen, as my friend from Illinois would say—make a vast amount of money in handling this farm product, in buying and selling it, and fleecing the little fellows who come in and dabble in the market, who, as I agree with my friend from Louisiana, should know better and should stay out.

In Fargo last summer they told me a bucket shop was started. It was not exactly a bucket shop, but someone was kind enough to take the money that little speculators wanted to put in the market—a few dollars—and send it to Chicago and buy options for them. They cleaned up the savings of bootblacks, the savings of the newsboys, the stenographers, the hotel clerks, and anybody else who had a few dollars, or a few hundred dollars, or a few thousand dollars to spend; they cleaned them up on the Chicago Board of Trade on the 19th and 20th of July, when they dropped wheat 28 cents in 2 days.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. LONG. For every man you can find who ever made a dime out of one of these stock exchanges or cotton exchanges or grain exchanges I will find 10,000 men who have lost all they had. The old Louisiana lottery was an honor to us compared to these exchanges. The Louisiana lottery ought to be enshrined as an example of purity and virtue compared to the stock exchanges that exist in the United States today.

Mr. FRAZIER. I agree with the Senator from Louisiana again.

Mr. LONG. I should say they had about one chance out of five on a fair break, maybe, on a percentage basis in the old Louisiana lottery. I would almost say that where you find 1 man who has gained there will be at least 10 men who have been wrecked in these stock exchanges, more than in the old Louisiana lottery. I would almost say that where there is to be found today 1 man who has made money at least 10,000 men have been wrecked on the exchange. It is a criminal enterprise; it is a nefarious enterprise; it is put up for the purpose of robbing somebody. Think of selling a crop that is 10 times greater than has ever been grown. There is not anything gained in the way of marketing crops. The exchange is operated for the purpose of furnishing an aristocratic manner of gambling, a means by which it is absolutely certain that the little man will be fleeced out of whatever he ventures in the transaction.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, if the Chicago Board of Trade—and the same thing is true of the cotton exchanges—want the little fellow to deal on the market, as the representative who came before the committee said they do, why do they not reduce their commissions and let them deal. The tax of 5 cents a hundred dollars is not keeping them out; it is the commission they have to pay. On the Chicago Board of Trade members are charged one eighth of a cent a bushel for trading, while nonmembers are charged one fourth of a cent—twice as much—and then, I understand, they have an inner ring in the membership of the Chicago Board of Trade. Seats are sold for anywhere from $5,000 up to $70,000, I understand, and those who belong to the inner ring do not even have to pay one-eighth cent per bushel for gambling in the market, but they have a reduction on that rate—I do not know what it is, but probably half that amount or just enough to pay the actual expenses of the sale. Oh, yes, they take care of their own members; there is no question about that, so long as they play the game with them, but even members who try to buck the group there in control lose their seats; they are fleeced and forced to go out of business.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I will merely remark that if my able friend from North Dakota and the Senator from Louisiana, in expressing in their bemoaning accents the experience of those who have operated in this house of speculation are referring to their own experience, I deplore the results and express to them my sympathy.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, that is one instance where I have shown better sense than have the constituents of the Senator from Illinois. They never got a nickel of my money. I learned long ago not to sit in at the other man's game. I tried that when I first went West as a young man, and gave it up. I will say to the Senator from Illinois I may have been negligent, I may have shown deficiencies in other respects, but never have they gotten a dime of my money. At least I have had that much sense.

Mr. FRAZIER. I appreciate the sympathy of the Senator from Illinois, but it is misplaced. I can say with the Senator from Louisiana that I never spent a dollar on the Chicago Board of Trade or any of the other exchanges.

Mr. LONG. I should like to say further that I hope our good example in staying out may be potent, for fear the Senator from Illinois might do the reverse.

Mr. LEWIS. I might add that from the information the two eminent Senators seem to disclose as to all the details of such transactions, they have shown themselves eminently qualified to take advantage of the board of trade in its ignorance and lack of discernment.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, speaking for myself, I have never felt that way about it, but I agree with the Senator from Louisiana that for an outsider who undertakes, with the hope of winning, to play at a game where the other fellow knows the game and makes the rules that govern the game, I have not much sympathy if he does get fleeced; and he gets fleeced, there is no doubt about that.

I am taking more time than I expected to take, but I want to give a few figures as to wheat. I have given some as to cotton. The price of wheat to the farmer during the last few weeks has been around 60 cents a bushel; and at 60 cents a bushel a hundred bushels would sell for $60, and on $60 this 5-cent tax per $100, on 100 bushels of wheat would amount to 3 cents, or 0.03 of 1 cent a bushel. Can it be said that they pass that tax back to the farmers? Such a small fraction as 0.03 of a cent per bushel cannot be passed back to the farmers. It is impossible. Of course, if a farmer shipped a carload of wheat and hedged against it on a thousand-bushel car, he would pay a little tax of about 30 cents on the thousand bushels. Even that would not break the average farmer; 30 cents on a thousand bushels is not going to break him. He is going broke because he cannot get the cost of production for the bushels of wheat that he sells or for any other product that he sells. That is why he is going broke.

The one reason is because he does not have an honest market for his wheat and other products. The farmer in the South is going broke because he does not have an honest market for his cotton. The gamblers fix the price; they manipulate the prices and break those who produce cotton, and, also, break the farmers in the North who produce wheat.

It is to be noted that the title of this bill is "To provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes." The words "for other purposes" can mean almost anything, but it was suggested to me the other day that the words "other purposes" probably mean to make it possible to raise campaign funds; and I think that probably is what they mean in connection with the pending revenue bill.

The other day the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] offered an amendment to increase the rates of taxation on incomes in the higher brackets. That amendment was voted down, as I remember, by 47 nays to 36 yeas. Out of the 47 nays there were 18 Republicans and 29 Democrats. As was shown by the Senator from Wisconsin, the adoption of the amendment would mean in the case of some of the big corporations in the higher brackets that they would probably have to pay $100,000 more tax than they would pay under the bill without his amendment. As I have said, that amendment was voted down. The National Democratic Committee watch all these votes here. A member of the Democratic National Committee could go to one of those big concerns in New York or some other place and say, "By defeating the La Follette amendment we saved your company $100,000 in taxes for the coming year. We want a campaign fund." Do you think, Mr. President, they would give it? They would be pretty cheap skates who would not put up ten or fifteen thousand dollars, inasmuch as they were saved $100,000 a year from the tax.

Then the National Republican committeeman could go to them and say, "The Democrats did not have enough votes down there in the Senate to defeat the La Follette amendment, and 18 Republicans had to vote with them in order to head off a higher tax. We saved you $100,000 on your tax, and we want a contribution for our campaign fund"; and they will get it. Oh, yes; we have a nonpartisan league right here in the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator for some light on a matter that has caused me considerable trouble concerning the question of cotton options. My information is that the Department of Agriculture had 2,300,000 bales of cotton under option last year, which means, of course, that they had bought options to that extent on the cotton exchange; that they transferred those options to the farmers for a consideration, and they are now valued at $43,000,000. I should like to have the Senator discuss the matter of cotton options and dealings on the cotton exchange in the light of the policy of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. FRAZIER. I am not responsible for the policy of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. BAILEY. I want light on the matter if the practice is so bad as the Senator says.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] can explain that. He was responsible for that law being passed, to give the cotton farmers a chance to make some money from the cotton options. I did not like the theory of it, but so long as it did not have anything to do with the northern farmers, in whom I was directly interested or directly represented, I made no objection to it.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator think it was all right to corrupt the southern farmers and not the northern farmers? Is that the idea?

Mr. FRAZIER. They apparently made some money out of it. Whether it is corrupting them or not I do not know, but I am very much afraid that it is.

Mr. BAILEY. Is it a good thing when they make money out of it?

Mr. FRAZIER. That depends, of course, on one's viewpoint.

Mr. BAILEY. I was just asking the Senator.

Mr. FRAZIER. Some people think it is a good thing to go out and hold up a bank, or get money in some other similar way, and I have more respect for the highwayman who goes out and holds up somebody in broad daylight or goes into a bank and holds up the bank than I have for the gamblers on the cotton and wheat markets who rob the farmers by manipulating the prices of the farm products.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator applies that to the Department of Agriculture and its policy of doing precisely that thing? I get the point.

Mr. FRAZIER. As I have said, I am not responsible for the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. BAILEY. But the Senator did say he had as much respect for the bank thief as he had for anybody that did that, and the Department of Agriculture has done it.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I want to give a little cotton viewpoint, since I come from a cotton State. We have to deal as the rigging is set up; in other words, that is our only method of dealing; we have to take the thing as we find it. I do not agree with the policy of the Department of Agriculture, but that is the best thing we could get. I do not agree with it at all. I do not think it is necessary that they have to do it in that way; but if they are going to do it in that way, we have to buy and sell on the exchange market today. We know we are being fleeced of our earnings, or a large part of them, but it is made up in that way and that is all we can do. What ought to have been done by this Government, and what I would much prefer to have been done, was to have an honest method of exchange for our products, instead of having to go through the exchange to do it. Why could not the Government have operated an exchange?

Mr. FRAZIER. It would have put the speculators out of business.

Mr. LONG. That is the only reason.

Mr. BAILEY. I will ask the Senator, with the permission of the Senator from North Dakota, would it be a good thing if the Government did that?

Mr. LONG. Not along the lines of the cotton exchange, but the Government could have its own agencies and could prevent exchange manipulation.

Mr. BAILEY. I get the point that the Senators who are discussing this matter are also condemning the Government of the United States and its Department of Agriculture.

Mr. FRAZIER. I have no hesitancy in condemning much of the policy of the present Agricultural Department.

Mr. LONG. I have no hesitancy whatever in saying that the Government has recognized fraud after fraud. I do not mind saying that the Government has recognized it. Why have we got Capone in the penitentiary for violating the liquor law? Why have we got Capone down there for violating the income tax law? Yet we have a bunch of market riggers who have taken from every living man, woman, and child of this country what has been produced by the sweat of their brows, and the robbery has been continually committed through the stock exchanges, the cotton exchanges, and the grain exchanges.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, what the farm organizations want and what I think the real friends of the farmer want is a fixed price based on the cost of production and a fair profit for the farm products. Let the Government set up a market to handle these products and to handle the surpluses. I am satisfied it could be done a great deal more cheaply than it is being done under the present system and could be done a great deal better and fairer all around; that the farmer could have better prices for his products and could sell the finished product to the consumer cheaper than it is now being sold, by eliminating a part of the handling charge and the manipulating expense that now prevails in the markets.

Just a few days ago a miller from the great State of New York came to my office. He makes a specialty of the manufacture of rye flour. He said that within the last few weeks the Polish Government had shipped to the United States over 9,000,000 bushels of rye. He said when they shipped it they had their agent go on the Chicago Board of Trade and sell short 9,000,000 bushels of rye. The effect of that is to depress the market for rye in the United States. The Polish Government pays a bonus or a bounty of about 20 cents a bushel to the Polish rye farmers. There is a provision in our tariff law that in a case where a bonus is paid which amounts to dumping by any foreign country, our tariff rate on such article can be raised. An investigation was had, and I do not know what the excuse was, but it was decided that this was not dumping and so nothing was done.

The Tariff Commission, according to the newspapers, asked the President to use his power to increase the duty on rye by 50 percent, but that was not done. The Polish rye continues to come. Our rye farmers are forced to sell their rye below cost of production and thus to go broke.

I am hopeful that some arrangement can be made, before another revenue bill comes before the Senate in the next Congress, to regulate or do away entirely with these gambling markets for cotton and wheat. I hope that can be done. I hope we can have a fixed price based on cost of production and a fair profit to the farmer—and why not? We know that under the N.R.A. program it is said that the manufacturers, the wholesalers, the jobbers, and the retailers must have cost of production and a fair profit. I agree that they must, but that cost of production and fair profit has been denied to the American farmer. He has been denied that right which is given to the manufacturer, the wholesaler, the jobber, and the retailer right now.

If anyone on earth is entitled to cost of production and a fair profit for what he produces, it is the American farmer, because he produces products which the people must have in order to live. We could get along without automobiles, but we cannot get along without bread made from flour or without clothes made from cotton which the farmer produces. Yet the farmer is told he is not entitled to cost of production, and we continue to let the gamblers fix the prices of his products.

A pre-war parity price was adopted for the farmer. It is now admitted that even if they got the pre-war parity for wheat and the other farm products the farmers will not be getting cost of production. There is now pending before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry an amendment to the law proposing to change the method of determining the fair exchange value of these products so the farmer can get more nearly, at least, cost of production for his products, and I understand that the Department of Agriculture favors this amendment.

If the Finance Committee of the Senate think they can get more campaign funds out of the cotton exchanges, the grain exchanges, and the other commodity exchanges by cutting down this tax from 5 cents to 1 cent per $100, I am not going to make any objection. They contend that it is passed back to the farmer anyway, and probably it is. Probably he pays it indirectly. In some way or other it is gotten out of the farmer, so I am not going to make any objection to this change in the rate and I am not even going to ask for a record vote upon the committee amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I am very much interested in the suggestion of the able Senator from North Dakota as to campaign expenses. I do not understand exactly to what he alludes, but I inform him that as I have been selected by the Democratic Senators as chairman of the Democratic senatorial committee having in charge the matter of the election of Senators at the coming elections, I am anxious to know how this fund he invents is to be distributed by which I may, as chairman of the Democratic senatorial campaign committee, be permitted to obtain and distribute a part of that fund to help accomplish the reelection of Democratic Senators as a measure of national salvation.

Mr. FRAZIER. I would suggest to the able Senator from Illinois that he explain the situation to some of his friends on the Chicago Board of Trade, explaining that this 5-cent tax which is to be reduced will save them some millions of dollars, two or three millions of dollars at least, and that because of that reduction they can afford to put some of that money, which otherwise would have gone to payment of the tax, into the Democratic campaign fund as a business proposition, in the hope that Democrats may be reelected with the same viewpoint and that they can come back when the next revenue bill is before the Congress and save them some more money. The Senator will thus not only lay the foundation for raising campaign funds for the present year but for future campaign years as well.

Mr. LEWIS. I may say the Senator gives me a grain of hope, in view of the agricultural situation.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that I understand the position of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], but nevertheless I hope the action of the committee will be confirmed.

In the hearings before the Senate Finance Committee Mr. J. W. T. Duvel submitted the views of the Grain Futures Administration of the Department of Agriculture. He said he represented the Grain Futures Administration, and continued:

> We feel that that 5-cent tax is too high to permit the easy and efficient working of the exchanges. It is a tax the burden of which comes primarily on the people who stand in the market and take orders, there buy and sell, as the merchant or the speculator is in the market. The tax itself is not necessarily such a burden on the man who makes one trade, but it is the man who is in the market all the time and who is taking the orders.

Mr. President, I hope the action of the committee will be ratified, and I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no amendment pending, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has an amendment which he desires to offer.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, my amendment was printed in the RECORD of yesterday, and I offer it at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 45, it is proposed to strike out, beginning in line 23, down through line 5, on page 45, and to insert:

> (a) Returns made under this title upon which the tax has been determined by the Commissioner shall constitute public records and shall be open to public examination and inspection under rules and regulations promulgated by the Secretary and approved by the President. Whenever a return is open to the inspection of any person a certified copy thereof shall, upon request, be furnished to any person under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. The Commissioner may prescribe a reasonable fee for furnishing such copy.
> (b) (1) The Secretary and any officer or employee of the Treasury Department, upon request from the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, the Committee on Finance of the Senate, or a select committee of the Senate or House specially authorized to investigate returns by a resolution of the Senate or House, or a joint committee so authorized by concurrent resolution, shall furnish such committee sitting in executive session with any data of any character contained in or shown by any return.
>
> (2) Any such committee shall have the right, acting directly as a committee, or by or through such examiners or agents as it may designate or appoint, to inspect any or all of the returns at such times and in such manner as it may determine.
>

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is recognized.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to enable me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield for that purpose?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	Hatfield	Patterson
Ashurst	Costigan	Hayden	Pope
Bachman	Couzens	Hebert	Reynolds
Bailey	Cutting	Johnson	Robinson, Ind.
Bankhead	Davis	Keyes	Russell
Barbour	Dickinson	King	Schall
Barkley	Dill	La Follette	Sheppard
Black	Duffy	Lewis	Shipstead
Bone	Erickson	Logan	Smith
Borah	Fess	Lonergan	Steiwer
Brown	Fletcher	Long	Stephens
Bulkley	Frazier	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	George	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Byrd	Gibson	McNary	Thompson
Byrnes	Glass	Metcalf	Townsend
Capper	Goldsborough	Murphy	Vandenberg
Caraway	Gore	Neely	Van Nuys
Carey	Hale	Norris	Wagner
Clark	Harrison	Nye	Walcott
Connally	Hastings	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Coolidge	Hatch	Overton	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if Senators will refer to the amendment in printed form, I should like to state that the only new language that is proposed to be inserted is contained in the first sentence, which reads as follows:

> Returns made under this title upon which the tax has been determined by the Commissioner shall constitute public records and shall be open to public examination and inspection under rules and regulations promulgated by the Secretary and approved by the President.

The rest of the amendment is existing law as contained in the 1926 revenue act.

I have offered the amendment in this form upon the advice of the legislative counsel that this is the most orderly and logical way of achieving the purpose sought by the amendment without altering existing law.

Mr. President, it is not my intention to discuss the amendment at length. It has been debated upon every tax bill which has been considered in this Chamber since 1922. On numerous occasions since that time the Senate has gone on record by substantial majorities in favor of the principle that income-tax returns should be regarded as public records.

For many months a subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means, and the committee itself, considered necessary and desirable revisions of our revenue legislation. The Finance Committee, after the bill came from the House, devoted a great deal of time and attention to the subject. I believe I am safe in saying that a large proportion of the measure now before the Senate is the direct result of the investigation conducted by the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency. This bill as drawn, in nearly every provision, attempts to close the loopholes which large income-tax payers, with the advice and help of their high-priced tax attorneys, have found in the existing revenue legislation.

The investigation conducted by the Committee on Banking and Currency revealed a shocking number of legal forms of tax dodging which large income-tax payers were using as a means of escaping their fair share of the tax burden under our present revenue legislation.

I am firmly convinced that the adoption of this amendment making income-tax returns public records, and its final enactment into law, will do more to bring about the filing of honest tax returns in this country, will do more to prevent this legalized form of tax dodging, than all of the devices which have been conceived by the experts and by committees of Congress and embodied in this bill in an effort to close these particular avenues of legalized tax evasion.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Did not the able Senator from Wisconsin press a similar amendment to a successful end in the Senate at the last session?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The amendment was adopted overwhelmingly in the Senate, but in conference it was modified, leaving it entirely within the discretion of the President as to whether or not this policy should be inaugurated; and no action has been taken on it since that time. All that this amendment proposes to do is to declare it to be the policy of Congress that income-tax returns shall constitute public records and to make it mandatory upon the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, to issue rules and regulations under which these returns may be examined and inspected.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, under the present rules and regulations not only are outsiders prevented from looking at any tax returns but Members of Congress are denied that opportunity. I doubt very much whether the members of the committee of which the Senator from Wisconsin is a member could look at any tax returns.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have never been able to see the logic of the argument that income-tax returns should be considered secret records. As every Senator knows, property-tax returns in every State in the Union are of public record. Any person who makes a property-tax return in any State knows full well that that property-tax return is a matter of public record and open to inspection on the part of any official or citizen who is interested.

When the income tax was first inaugurated in this country, income-tax returns were public records.

It is an interesting fact that in 1870 the number of tax returns on incomes over $2,000 were 94,887. In 1871 Congress altered the policy and returns were made secret. In the next year, 1872, the number of tax returns of individuals with incomes of $2,000 or more fell to 74,000. This startling reduction in the number of income-tax returns filed came about in spite of the fact that individual bank deposits, bank clearings, and other information indicating business activity showed that 1871 and 1872 were more prosperous years than 1870.

In my own State we have had a like experience insofar as the public policy of income-tax returns is concerned. From 1916 to 1924 income-tax returns in that State constituted secret records, which could not be inspected or examined by anyone excepting officers connected with the income-tax commission.

In 1921 the Legislature of Wisconsin ordered a back audit of income-tax returns for the preceding 6 years. As a result of that audit by the tax commission it was ascertained that corporations and individuals had willfully underestimated and understated their incomes, with the result that $3,500,000 of back income taxes due the State were collected.

In 1923, at the regular session of the legislature following this exposure of wholesale and willful understatement and withholding of income taxes due the State, income-tax returns in Wisconsin were made public records, and they have been public records ever since that time. The remarkable fact is that since income-tax returns were made public records in the State of Wisconsin there has been no such wholesale and willful understatement and underdeclaration of incomes as was experienced during the period when these tax returns were shrouded in secrecy.

Mr. President, I contend that if income-tax returns had constituted public records during the period prior to the investigation recently conducted by the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency no such flagrant cases of tax avoidance or tax evasion would have been disclosed by that committee.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LOGAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. MURPHY. I have in my hand an extract from the report of the Wisconsin Tax Commission of 1930, and if the Senator will permit me, I should like to read therefrom as indicating what that commission reported the experience in Wisconsin to be. I quote:

> The repeal of the secrecy clause by the 1923 legislature opened all income-tax returns to public inspection. The repeal was urged and passed upon the supposition that public inspection would result in fewer incorrect returns and in discovering much unreported income. These expected results have not materialized in any degree in the administration of either the individual or the corporation returns. There have been no instances where public inspection has brought forth unreported income, and as to its anticipated effect in producing more correct income returns, experience has shown that it has had the opposite effect. Knowing that their returns are open to inspection, taxpayers consolidate and condense their reports to make them as unintelligible as possible to those inspecting them, thus making their auditing by the commission or by the income-tax assessor more arduous, necessitating additional work, considerably more correspondence, and consequent expense and delay.
> In most of the income-tax assessment offices public examination of returns is infrequent and of little consequence, but in five or six of such offices and in the office of the tax commission such examination is attended by considerable annoyance and expense.
>
> A survey shows that public examination is almost wholly without any public motive or significance, but that advantage is taken of it to serve purely private and personal interests. Our filed returns are used by credit organizations, which have men on hand almost constantly digging into the files. Returns are examined to prepare lists of prospective purchasers of stocks and bonds and for other soliciting and advertising purposes. A common use of returns is to secure information in negotiating for the purchase of business properties, and very frequent use is made of them in delving into the intimate concerns of business competitors. Many such examinations are by competitors from without the State, who offer the Wisconsin business no such reciprocal information or advantage. Income-tax files are also frequently used for information in court actions and many examinations are made out of curiosity, and at times for the sole purpose of annoying and harassing a reporting taxpayer.
> In the Milwaukee office the time of an employee for 2 hours of every day is taken in waiting upon persons who are using the files for private purposes. In the period between November 1, 1929, and September 22, 1930, over 3,000 files were examined in the office of the tax commission. The crowded filing room is frequently occupied by six or seven persons going through the files and crowding the desk room of regular employees. The entire time of one clerk is employed in serving these purely personal investigators and at times other clerks are called upon to assist her.
> The indiscriminate examination of returns is not only an imposition upon the reporting taxpayer, but is also an imposition upon the State and upon its tax administration officers and employees. The commission does not favor any secrecy of returns that would bar examination in the public interest, but it does suggest that the promiscuous misuse of files for private purposes to the great inconvenience and annoyance of officials, and the expense to the State, ought to be discontinued. No other State or country having such files in custody permits such misuse of them. These files contain the record of the lifeblood and register the pulse of the person and private business affairs of our own taxpayers and should be accessible only when the public interest is concerned.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am familiar with that report of the tax commission of 1930, and I am not at all surprised that the Senator should think it very much in point.

The fact remains, however, that the legislature and the succeeding governors of the State have not made any attempt to change the law.

The fact also remains, as I stated a few moments ago, that when we had secrecy of returns in the State, a back audit revealed three and a half million dollars, which was subsequently collected and turned into the treasury of the State, as a result of willful and fraudulent withholding of taxes upon the part of corporations and of individuals.

Since that time there has been no such flagrant violation or willful withholding of tax upon the part of individuals and corporate taxpayers.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will in just a moment.

Mr. President, insofar as the willful misuse of material is concerned, my amendment permits the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, to draw up and to promulgate rules and regulations to govern the examination and inspection of income-tax returns.

I now yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the point raised by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY] is the one that disturbs me. I cordially concede the premise of the Senator from Wisconsin that except for publicity we would never have known of needed corrections in the income-tax law, and that, therefore, obviously publicity is essential to the extent that it is required for a public use.

What I desire to know from the Senator is whether or not, under the language of this amendment, it would be possible for the rules and regulations, as promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury and approved by the President, to be confined in any degree in respect to their use, inasmuch as they are first constituted public records. Does not the fact that they are constituted public records confine the subsequent power of regulation to the statement of rules of procedure respecting their inspection, rather than rules as to who could inspect them?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think perhaps the Senator is correct in his latter statement that under the language of this amendment rules and regulations would be issued as to their reasonable inspection and public examination.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In other words, under the language as written it would not be possible for the President and the Secretary, by their rules and regulations, to confine the consultation of this information?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am not just sure that I understand what the Senator means. I do not believe, under the terms of this amendment, that the rules and regulations could prevent anything excepting the unreasonable requests to examine these returns and to make the time and manner of inspection reasonable from the point of view of the administrative officers. I do not know whether I have answered the Senator's question or not.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me be specific. Could these rules and regulations, in the Senator's judgment, for example, be confined to a consultation of the total tax only, if that met with the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury and the President?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I do not think so.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Could the rules and regulations, if it be the judgment of the Secretary and the President, require that one who seeks to consult them must disclose a public interest?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I do not think so.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Would the Senator resist that sort of a limitation upon publicity?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, we have had such an unfortunate experience, may I say to the Senator, in the effort to provide that income-tax returns should be open to inspection and examination, that I would hesitate very much to accept an amendment that would grant any great latitude in the matter.

May I recall to the Senator's attention the fact that under the language in the existing law permissive authority is given to the President of the United States to make income-tax returns open to public inspection and examination to such an extent as he may deem advisable, if I may paraphrase the language? No action has been taken upon it at all.

I would also like to direct to the Senator's attention the fact that in instance after instance, when the Senate has gone on record in favor of making income-tax returns public records, changes have been made in conference which have entirely nullified and destroyed the objective which the Senate sought to attain. We had one experience that I remember very well when the Senate went on record in favor of making income-tax returns public records. The conferees came back with the proposition that in the office of each collector there should be published a list of the taxpayers, with the amount opposite their names of the taxes which they paid.

Mr. President, to my mind that provision absolutely destroyed the effect of the proposal to make income-tax returns public records. Every Senator knows that the examination of a statement showing a man's name and how much taxes he has paid does not reveal any material facts. The individual making out his return knows full well that no question as to how he has computed his tax or what devices he may have used to reduce it are revealed.

My feeling is, may I say to the Senator from Michigan, that one of the great beneficial effects from this amendment, if it is agreed to, will be the psychological effect upon the taxpayer when he sits down to make out his return. As I said a few moments ago, I am satisfied that we would never have known of the shocking evasions of taxes which were revealed by the investigations of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency if those taxpayers had known that the returns which they were filing with the Government were going to be a matter of public record.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am very heartily in favor of the Senator's amendment. I do not think it goes quite far enough insofar as Members of the Congress are concerned. I think Members of the Congress should have the right to examine returns in carrying on their legislative duties. Otherwise I think the Senator's amendment is all right.

The Senator knows that I have fought for publicity of tax returns for many years, and the bill to which he has just referred, which was emasculated by the House after it had passed the Senate, was an amendment that, as I recall, I offered and the Senate adopted.

I hope the Senator's amendment will be adopted. I think it should. It would be well to amend it so as to insure the right of Representatives and Senators to inspect returns.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am satisfied that under the language of this amendment every Senator and every Representative would have the right to examine returns, because if the Senator will refer to the first sentence of the amendment he will find that it reads:

> Returns made under this title upon which the tax has been determined by the Commissioner shall constitute public records and shall be open to public examination and inspection under rules and regulations promulgated by the Secretary and approved by the President.

Mr. McKELLAR. A very similar provision is now the law.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No, may I say to the Senator; the provision is not similar.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is very similar to that, and if the Secretary of the Treasury should not want the returns examined he could make rules and regulations under which they could not be examined.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No, Mr. President. I desire to point out to the Senator what happened. When the Industrial Recovery Act, which contains certain tax provisions, as the Senator will remember, was under consideration at the last session I offered an amendment which was more sweeping than the amendment now under consideration. The amendment I then offered did not grant to the Secretary or to the President the right to issue regulations concerning it. My amendment was adopted and went to conference. The conferees inserted language which removed the mandatory effect of the amendment. The law now reads:

> And all records made under this act shall constitute public records and shall be open to public inspection.

Here is what the conferees put in:

To such extent as shall be authorized in rules and regulations promulgated by the President.

The language which I now offer is mandatory.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator read it?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The language is:

Returns made under this title upon which the tax has been determined by the Commissioner shall constitute public records and shall be open to public examination and inspection under rules and regulations promulgated by the Secretary and approved by the President.

Mr. McKELLAR. The language is very similar, and I hope the Senator's language will give what I think should be given, namely, the power of examination by a Representative or a Senator. The reason for that is simply this: How are we able to properly legislate upon such matters when we are kept in the dark as to what the effect of the legislation is?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I agree with the Senator 100 percent about that, but I want to again call his attention to the fact that in the existing law are the words, "to such extent", which clearly confers upon the President and the Secretary discretion as to whether they are to be open to inspection at all or not.

This amendment is drawn in such form that it is mandatory upon the Secretary and the President to issue the rules and regulations.

I want to point out one further beneficial effect which I believe the adoption of this policy will have upon the vigilance and the activity of those who are entrusted in the Internal Revenue Bureau with the problem of auditing and passing upon income-tax returns. Today it is an offense for any official of the Internal Revenue Bureau or any employee thereof to disclose any facts concerning any return which has passed under his eye. If this amendment shall be adopted, it will be possible for employees in the Bureau who are aware of situations which ought to reach the attention of Senators and Representatives in Congress, and others who are interested in this problem, to bring such situations to their notice. It will do a great deal, in my opinion, to improve the morale and to increase the zeal and vigilance of those who are charged with auditing and passing upon the returns.

Senators who are familiar with the voluminous testimony and the long report which came from the select committee on taxation, know full well that in instance after instance there were revealed decisions rendered and actions taken by employees of the Internal Revenue Bureau which revealed gross favoritism and special privileges extended. Those employees of the Bureau would never have dared to extend those special privileges had they known that the returns and their decisions were not shrouded in secrecy which protected them from exposure.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. DILL. I am anxious to know why the Senator from Wisconsin inserts in his amendment subsections (b), (c), and (d), particularly subsection (b). What is there that necessitates those subsections?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it is because the provisions to which the subsections refer are in the existing law. They represent small concessions which we have won in the years we have battled over this proposition. I did not want to cast any doubt upon the provisions respecting the right of certain committees and others to inspect income-tax returns by proposing to repeal them, and, therefore, in order to have the language in the pending bill, it is necessary to reenact them in this amendment. The Senator will see if he will refer to page 57, line 22, reference is made to title II of the Revenue Act of 1926. The only new material in my amendment is contained in the first clause; the remainder of it is the reenactment of title II of the act of 1926.

Mr. DILL. The reason it confuses, I may say, is that it gives the impression on reading it that the members of those committees would not have the right of inspection without the provision. It seemed to me that subsection (a) gave full power to everybody to inspect these records. I note that paragraph (2) under subsection (b) refers to corporations but paragraph (1) does not; and I was fearful that that might be understood to imply that there was some limitation upon this information being published.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It certainly is not the intent, may I say to the Senator? For instance, referring to paragraph (2) on page 2, line 12, my amendment reads:

(2) Any such committee shall have the right, acting directly as a committee, or by or through such examiners or agents as it may designate or appoint, to inspect any or all of the returns at such times and in such manner as it may determine.

The subsection leaves it entirely within the discretion of the committee or its duly authorized agents, regardless of any regulation which may be issued under paragraph (a).

Mr. DILL. I see. That explains it in part. I am very anxious that whatever legislation may be passed shall not limit the public in any way as to the inspection of these tax returns.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, upon further consideration I think the Senator's suggestion is well taken concerning subsections (c) and (d); and, if I may have the attention of the illustrious Chief Clerk, I modify my amendment by striking out, beginning on line 21, page 2, all of paragraphs (c) and (d).

Mr. DILL. The punishment provided should not apply if the records are to be published.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly not.

Mr. NORRIS. What was the modification the Senator proposed to his amendment?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On page 2, line 21, I propose to modify the amendment by striking out paragraph (c) and paragraph (d), on page 3, beginning in line 1 and ending on line 13, and then the letter "(e)" should be changed to "(c)."

Mr. President, when the revenue bill was under consideration at the special session I offered the following amendment:

Section 55 of the Revenue Act of 1932 is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a semicolon and the following: "except that all returns made under this act after the date of enactment of the National Industrial Recovery Act shall constitute public records, and shall be open to examination and inspection."

Upon that amendment, Mr. President, we had a record vote in the Senate, and the amendment was adopted 56 to 27, 13 not voting.

I ask unanimous consent to have the roll call upon that previous amendment inserted at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The yea-and-nay vote referred to is as follows:

The result was announced—yeas 56, nays 27, as follows:

Yeas, 56: Adams, Ashurst, Bachman, Barkley, Black, Bone, Borah, Bratton, Brown, Bulkley, Bulow, Byrnes, Capper, Caraway, Clark, Connally, Coolidge, Costigan, Cutting, Dickinson, Dill, Duffy, Erickson, Frazier, George, Hatfield, Hayden, Johnson, Kendrick, King, La Follette, Long, McCarran, McGill, McKellar, Neely, Norris, Nye, Overton, Patterson, Pope, Reynolds, Robinson of Indiana, Russell, Sheppard, Shipstead, Smith, Thomas of Oklahoma, Thomas of Utah, Thompson, Trammell, Vandenberg, Van Nuys, Wagner, Walsh, and Wheeler.

Nays, 27: Austin, Bailey, Bankhead, Barbour, Carey, Copeland, Dieterich, Fess, Goldsborough, Hale, Harrison, Hastings, Hebert, Kean, Keyes, Lonergan, Metcalf, Murphy, Reed, Robinson of Arkansas, Schall, Steiwer, Stephens, Townsend, Tydings, Walcott, and White.

Not voting, 13: Byrd, Couzens, Dale, Davis, Fletcher, Glass, Gore, Lewis, Logan, McAdoo, McNary, Norbeck, and Pittman.

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the question relative to the publicity of income-tax returns has been before the Congress, as I remember, in the consideration of every revenue bill since I have been a Member of the Senate. It was first proposed by the elder La Follette, as I recall. Extended arguments on the question were made during several different Congresses. The proposition was finally adopted by the Senate on a motion made by myself. The amendment went to the other House and was there rejected. The matter went to conference and was brought back here in a modified form. I mention this because of the suggestion made by the Senator from Michigan, who is not in the Chamber at the present time, in regard to a suggested amendment which he offered to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin. The emasculated form in which the conference committee agreed to the amendment, as I now remember, provided, in effect, that the records should be public and that the total amount of tax paid by the taxpayers should be given to the public upon request. Of course, those who favored the original amendment realized that the emasculated form in which it was left by the conference committee gave practically nothing; but that was the best that could then be obtained. It did not work successfully, because it gave no one any information of any importance and failed to bring any good result.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. DILL. The effect of it was, I may suggest to the Senator, to satisfy the curiosity of those who wanted the figures, without being of any real service to those who wanted to make the publicity provision of some value in insuring honest returns by individuals.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington is correct. The real object of an amendment of this kind is not to try to publish over the country information in regard to returns, although such a result might come, and would do no harm, in my judgment, but the real object that is sought to be attained by an amendment of this kind is to increase the honest revenue of the Government of the United States.

I think it will be conceded by everyone that secrecy in income-tax returns is a great inducement to those who desire to do so to make returns that are not full and complete, but which cover up information that ought to be given not only to the Government but to the public. This results in the amount of their taxes being very much reduced. No one can find out the details of such returns.

I do not believe that any great rush will be made to get information that may be available if such an amendment shall be adopted. Curiosity might cause those of an unusually inquisitive mind at first to seek access to the returns, but it would become one of the stable things connected with the Government, just as tax returns in every State in the Union, I believe, are available now to the public. The taxpayer in making his tax return submits a schedule of his property, signs it, and swears to it, and it is a public document.

In those States with which I am familiar, particularly my own, one can go into the county assessor's office and have access to a return made by any resident of the county for any reasonable length of time in the past—at least for several years. No one has ever been hurt by that provision. No one has ever been injured. Tax returns are public business, and publicity tends to make the taxpayer honest if he is inclined to be dishonest. It tends to make the honest man more careful in making his return, and the adoption of this amendment will bring into the Treasury of the Government of the United States millions and millions of extra dollars which will not come if returns shall continue to be secret. So far as I am concerned, that is the object I have in voting for such an amendment. I presume in this Chamber there is not a man who has made a property return to his local county assessor who has not had to account for his property and for his notes and bonds and securities which are taxable. He has had to account for all his other personal property. He has accounted for it in detail.

There are differences in the various laws, of course, but in a general way that is what happens every year of a man's life. He makes a return every year, and any citizen can go into the tax assessor's office and see what his return is. There has never been any trouble that I have ever heard of anywhere in the United States caused by an onrush of curiosity seekers who go there to see the returns made by citizens of the county. If that is true as to other tax returns, why should not the income-tax returns be public, too? If we have to return all our personal property, why should we not return our income and why should not one return be as public as the other? It makes no man pay a tax that he does not owe. It increases the amount of taxes collected. All students of the subject admit that it increases the amount very greatly, because it prevents the dishonest man from covering up his income. That is what we do not want to happen. It would be useless to enact an income tax law if we did not expect to tax the incomes of all citizens alike under the law. We ought to be more careful to get all the money coming from dishonest men as well as from honest men.

This provision will not hurt any citizen. It will bring millions of dollars into the Treasury of the United States without any injury to anybody. I see no reason why the same rule should not be applied to Federal income-tax returns that is applied everywhere in the taxation of property.

DR. WILLIAM A. WIRT

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate only a moment, merely to bring to its attention two telegrams which came to me from Gary, Ind., just today. One telegram reads as follows:

GARY, IND., April 12, 1934.

Senator ARTHUR R. ROBINSON,
Senate Building, Washington, D.C.:
Resent BULWINKLE's damaging statement concerning Dr. Wirt.
PETER GOUNOD,
President Dante Aligheri Lodge 1220, Order of Sons of Italy of America; also President Italo-American Political Club.

Another telegram reads as follows:

GARY, IND., April 12, 1934.

ARTHUR R. ROBINSON,
United States Senator, Washington, D.C.:
Pottawatamie Chapter N.S.D.A.R. resent falsification made by Mr. A. L. BULWINKLE regarding Dr. W. A. Wirt during World War and insist he retract same.
ALTA S. BABCOCK, Regent.

I also desire at this time to have inserted in the RECORD an article appearing in this morning's Washington Post entitled "Wirt's Answer to Secretary Ickes."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post of Friday, Apr. 13, 1934]

WIRT'S ANSWER TO SECRETARY ICKES—GARY EDUCATOR SAYS NEITHER HE NOR MEMBERS OF PARK PROMOTION CORPORATION SOUGHT ANY PUBLIC FUND OF ANY KIND

(Following is the text of a statement issued last night by Dr. William A. Wirt, Gary, Ind., educator, in answer to the statement of Secretary Ickes that Wirt was interested in a project to obtain $2,000,000 of Government funds for an amusement park in Porter County, Ind.:)

I have not been interested, and no one else connected with Dune Acres, Inc., referred to by Secretary Ickes, has been interested in securing money from any Federal, State, or local government for any sort of project.

For several years efforts had been made to preserve the scenic beauty of the famous Lake Michigan beach dune region in the adjoining county of Porter, east of Gary, as a State or national park. Finally the State of Indiana secured about half of the desired lake front and three of the dunes. The remaining area, including seven dunes, was doomed to be despoiled by encroaching industry.

A few public-spirited citizens in Gary organized Dune Acres, Inc., 12 years ago to preserve the part of the region that had not been taken by the State, and I was elected president of the corporation.

COMMUNITY GOT DEEDS

This was not a money-making project, but we hoped to make it self-liquidating by leasing residential lots on the parts not desirable for park purposes. The seven dunes and the entire beach frontage were set aside for public parks. As the proceeds from residential lot leases made it possible to pay for the dunes they were deeded to the community.

No promotion fees, no dividends whatsoever have been paid, and only absolutely essential salaries have been paid for operation and development of the area. I have carried all executive and administrative burdens for a yearly salary of $2,500 a year, out of which I have had to pay all office, stenographic, and clerical services.

The corporation secured a 99-year lease on the property, with an agreed purchase price of $600 an acre and an annual rental of $30 an acre and the taxes until the land was purchased. The land has been carried for 12 years, and the carrying charges with interest and taxes now amount to about $400 an acre.

Last December some people in Porter County proposed to develop with the aid of Federal funds a clubhouse and yacht basin, with recreation features on a part of this property. They asked Dune Acres, Inc., for an option. This we gave for 60 days, on the basis of $1,000 an acre for 100 acres having 2,000 feet of lake frontage. This lake frontage is within 30 miles of the downtown business district of Chicago.

No one connected with Dune Acres, Inc., is directly or indirectly connected with the company which asked for the Public Works money. I never mentioned the subject to any Federal or State official. In fact, the option was given by Dune Acres, Inc., because it was desired by the public. The option price was based on the first cost of the land plus the carrying charges for interest and taxes.

Neither I nor other directors of Dune Acres, Inc., knew anything about this project until last December, and we know very little yet. The option expired February 15, 1934, but would probably be renewed if public interest required it.

We have always been under the impression that we were performing a public service in trying to preserve the part of the region which the State of Indiana did not include in the State park.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, it seems rather remarkable that such a great effort should be made to stifle this inquiry. Everybody is talking about the same thing, not only in Washington but all over the United States, so why Dr. Wirt should be singled out to be pilloried and to be suppressed completely because he happens to place in direct, understandable words what everybody in the country is talking about is something that is difficult to understand.

Yesterday there appeared in the Washington Herald on the front page an editorial entitled "The Wirt Inquiry." I read just a few paragraphs:

His treatment by the House committee left much to be desired in courtesy and a just understanding of a respected citizen and a good American obviously attempting to perform what he considered a duty.

It is our belief—and, we think, that of most sound-thinking Americans—that he has rendered a distinct and valuable public service and is entitled to commendation.

The apparent determination of the special committee of the House to narrow the inquiry as much as possible by confining Dr. Wirt to a literal recital of precisely what was said to him, in what words and by whom, showed either a most unintelligent attitude toward the subject under examination, or a narrow and partisan effort to outdo zeal itself in punishing a man with the effrontery to call in question any phase of the national administration.

No one with regard for the truth will dispute the fact that the departments at Washington are full of rattle-brained college-boy advisers seeking to put into practice and write into administrative measures and regulations a lot of sickly Soviet bunk which their adolescent or halfbaked minds have not been able to digest or sensibly appraise.

Mr. President, I ask that the entire editorial may be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Herald, Thursday, Apr. 12, 1934]

THE WIRT INQUIRY

There can be no real doubt that Dr. William A. Wirt, of Gary, Ind., sincerely believes there is an element in the present administration, important in numbers and even more so in influence, which is aiming to bring about a social revolution in the United States.

Both in his letter of March 23, made public by James H. Rand, Jr., in testifying before the House Interstate Commerce Committee, and in his examination before the special committee of the House of Representatives, Dr. Wirt merely stated what is common talk in all circles in Washington and throughout the country.

His treatment by the House committee left much to be desired in courtesy and a just understanding of a respected citizen and a good American obviously attempting to perform what he considered a duty.

It is our belief—and, we think, that of most sound-thinking Americans—that he has rendered a distinct and valuable public service and is entitled to commendation.

The apparent determination of the special committee of the House to narrow the inquiry as much as possible by confining Dr. Wirt to a literal recital of precisely what was said to him, in what words and by whom, showed either a most unintelligent attitude toward the subject under examination, or a narrow and partisan effort to outdo zeal itself in punishing a man with the effrontery to call in question any phase of the national administration.

No one with regard for the truth will dispute the fact that the departments at Washington are full of rattle-brained college-boy advisers seeking to put into practice and write into administrative measures and regulations a lot of sickly Soviet bunk which their adolescent or half-baked minds have not been able to digest or sensibly appraise.

When the general counsel for the National Recovery Administration says in a public address, "The long-discussed revolution is actually under way in the United States. It is here. It is in process"—what earthly reason is there for trying to rend asunder the modest educator, Dr. Wirt, for saying far less?

How comic an old political warhorse like Speaker RAINEY appears, with his mock indignation against Dr. Wirt, when Secretary Wallace, of the President's Cabinet, is on record as holding that "Our people on the street and on the soil must change their attitude concerning the nature of men and the nature of human society", and discusses at great length the "Enduring social transformation, such as our new deal", interspersing his thesis with arguments for the necessity of a regimented public opinion, which if it means anything, means the suppression of free speech and a free press.

Disquieting and significant as such statements may be, they are nothing compared with the outgivings of Dr. Rexford Tugwell, whose influence and intimacy as an adviser of the President is perhaps as great as that of anyone within the Presidential circle.

Tugwell is now busy explaining and disavowing, but the frequency and unmistakable tolerance with which he cites the principles and the practices of the Soviet Republic render his disclaimers unconvincing.

If Congress is really desirous of finding out how dangerously radical some of the college-boy advisers of the administration are, it could do so readily by asking Mr. Richberg, General Johnson's chief adviser and aide, what he meant when he said, "The revolution is already here."

But, as we said, the investigating committee is evidently anxious to smother the whole discussion and is determined to do so, as was shown in its cavalier treatment of that fine American and distinguished former Senator, James A. Reed, who attempted unsuccessfully, as counsel, to secure for Dr. Wirt a genuine and proper hearing.

Whether the radicalism of the administration is really dangerous or not will be disclosed, however, sooner or later.

And there will be no doubt about it, if we have any more incidents like the air-mail fiasco.

HOARDERS OF SILVER

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, while I am on my feet, I desire to propound a question to the Chair with reference to a resolution adopted unanimously by the Senate some 2 or 3 weeks ago.

At that time a resolution (S.Res. 211) was introduced by myself asking the Secretary of the Treasury, if not incompatible with the public interest, to furnish the Senate with a list of the silver hoarders of the United States; those who, according to the Secretary, had been hoarding silver; the silver speculators who, he had charged, were not disinterested in seeking silver legislation at this session.

As I say, the resolution was unanimously adopted by the Senate. So far as I know, the Secretary of the Treasury has ignored it. I am wondering if the Chair has any information on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has no information on the subject.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, then I think the resolution ought to be brought to the attention of the Secretary again by the Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FESS. This morning's New York Herald Tribune contains an article with reference to the silver investigation, with the following heading, which may answer the question of the Senator:

Senate seeks data on silver in Wall Street—extension of inquiry to individual holdings of broker firms causes speculation in Capital—Treasury to get results of survey.

That may be what is going on.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, that may be true; but at the time of the adoption of my resolution, as much as 3 or 4 weeks ago, the Secretary of the Treasury said he then had information as to those who were speculating in silver or hoarding it to receive a higher price ultimately. What the Senate desired at the time, I think, was to know the names of those who were then silver hoarders. Of course, since then, during the last 3 or 4 weeks, they have had every opportunity in the world to sell out their holdings if they desired to do so; but the purpose of the resolution was to learn at the time who then were doing the speculating and to have the names furnished to the Senate.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. May I point out that, according to the press reports, Mr. Pecora, the counsel for the Banking and Currency Committee, has sent out a questionnaire to the members of the New York Stock Exchange asking for certain information on this subject? While I have not the exact form of the questionnaire or the particular information he is seeking, I suggest to the Senator from Indiana that he might confer with Mr. Pecora. I think, by so doing, he could secure some enlightenment on the question he is raising.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan, if he has the information, whether this questionnaire goes back to March, at the time the statement was originally made by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. COUZENS. As I stated to the Senator, I have not seen the questionnaire and do not know its exact form; but I thought, as long as the Senator was making an inquiry, he could perhaps get more direct information by asking Mr. Pecora for a copy of the questionnaire, to see whether it satisfies his wishes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I shall be glad to do that; but of course I assume that that is the Senate committee's questionnaire. The resolution to which I refer undertook to elicit from the Secretary of the Treasury the information he had at that time with reference to the charges he had made that there were certain interests in the country that were hoarding silver and speculating in the metal for their own gain, and that they were not disinterested in legislation that was being sought at the moment to place a higher value on silver.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. I understood—and I am speaking only from press reports—that the information Mr. Pecora is getting is being sought at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury to supplement the information the Secretary had, in response to the resolution of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I thank the Senator for the statement.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana allow me to interpolate a remark?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. It is but fair to the Secretary of the Treasury that we say, in connection with the statement made by the Senator from Indiana, that the Secretary has made it plain that any allusions he made as to anyone being interested touching silver did not in anywise apply to any Member of Congress, nor were they intended so to reflect.

Mr. GLASS. But they ought to apply to any Member of Congress who is engaged in that sort of business.

Mr. LEWIS. The Secretary stated, however, that he had no evidence of such interest.

Mr. COUZENS. The statement, as I understood, said that the names the Secretary had did not include any Member of Congress.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, this morning there was published in the New York Herald Tribune an editorial, part of which reads as follows:

On March 15 last Secretary Morgenthau announced that the Department of the Treasury had investigated the ownership of the some 200,000,000 ounces of silver held speculatively in the United States, and that on the basis of that investigation he was convinced that the agitation for further silver aid was not all disinterested.

We believe that Secretary Morgenthau should not have stopped there. We believe that he should have made known the names of the principal holders of these unprecedently huge stocks of silver. We believe that such a course now is more imperative than ever, since the legislation just proposed would direct the Government to relieve owners of these silver stocks of their holdings. If there is any connection between the speculative interest in silver, and the present move to nationalize the metal, then the country is by all means entitled to know it.

DR. WILLIAM A. WIRT

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Indiana had diverted from the subject of Dr. Wirt to the subject of silver I was anxious to put before the Senate an editorial which appeared in the Washington News of today. That paper has the knack of writing the best editorials I have had the pleasure of reading, and I desire to read this one to the Senate. It is entitled:

OTHER REVOLUTIONISTS

Now that the public has had its laugh at Dr. Wirt, whose revolutionary plot bomb turned out to be only a firecracker, a more serious question arises. Why is Dr. Wirt and his group of the Committee for the Nation so anxious to destroy public confidence in the Roosevelt administration and the new deal? And why do they stoop to such methods?

Governmental red bugaboos of this kind are not new; every 2 or 3 years they are manufactured. But they usually are not taken seriously by anyone but the illiterate and ignorant.

Mr. Rand, the big industrialist and active head of the Committee for the Nation, is an exceedingly intelligent and reputable citizen. It was he who first peddled the Wirt stuff to Congress and forced national publicity. Mr. Rand must have known then, as the world knows now, its puny and contradictory nature.

The country is accustomed to irresponsible old ladies of both sexes shadow-flirting with such goblins. The country is also aware that unscrupulous men sometimes use these red fakes to mask their own selfish purposes, as described some years ago by R. R. McGregor, head of the National Electric Light Association's Illinois branch: "My idea would be not to try logic or reason but to try to pin the Bolshevik idea on my opponent."

Unwilling to class the reputable leaders of the Committee for the Nation in either of those two irresponsible classes, we wonder how and why such men as Mr. Rand got involved in this shady performance. If they were fooled and were not trying to mislead the public by smearing the new deal, is it not about time that they say so?

After all they are a propaganda organization working for what is described as a "revolutionary" monetary change. Is it not fair that the full purposes and operations of such an organization be as open as the Tugwell and Wallace public speeches out of which the Wirt hoax was spun?

EDITORIAL EXPRESSION OF VIRGINIA NEWSPAPERS—AIR-MAIL CONTRACTS

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I assume that the debate on the amendment tendered by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has about ended; and now, when we are in the midst of attaching importance—perhaps proper importance—to newspaper utterances, I wish to mention a more or less inconsequential matter.

I am the publisher of two newspapers in Virginia. Both of them are edited by very bright and virile young men; and they sometimes—in fact, I might modestly say for them that they frequently—write very striking editorials.

Not long ago one of these editorials was reproduced in a Washington newspaper in a very conspicuous way—double-columned, double-leaded, double-headed—and ascribed to me because I am the owner of the newspaper.

Several days ago one of these editorials was inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with mention of the fact that the paper was owned "by Senator GLASS", the implication being that the editorial voiced my sentiments and my convictions.

Mr. President, I trust that will not become a habit, because I do not undertake to control the editorial utterances of my newspapers. They have but one standing order, and that is that they shall say nothing abusive of me and nothing of a commendatory nature of me. As to their utterances in other respects, I have nothing whatsoever to do with them.

This editorial introduced into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD undertakes to condemn the administration for what the editor conceives to be its precipitate action in revoking the air-mail contracts. I do not know whether the action was precipitate or not, or whether it was justified. I am not apologizing for the editorial, because it simply followed the general comment of the press throughout the United States in characterizing the action as precipitate. But I do not want it understood, because this editorial appeared in my newspaper, that it voiced my convictions, because I do not know whether the action was precipitate or not.

I simply know, as I have stated several times upon the Senate floor, that, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate for 4 or 5 years, I have protested against the extravagant appropriations for the air mail; and I repeat now what I have several times said, that of all the extravagant luxuries in which we indulge I think the air mail is the worst, and I would abolish it completely.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 1075. An act for the relief of Walter Thomas Foreman;

S. 1934. An act conferring jurisdiction upon certain courts of the United States to hear and determine the claim by the owner of the four-masted auxiliary bark Quevilly against the United States, and for other purposes; and

S. 1935. An act to amend the act of March 2, 1929, conferring jurisdiction upon certain courts of the United States to hear and determine the claim by the owner of the S.S. W. I. Radcliffe against the United States, and for other purposes.

REGULATION OF THE COTTON INDUSTRY—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BANKHEAD submitted the following report, which was ordered to lie on the table:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8402) to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 5, 7, 8, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 6, 9, 10, and 19, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert a comma and the following: " but if the President finds that the economic emergency in cotton production and marketing will continue or is likely to continue to exist so that the application of this act with respect to the crop year 1935–36 is imperative in order to carry out the policy declared in section 1, he shall so proclaim, and this act shall be effective with respect to the crop year 1935–36. If at any time prior to the end of the crop year 1935–36, the President finds that the economic emergency in cotton production and marketing has ceased to exist, he shall so proclaim, and no tax under this act shall be levied with respect to cotton harvested after the effective date of such proclamation "; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert a comma and the following: " for the crop year 1935–36, if the provisions of this act are effective for such crop year, that two thirds of the persons who have the legal or equitable right as owner, tenant, share cropper, or otherwise to produce cotton on any cotton farm, or part thereof, in the United States for such crop year "; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert " $1,000, or by imprisonment for not exceeding 6 months, or both "; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert:

" SEC. 24. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to develop new and extended uses for cotton, and for such purpose there is authorized to be made available to the Secretary not to exceed $500,000 out of the funds available to him under section 12 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the House.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that on the 13th instant the President approved and signed the following acts:

S. 194. An act to change the name of B Street SW., in the District of Columbia;

S. 552. An act for the relief of Manuel Merritt;

S. 682. An act to prohibit financial transactions with any foreign government in default on its obligations to the United States;

S. 2006. An act for the relief of Della D. Ledendecker;

S. 2057. An act authorizing the sale of certain property no longer required for public purposes in the District of Columbia;

S. 2324. An act for the relief of the Noank Shipyard, Inc.;

S. 2509. An act to readjust the boundaries of Whitehaven Parkway at Huidekoper Place in the District of Columbia, provide for an exchange of land, and for other purposes;

S. 2545. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at or near Astoria, Oreg.;

S. 2550. An act granting an easement over certain lands to the Springfield Special Road District in the county of Greene, State of Missouri, for road purposes;

S. 2675. An act creating the Cairo Bridge Commission and authorizing said commission and its successors to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Cairo, Ill.;

S. 2689. An act to authorize the Department of Labor to make special statistical studies upon payment of the cost thereof, and for other purposes; and

S. 2729. An act to repeal an act of Congress entitled "An act to prohibit the manufacture or sale of alcoholic liquors in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes ", approved February 14, 1917, and for other purposes.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] relative to the publicity of income-tax returns.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, having reference to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] providing for publicity of income-tax returns, the inference from what has been said in support of this amendment is that there is wholesale evasion of income taxes by fraud, and that publicity of income-tax returns would be corrective of that.

The Senator from Wisconsin, whose motives are the highest, and whose public service is distinguished, has stated that, following the adoption of the publicity feature of the income tax law in Wisconsin, income-tax collections were increased $3,500,000, and the implication again was that that represented taxes which had been fraudulently withheld.

The assumption that the Federal Government does nothing about correcting income-tax returns is greviously in error. The Federal Government maintains an army of income-tax investigators. They report annually approximately $75,000,000 in additional income taxes. All of that money does not represent, by any means, fraudulent evasion by the taxpayer. I think the fraudulent taxpayer is a rare exception. I think the failure to pay most of that money is due to misunderstanding of the provisions of law, and frequently to court decisions subsequently made settling questions of interpretation.

If the Senator from Wisconsin should modify his amendment to provide publicity of the names of taxpayers merely, I should be for it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I may say that the present law so provides.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is provided in the existing law.

Mr. MURPHY. I understand that. If it were intended to continue that merely, I should be for it. The amendment as offered would destroy all privacy of an individual. It would permit the public to go in and inspect the return of the individual. I submit that that is not necessary. The good that has come out of recent income-tax disclosures has come from committees of Congress and not from publicity. Congress may have all returns for public purpose.

Mr. President, back in 1930 and 1931 Mr. Morgan did not pay an income tax. The publication of the returns of taxpayers would have disclosed that Mr. Morgan did not pay an income tax. I am not sure that it was not fortunate that it was not known that Mr. Morgan did not have to pay an income tax due to losses. Who can say what the psychological effect would have been if that had become common knowledge back in those troublous days of 1931 and 1932, and the report had gone forth that the House of Morgan was in a bad way? Who will say that there would not have been dire consequences of that report?

We assume that virtue attaches per se to all publicity, and so publicity was required of R.F.C. loans. I grant that it served a useful purpose in the publication of the fact of the loan to Mr. Dawes. On the other hand, two runs were made on a bank in my home town, and it withstood them. Later its necessities compelled it to borrow $375,000 from the R.F.C., and immediately following the publication of the borrowing of that money the third and fatal run started on the bank, and it went down.

A further effect of that publicity provision was that many banks would not borrow from the R.F.C., because the loans would appear in their bills payable, and it would be the signal for a run on their deposits.

Mr. President, I think we ought to leave some privacy to the taxpayer. I do not believe we ought to dedicate ourselves to furnishing a fine morsel of gossip for Mrs. Grundy to roll around the bridge table with a relish that a cow rolls its cud. I very well remember the farmer who, about to pay $2, turned his back on you and unwound a shoestring from his purse and did not let you see what was in the purse. There was something sacred in his right to secrecy as to what he had.

We are interested in the income tax merely as a means of providing revenue. We are not interested in disclosing the private affairs of the millions of taxpayers to the Mrs. Grundys.

The large taxpayers are not evading their taxes illegally. They are employing the best talent available to ascertain how to evade the law and yet keep within its provisions. Publicity of income-tax returns is not going to help as respects them.

An amendment I submitted yesterday, and which the Senate adopted, closed a hole through which millions have been lost to the Government. An amendment which I offered, and which the Senate did not see fit to adopt, affecting capital gains, would have closed the door through which a billion has been lost to the Government. Those are the abuses to the correction of which we ought to dedicate our efforts, and we should not dedicate them to bringing embarrassment needlessly and uselessly, invading the privacy and the peace and the happiness of people who feel that they have a right to keep their own affairs to themselves, consenting that the Government shall discharge its functions as respects the investigation of returns through agents employed by it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE obtained the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? I have been trying to get the floor for 2 or 3 hours to put a telegram in the RECORD.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Is the Senator intending to debate the telegram?

Mr. LONG. No; I just want to have it read.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

NOMINATION OF D. D. MOORE

Mr. LONG. I send to the desk two exhibits for the RECORD. I ask that the one headed "Transactions of the Hibernia Homestead Association with the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, New Orleans, La.", which explains the telegram, be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object to the request of the Senator from Louisiana, may I ask the Senator from Louisiana whether these documents he now proposes to have read, bearing upon the nomination of Mr. D. D. Moore, were in his possession while we have been holding hearings in the Committee on Finance with reference to that matter?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I would say to the Senator that the document as abstracted was presented to the Senate Finance Committee this morning, but the matter is of such public interest that I am sending it to the desk to have it read.

Mr. BARKLEY. Was this telegram which is proposed to be read in the possession of the Senator this morning?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Was it offered as evidence to the committee?

Mr. LONG. The bank examiner was there to testify to the exhibit. The telegram will explain it, since I cannot put the witness before the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Was the telegram in the Senator's possession?

Mr. LONG. Oh, yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. And was the other document in the Senator's possession?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Why did not the Senator put them in the hearing?

Mr. LONG. It was all put in the hearings. The entire subject matter is in the hearings.

Mr. BARKLEY. What is the necessity then for having it put in the RECORD?

Mr. LONG. I want the balance of the Senate, and the Government as a whole, and the people as a whole, to have the advantage of gleaning the knowledge—the authenticated knowledge—that out of loans, say, of $3,000, more than half is being taken from the Government and home owners and going into private hands, so that the Government would be able, with those facts before it, to prevent such activities from spreading, and also prevent them from happening further in the Commonwealth of Louisiana.

Mr. BARKLEY. May I inquire whether these documents which it is now proposed to publish in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, were in the possession of the Senator when the State manager of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation testified before the Senate Finance Committee?

Mr. LONG. Similar ones were, but not this particular one. I will say to my friend from Kentucky that the reason was that they closed down the Home Owners' Loan and would not let us get this particular information when the first 65 cases were discovered. They would not let us have the data on the last five, and we were delayed a couple of days, which necessitated the delay in putting them in the RECORD. We discovered 65 cases of outright fraud, but these last 5 are simply to supplement the others.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not going to object to the insertion of this particular document in the RECORD——

Mr. LONG. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. But I think in view of the fact that for the last 2 weeks the Senate Committee on Finance has held hearings on these matters, and that the committee has brought scores of witnesses to Washington at public expense to find out about the nomination that is now in question, there have been entirely too many documents inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which were not offered to the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the telegram.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., April 12, 1934.

Hon. J. S. BROCK,
State Bank Commissioner of Louisiana,
Care of Hon. Huey P. Long, United States Senator,
Washington, D.C.:

Following transactions through Hibernia Homestead Association. Mr. and Mrs. R. Bennett owed association $3,126.17 through transfers and retransfers interposing A. L. Sizeler, all dated February 6. Homestead accepted $3,300 its stock in full settlement, Bennett executed mortgage to Home Owners' Loan Corporation of $2,949.35; Home Owners' Loan Corporation made available $2,740.74; bonds quoted at 97⅞; profit, $1,337.

Mrs. Howard W. McCoy owed association $7,165.57 through transfers and retransfers, interposing I. Forcheimer, all dated March 19. Association accepted $7,100 its stock in full settlement. Home Owners' Loan Corporation made loan on same property for $6,710.14, making available therefrom $6,065.35 in bonds quoted at 97¼; profit $3,059.

In connection with above transactions, notaries-public records would not yield information concerning deductions, if any, for repairs. Deductions figured for payment of taxes and paving.

In connection with following transactions, figures cover all deductions:

W. C. Maher owed association $2,861.06 through transfers and retransfers, interposing Thrift Realty, Inc., A. L. Sizeler's company, all dated March 14. Association accepted $2,900 of its shares in full settlement. Home Owners' Loan Corporation made loan on same property in amount $3,592.49, out of which was made available bonds in the amount of $2,861.06, quoted at 97⅜; profit $1,625.

Mrs. L. J. Klein owed association $2,712.85, through transfers and retransfers, all dated March 23, interposing J. H. Brown. Association accepted $2,800 of its share in full settlement. Home Owners' Loan Corporation made loan on same property of $3,017.89, making available in bonds $2,712.85, quoted at 98⅛; profit $1,541.

P. L. Miller owed association $1,989.35 through transfers and retransfers, all dated March 29, interposing A. L. Sizeler. Association accepted $2,000 of its shares in full settlement. Home Owners' Loan Corporation made loan on same property in amount $2,866.28, making available in bonds $1,989.35, quoted at 99⅛; profit $1,171.

In connection with Miller transaction, $1,700 Hibernia Homestead shares canceled were the property of A. S. Cain, its secretary. Value of $40 per share given Homestead stock in all cases.

J. H. Brown, interposed in one of the above deals, is husband of the assistant secretary of Hibernia Homestead Association. Figures used in connection with loans made by Home Owners' Loan Corporation and deductions therefrom obtained from offices of the notaries public who passed the acts. Although these were entirely Hibernia Homestead transactions, Home Owners' Loan Corporation, through Showalter, refused to give the association information as to net amount of bonds made available.

W. E. WOOD,
Assistant Supervisor.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] providing publicity for income-tax returns.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words in reply to the remarks of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY].

In the first place I made no statement that there was wholesale evasion of taxation by fraud. I did say, and I reiterate, that the greater portion of the pending bill is the result of the exposures of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency with regard to income-tax avoidance. It was the result of that investigation which turned the attention of the Congress and the experts of the Treasury itself upon these forms of legalized tax evasion that have been worked out by some large income-tax payers and their tax attorneys.

I did say, and it is a fact, that when we had secrecy on income-tax returns in Wisconsin, and a back audit was made for a 6-year period, that the tax commission collected 3½ million dollars which had been fraudulently or erroneously withheld from payment into the treasury of the State. I said further that since that time, 1923, when income-tax returns have been made public records in my State, there has been no such wholesale nor such willful withholding or underestimate of taxes.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to his colleague?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. DUFFY. Does the Senator know of any other of the 29 States that have State income-tax laws that has a similar provision to that of Wisconsin?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I think Wisconsin is the only State that I know of.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Since the State of Wisconsin has had publicity of income-tax returns, has the State experienced, as is claimed by some will happen in this instance, a great onrush of the public to find out and to publish everything that they can determine from these returns? Has there been any activity in that direction?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator from Iowa read into the RECORD an excerpt from the report of the Wisconsin

Tax Commission in 1930, in which the commission went on record in favor of repeal of the provision making income-tax returns public records, and cited as one of the reasons that in one or two of the offices of the commission it had been necessary for one clerk to be assigned to wait upon those who wished to see returns. It also stated that in some instances individuals interested in the collection of bills, or collection agencies, had employed returns for that purpose. But, as I pointed out at that time, no action has been taken by the legislature, and, so far as I know, no Governor since 1930 has recommended or urged that there should be any change in this policy, which has prevailed since 1923, and I feel certain that no such legislation could be passed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I recently received a new objection to this proposal, and I should like to have the views of the Senator from Wisconsin with respect to it. One of the leading employers in my State wrote protesting against making public, through the income-tax publicity, the pay rolls of his employees. I was wondering if the Senator from Wisconsin had any experience with that phase of the subject.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Not that I know of. Mr. President, I want to quote to the Senate a statement from Dr. C. C. Plehn, connected with the University of California for a number of years and who was formerly president of the American Economic Association and of the National Tax Conference. He says:

> To a people unaccustomed to an income tax it may seem that one's income is a very intimate, personal, and private affair, and there is a natural dread of letting one's business rivals know one's business. But, as a matter of fact, the income-tax statement or return would be no more likely to be examined out of sheer curiosity or for purposes of gossip than are the property-tax returns, about which no such veil of secrecy is drawn, and the business rival generally has better information already than he could possibly obtain from the returns. Against such dark secrecy it may well be urged that it is very important to feel assured that all incomes—my neighbor's as well as mine—are fairly and truly assessed, a thing that can never be if the final assessments never see the light of day. Fear of publicity is a bogie man.

Mr. President, if an investigating committee could continue the activities which the Senate Banking and Currency Committee have carried on, perhaps the argument in support of this amendment would not be so persuasive as I feel it to be.

Mr. President, there is the more important consideration, as I view it, that under the present law when the individual income-tax payer sits down to make out his return, if, upon his own initiative or upon the advice of an attorney, he makes a fraudulent return he knows that that return is to be shrouded in secrecy and, in many instances, perhaps he does not hesitate to follow such a course; but if he knows that his return is a matter of public record, he will hesitate a long time before he will resort to any device designed to relieve him of his fair share of the tax.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, when this proposition was previously before the Senate at the special session I supported it, and I believe that I shall support it again, but my experience in Wisconsin, the only State, according to my colleague, which has experimented in this way in the case of income-tax returns, is that there is considerable justification for the criticisms which were made by the Wisconsin Tax Commission in 1930. I have known of numerous instances in my State, especially in lawsuits, where income-tax returns, being public records, were used for purely private purposes, and not for the purpose of obtaining more taxes for the State government. I know that certain investigations to determine a man's credit have been the basis of the examination of individual tax returns; and I think there has been considerable prying into the returns. While all those abuses, I think, have existed, and do, to some extent, still exist, it seems to me that under this amendment, which provides that such returns shall be open to public examination under rules and regulations to be promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury and approved by the President, there might be some such restrictions imposed as would do away with prying for private purposes and the inspection of tax returns not for the purpose of helping the Government collect more taxes or to prevent fraud.

I desire to make this statement to the Senate because I have been active in the practice of the law in Wisconsin, and have seen the privilege of inspecting tax returns used for various private purposes; but if certain restrictions, which I think can be incorporated in the regulations shall be provided, I believe that perhaps the good that will come from having income-tax returns open to the public will outweigh the disadvantages which I feel will accompany unrestricted publicity.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I do not want to rehash this question, because every time it has come before the Senate, while I have been here, I have voted for publicity of returns; but particularly do I want to draw to the attention of the Senate the fact that the select committee of the Senate which investigated the Internal Revenue Bureau for a number of years found that in many instances employees and the chiefs of bureaus in the Department of Internal Revenue made rulings as to one corporation which they refused to apply to another corporation or other corporations. In other words, I think we found over a thousand different rulings with respect to the interpretation of the law as applied to deductions and credits which were applied in the cases of some corporation but denied application in the cases of other corporations. Those rulings were not published, although it was provided by a regulation of the Internal Revenue Department that all such decisions and rulings should be published. In fact, we found in our investigation that some of the rulings, after having been promulgated by the general counsel or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, had notations on them, "This ruling not to apply to any other case."

I submit that a corporation or an individual securing a special ruling for a specific case should not have that exclusively applied to it or him without having it apply, under like circumstances, to other corporations or other individuals.

There is now no way by which the counsel for one corporation can ascertain the ruling which was applied to another corporation unless he has access to the returns to determine the application of the ruling. Such an opportunity is not afforded by the present law but it would be afforded should this amendment be adopted. That is one consideration which is very important but which has not been spoken of today. That is the reason I take the liberty at this time to mention it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I shall occupy the time of the Senate for only a few moments merely to state my opposition to this amendment.

Before doing that, may I say, Mr. President, there is every reason why we should finish this bill this afternoon. I think there are only two or three amendments that will be offered, and I believe there will not be much discussion on them. So I appeal to Senators that we may keep away from extraneous discussions and confine ourselves to the issue, so that we may pass this bill today and follow it with another important measure.

It will be recalled that in 1924 we adopted an amendment along the lines of the suggested pending amendment providing for the publicity of income-tax returns. There will be recalled also the storm of protest that went up from one end of the country to the other as the figures were published in all the newspapers, furnishing choice items of gossip around the table and topics for tête-à-têtes in fashionable and other places.

Every essential provision, it seems to me, Mr. President, is in the present law. I wish to say to my Democratic friends that the President has now been in control of the affairs of the Government at the White House for over a year. He has given this question consideration from every angle. Under the present law the President of the United States is empowered to promulgate all necessary regulations providing for every kind of publicity that he thinks should be accorded. He has not seen fit to follow the suggestion outlined in this amendment, and I submit that it ought not to be adopted, not only because the President of the United States has not seen fit to exercise his authority to provide greater publicity but because of the experience we had from 1924 to 1926. Following that experience we repealed, in 1926, the publicity provision of the previous revenue act and gave to the President the full power to make such regulations regarding the publicity of income-tax returns as he might see fit.

I know that the Secretary of the Treasury is working upon certain regulations which may provide greater publicity with reference to income-tax returns. In my opinion, the regulations thus to be prepared may provide for the publication of the amount which each individual pays in income taxes. It may be provided in the regulations that anyone may go to the Department and ascertain the amount of income tax an individual pays; but this amendment not only makes it mandatory upon the President of the United States to provide for publicity, but it gives to every individual in this country the right to go to the Internal Revenue Bureau and scan every man's income tax in every particular, to pry into it in any way, giving the opportunity perhaps to competitors to use the information to their own advantage and also opportunity to curiosity seekers merely to satisfy their own curiosity.

I am not going to debate this question further. The Senate knows what it wants to do; and I will submit it to a vote. If the Senate wants a record vote I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GIBSON (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], who is unavoidably detained from the Senate. If he were present, he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea." Not being able to secure a transfer of my pair, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] because of very serious illness in his family, and to announce that he has a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED].

I also wish to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], who is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN]. If present, the Senator from Nevada would vote "yea", and the Senator from New Jersey would vote "nay."

I announce the necessary absence of the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], who is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT].

I also announce the absence on official business of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], and announce that were the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] present he would vote "yea", and were the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] present he would vote "nay."

I also announce the necessary absence of my colleague the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], who has a special pair on this question with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. If present, the Senator from Montana would vote "yea", and the Senator from Illinois would vote "nay."

I announce also the necessary absence of the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], who has a special pair on this question with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. If present, the Senator from Georgia would vote "yea", and the Senator from Maryland would vote "nay."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] were present he would vote "yea."

I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] and to state that, if present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. HATFIELD (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], who is absent on official business. Not knowing how he would vote, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I find that I can transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] to the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], which I do, and vote "yea."

Mr. HEBERT. I announce the absence of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], who are in attendance upon the committee investigating air-mail contracts; also the absence on official business of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT]. I am informed that if present the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] would vote "nay" on this question.

I also wish to announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] are necessarily absent.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THOMPSON], and the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 34, as follows:

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which section 141 of the bill was stricken out yesterday, the motion to strike out having been made by the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

I do not desire to discuss the motion to reconsider at all, but I should like to have it voted on.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the motion to reconsider will be discussed.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the Senator from Delaware will not press his motion to reconsider that vote. I say that for the reasons I am about to state.

I voted with the Senator from Delaware. I feel just as strongly now as I felt when I addressed the Senate in opposition to the motion of the Senator from Idaho to eliminate consolidated returns. The motion prevailed, however. I do not know whether or not there has been any shift of votes. There ought not to be a shift of votes. Members of the Senate ought to know, when they vote, what they are voting for; and I accept their votes as expressing their judgment.

After amendments are adopted or defeated here, if motions are to be constantly made to reconsider the votes by which they were adopted or defeated, we shall never finish the consideration of this bill. In this case, the question involved will go to conference. It will be in issue between the two Houses. Therefore, I hope the Senator from Delaware will not press his motion to reconsider the action on that amendment; and I say the same thing to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], who entered a motion to reconsider the vote upon another amendment which I opposed.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I am in general sympathy with the attitude of the Senator from Mississippi on the matter of reconsidering amendments. I should like to direct his attention, however, to an occasion not very many weeks ago when the Senate had solemnly adopted an amendment to a very important bill, and the Senator from Mississippi spent the night working very hard to change votes and then came in next morning and made a motion to reconsider, which was carried. It seems to me there ought to be some consistency. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. That is quite true, and I think the motion I made the next day prevailed; but the question was deeper-seated, and there were greater reasons for reconsideration then than there are in this particular case.

Some Senators may have the physical strength to contest these matters here for weeks and for months, but some of us have not. Of course the Senator from Delaware has a perfect right to make his motion to reconsider. I am merely expressing a desire that we may finish the consideration of this bill today; and I do hope that, if any motion to reconsider is made, we shall not consume too much time in its discussion.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. I think my motion is not an unreasonable one. Except for the change of my own vote, there was a difference of only 1 vote in the roll call on this question yesterday. At least two Senators have returned to the Chamber who were not here yesterday, and I am sure they would like to have an opportunity to vote upon the question. I do not know what the result will be.

I will state to the Senator from Mississippi that I have not tried to get any votes for this amendment or for this motion. I am anxious, however, in view of the close vote yesterday, that the Senate have an opportunity again to pass upon the question. I am anxious that that shall be done without argument, if possible, although I assume it is not possible. I do not care to discuss the matter myself, because I think the Senate knows perfectly well what it is about, but I should like to know whether or not my motion will prevail. If it does not prevail, I shall have no complaint to make about it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I am not criticizing the Senator from Delaware. The Senator from Delaware is a member of the Finance Committee. He has rendered fine service on the committee. He has attended the sessions during the consideration of this bill, and he has a perfect right to make the motion. I was merely expressing the hope that we might finish the consideration of this bill tonight, and that we might not reconsider too many votes.

Of course, I shall vote for the motion to reconsider if the Senator insists upon it, carrying out the consistency of my position in voting against the original proposal; but I had hoped the Senator would not insist upon his motion to reconsider.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, upon yesterday I moved that the following words be stricken from the bill:

> In the case of a corporation, the amount received as dividends from a domestic corporation which is subject to taxation under this title.

Those words are found in subdivision (p) of section 23. I move to reconsider the vote by which that motion was rejected.

Mr. President, some changes have taken place since yesterday afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Idaho will be entered. The other motion, that of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], is now pending.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to discuss the two motions together. I realize that technically I cannot make the motion at this time, but I can have it before the Senate as the next question.

As I say, there have been some changes since yesterday afternoon. I do not know whether there have been any changes in votes or not, but there has been a tremendous activity. Persons have come here not Members of the Senate, who are interested in this matter from a financial standpoint, and have exerted every possible influence—in terms of honesty, I assume—to bring about a change in the vote. I do not want this question of reconsideration to go to a vote without a very thorough presentation of all the facts, both with reference to what has happened since yesterday afternoon and with reference to the question upon its merits.

Mr. President, when the motion was carried to strike out section 141, it had no other effect than to send the matter to conference, where it could be considered by conferees, who would not be in anyway prejudiced in its favor. The conferees would have been exclusively Members of both Houses who had voted against the amendment; so it is to be assumed that the amendment would have been considered from the standpoint of the motion now made, at least with a degree of unconscious bias. All we were asking was that the matter be considered in conference, it being admitted upon the floor, even by those opposed to it, that there were defects in the provisions with reference to consolidated returns.

It must be conceded that there are some companies which ought not to be permitted to enjoy the benefits of consolidated returns. It is claimed that there are other companies which possibly might be excepted from the effect of the provision as to consolidated returns, and in fairness and justice excepted. In my own view there should be no exceptions. My own view is that everyone should stand before the law imposing taxes upon his individuality, corporate or personal, and that every corporation should make its individual returns. It is the only way in which the real facts with reference to tax liabilities can be established. If, however, there are corporations which it would seem to some ought to be excepted, that matter may be taken care of by the conferees. It is now proposed by this motion to prevent a subject of this importance and this intricacy from being considered by the conferees.

Mr. President, let us read the two proposals together and see just who it is who is so greatly interested in defeating the action of yesterday.

In the section I have just read, among the things that may be deducted from the gross amount of income is—

> In case of a corporation, the amount received as dividends from a domestic corporation which is subject to taxation under this title.

In other words, the great holding companies of the country have permission under this provision to except from their returns all dividends received upon stock in subsidiary corporations. The result is that the great holding companies of the country, holding sometimes as high as 70 and 80 subsidiary corporations, organized for the purpose of making profits themselves, may except from their returns all dividends received upon the stock of their subsidiary corporations.

That is a special invitation to holding companies to organize. They occupy a position under the taxing law which no other corporation occupies. They have an advantage which no other corporation has; and therefore during the past twenty-odd years a large number of holding companies have sprung up.

I read yesterday something as to the extent to which these holding companies have been organized. I desire to call attention to some additional facts in regard to the matter, so that the Senate may know who it is who is so anxious that this subject be not permitted to go before the conferees for consideration. As they do under the tax law already, they desire to step from under any further survey or examination upon the part of anyone.

For the purpose of illustration, I read a single paragraph:

Now, to whom does the Central Gas & Electric Co. belong? To another holding company, the Central Public Service Co. And to whom does that belong? To the Central Public Service Corporation. That owns and controls the stock in the Central Public Service Co. And to whom does this Central Public Service Corporation belong? It belongs to the Public Utility Holding Co., which I believe does not own all the stock in this company, but enough to exercise a controlling influence in its affairs. And to whom does the Public Utility Holding Co. belong? It belongs to a concern which it is very difficult to define, a kind of hybrid holding-financing-trading-investment trust company, the American Founders.

And then, in another illustration, the writer of this volume gives an account of holding companies having control and in many instances owning the entire stock of 90 subsidiary companies.

Why are these companies organized? They are organized, as said by the able Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] yesterday, in many instances for the purpose of deception; in many instances for the purpose of evading the law with reference to the control of utilities. They are organized because they have a special advantage in the financial world in the management and control of their subsidiaries. We are asking that they shall account for the income which they receive upon the stock of their holding companies.

I ask the Senate, in all fairness, upon what theory are there excepted from the operation of the tax law the gains, the profits—because that is what is taxed—upon the stock held by these corporations?

I have read to the Senate the provision with reference to the deduction found on page 26. Now we turn to the privilege to file consolidated returns:

An affiliated group of corporations shall, subject to the provisions of this section, have the privilege of making a consolidated return for the taxable year in lieu of separate returns. The making of a consolidated return shall be upon the condition that all the corporations which have been members of the affiliated group at any time during the taxable year for which the return is made consent to all the regulations under subsection (b) (or, in case such regulations are not prescribed prior to the making of the return, then the regulations prescribed under section 141 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1932 insofar as not inconsistent with this act) prescribed prior to the making of such return; and the making of a consolidated return shall be considered as such consent. In the case of a corporation which is a member of the affiliated group for a fractional part of the year the consolidated return shall include the income of such corporation for such part of the year as it is a member of the affiliated group.

Then are given the regulations. The matter of consolidated returns has been before the Congress of the United States for about 14 years, and an amendment to strike out the provision allowing the privilege of making such a return has always been defeated in the Senate. Upon two different occasions the House struck out the provision with reference to consolidated returns. Upon those two occasions it was placed back by the Senate.

A committee was appointed by the Committee on Ways and Means of the House to study the question of tax avoidance, and had this to say:

Section 141 of existing law permits corporations which are affiliated to file consolidated returns. Your committee recommends that this permission be withdrawn.

This recommendation was made by a subcommittee investigating this question after weeks and weeks of hearing and study upon the part of the committee, after taking the testimony of those who were opposed and those who favored it, and practically all the testimony, or a large percentage of it, came from those who were opposed. After considering their explanation, the reasons given by them, the committee having charge of the matter, after due reflection, recommended that the privilege be withdrawn.

The report of the committee further stated:

The subject of consolidated returns has long been in controversy. The revenue bill of 1918, as passed by the House, prohibited the consolidated return which had been previously allowed under the regulations of the Treasury Department. The bill as passed by the Senate and finally enacted specifically provided for the consolidated return. The revenue bill of 1928, as passed by the House, denied the right to file consolidated returns, but this provision was eliminated in the Senate. During the consideration of the revenue bill of 1932 a compromise was effected, resulting in the levying of an additional tax of three fourths of 1 percent on the consolidated net income. This additional tax was increased to 1 percent by the National Industrial Recovery Act.

It cannot be denied that the privilege of filing consolidated returns is of substantial benefit to large groups of corporations existing in this country. It cannot be denied, it has not been denied, I venture to say it will not be denied, that this consolidated return scheme is of peculiar benefit to the large corporations of this country. It gives them an advantage which the independent corporations cannot enjoy, and why not place the large as well as the small, the great as well as the humble, upon the same basis when it comes to the making of tax returns?

What is the reason for the consolidated return? Is it for the benefit of the small corporation? Is it for the benefit of the lesser combine? It is distinctly made, maintained, and preserved for the benefit of the great holding corporations of the country.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. Suppose an individual has a capital of $20,000, of which $10,000 is invested in a corporation in one State, and $10,000 invested in another corporation in another State, and the one person owns it all. The two corporations are not very large, but he is making money, we will say, at one of the stores, and losing money at the other. If he has the privilege of making a consolidated return, then he gets some benefit, because without that in the one instance he would not have to pay a tax, in the case where he made no money, and he would have to pay the full tax in the place where he made money. If he could consolidate the two, it would be of some interest to him, and to all similar small corporations.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. In connection with the illustration just given by the Senator from Delaware, let us assume that in the city where the Senator from Delaware stated a man had a store, another man had a similar store. If the one having two stores could make a consolidated return, he would have the advantage in competing with the individual store owner. He could use the loss in one city to wipe out the profit in the other city. So that, in the case of the Senator's illustration, the man who was operating 2 stores would have an advantage over the man operating 1 store.

Mr. BORAH. Certainly. To take a further illustration, suppose Mr. A has $20,000 and starts a store, under a corporate entity, in the State of Delaware, investing $10,000, and with the other $10,000 starts a store in the State of Pennsylvania, and makes a consolidated return. We will assume that he finds that he has had a loss in one store, and he covers the loss in one store by his bookkeeping in the other, so far as taxes are concerned. But suppose Mr. B has a store in Delaware, and Mr. C has a store over in Pennsylvania. Each one must make his return. Why give an advantage to the man who is able to have two stores as against B and C, who have a store apiece?

Mr. HASTINGS. Suppose, instead of a corporation it is an individual. Then what would happen to his return?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know what the Senator has in mind.

Mr. HASTINGS. Instead of a corporation, suppose one man owns two stores. There is no prohibition against his making a consolidated return on both of them. Merely because he has a small corporation, to my mind, is no reason why he should be penalized. Whether it be large or small, it is the same thing.

Mr. BORAH. We are dealing now entirely with corporations in existence and the corporation law.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am pointing out an illustration which indicates, it seems to me, that there is some prejudice against a corporation, because an individual could do just this very thing after the Senator's amendment had been enacted.

Mr. BORAH. I have a great prejudice against a corporation when the corporation is organized for the purpose of controlling some 70 or 80 other corporations.

Mr. HASTINGS. I was talking about two.

Mr. BORAH. I know the Senator was talking about two, but I am afraid he was thinking about the others.

Mr. HASTINGS. The distinguished Senator was pointing out that this was for the benefit of the large corporation. I was trying to give him an illustration of a small corporation, if he can conceive of there being such a thing.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. The illustration the Senator from Delaware gives——

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan turns to the other side, and we cannot hear a word he says. I suggest that he try to convince Senators on this side as well as those on the other side.

Mr. COUZENS. I beg the pardon of the Senator from Virginia, but I have seen so many of the Democrats in a huddle that I thought we were entitled to get into a huddle once in a while.

Mr. GLASS. If it is going to be a huddle proposition, then the Senator is beaten to start with, because we have more in the huddle over here than are on the other side.

Mr. COUZENS. That is quite true. I apologize to the Senator from Virginia, but I got my example from good Democrats.

Mr. GLASS. I am usually interested so very much in what the Senator from Michigan says that I want to hear his argument.

Mr. COUZENS. I thank the Senator.

I want to point out that when these institutions are in business they get the advantage of the appropriate law and they are protected against their individual assets being liable for their debts. If they take advantage of incorporation in order to protect their individual fortunes there is no reason why they should get any advantage by consolidating their returns.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I had not finished reading the report of the special committee.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. GORE. It seems to me that the comment of the Senator from Michigan on the hypothetical case presented by the Senator from Delaware is pretty conclusive; but a case was brought to the attention of the committee which made an impression on me, and I should like to get the reaction of the Senator from Idaho.

The case presented to the committee was that of the Southern Pacific Railroad. Under the law of Texas, that railroad must incorporate in the State of Texas in order to operate in that State. It has no choice. I can conceive that the railroad might realize a profit in Texas and yet might sustain a loss in Arizona or New Mexico, making the long haul across the desert.

I do not know what the structure of the railroad is, but let us assume that it had to organize in New Mexico, Arizona, California, and Texas. I can conceive some cogency in the contention that if the railroad, owing to local laws, must charter in each State, and must take a loss, say, in Arizona and New Mexico, there would be some justice in permitting that loss to be offset against a realized gain in Texas. That is the only instance along this line that has made any appeal to me.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, let me assume that the illustration which the Senator gives is one which ought to have consideration. It can have consideration in conference. That is one of the contentions which I made in opening my remarks, that if there were conditions under which exceptions ought to be had, that could be worked out in conference. But I am sure the Senator from Oklahoma would not contend that the situation with reference to the Southern Pacific Railroad ought to be dominating and controlling in reference to making tax laws for all corporations in the entire United States.

Mr. GORE. Not at all. I agree with the Senator about the vertical, integrated concerns where one is pyramided upon the other. I think they ought to be disintegrated so far as taxation is concerned. On the other hand, it does seem to me that the railroad situation might constitute an exception. I will vote for the Senator's motion with the hope that the conferees will at least give serious consideration to this particular point.

Mr. BORAH. I am contending that this matter ought to go to conference, and I am not contending, Mr. President, that there may not be exceptions. I am frank to say that after such study as I have been able to give to it I would not want to make an exception that would militate effectively against such a general rule, and I doubt if we can make an exception without militating against the rule; but, if it can be done, the able gentlemen who sit upon the conference will be able to handle the matter; but, if we are not able to make the exception, then I certainly would not be in favor of returning to the consolidated return because not to do so might work a hardship in some places. I know that it works to tremendous advantages in places where the Senator from Oklahoma does not desire it to work to advantage.

Said the subcommittee having to deal with this subject:

> It cannot be denied that the privilege of filing consolidated returns is of substantial benefit to the large groups of corporations in existence in this country.

I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma that all these matters were heard before the committee; the different conditions which arose by reason of the different corporations, and the obligations imposed upon them to organize in the different States; these matters were very fully covered by the subcommittee, and, notwithstanding all the facts which were presented, they made the recommendation which I am now reading:

> This is especially true in depression years, for the effect of the consolidated return is to allow the loss of one corporation to reduce the net income and tax of another, and during a depression more losses occur. Another effect of the consolidated return is to postpone tax. This is because there is no profit recognized for tax purposes on intercompany transactions, and profits on a product of the consolidated group, passing through the hands of the different members of the group, are not taxed until the product is disposed of to persons outside the group.
> In the past, when any corporation could carry forward a net loss from one year to another, the consolidated group did not have such a great advantage over the separate corporations. Now that this net loss carry-over has been denied, the advantage of the consolidated return is much greater on a camparative basis.

The Senator from Delaware, speaking of the small companies which might be injured, has not, I think, given proper consideration to the large companies and the advantage which they have; and in order that the Senator may have the matter before him so that he can consider it fully tonight, when we vote upon this Monday, I am going to read more fully into the RECORD than I have. I am sorry the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is not in the Chamber. Let me read what I read a few moments ago and continue:

But now, to whom does the Central Gas & Electric Co. belong? To another holding company, the Central Public Service Co.

That is the gentleman, in corporate form, that I am anxious to deal with, and I am sure the Senator from Delaware must feel the same way. So let us not permit our sympathies for the two small companies having a store override the necessity of dealing with the large companies.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. BORAH. Yes. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not know what the percentage is the Senator from Idaho would like to reach; I do not know whether it is 5 percent, 10 percent, 20 percent, or what it is, but I am assuming that it is at least a minority, less than 50 percent. I should not like to do an injury to the honest corporation which desires to make a consolidated return merely to strike at some corporation which is illustrated by what the Senator is now reading. In other words, I am not willing to convict an innocent man merely to get some guilty person at the same time.

Mr. BORAH. I am not advocating the conviction of an innocent man. All I am asking is that each and everyone make his own separate return, and then when he gets in with his return the law will deal with him. If he has had his loss and no profits, we will get nothing.

Mr. HASTINGS. If we take the illustration given by the Senator from Oklahoma, where a railroad is operating through several States and has to have a separate corporation in each State, it is pretty nearly impossible for such railroad to make a separate return for each of those corporations. The money is collected into one treasury, collected under one system, and under one freight rate and one passenger rate. This amendment would impose upon that corporation an almost impossible task.

Mr. BORAH. They got along pretty well before the consolidated returns were adopted.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I am sorry the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] is not present. As a matter of fact, in 2 days of discussion the only instance which seemed to have merit was that cited by the Senator from Oklahoma. In that case he says the railroad would be greatly affected by this provision. I have an idea, although I am not familiar with the Texas law, that an interstate corporation operating a railroad through Texas operates as an interstate corporation. They may own a thousand railroads, as they do in my State, but they are leased and the parent company does the operating, and the State where they are operating provides only a part of their income. If we had all the facts, I think it would be found that even that instance has not any merit whatever to it.

Mr. HASTINGS. That may answer my question. I am not certain about it myself. I was just wondering whether that was true.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Delaware, with his great ability, is certain of one thing, I am sure, and that is that there is a great advantage in filing consolidated returns to certain classes of large corporations. I do not care to mention names, but I was told by two of the experts that one particular holding company, closely associated with a man who has until lately long been in the public service, realized a benefit of something over a million and a half dollars in 1 year by reason of its consolidated return. I think there could be gathered up dozens of instances. Did the Senator listen yesterday while I read—I am afraid he did not, or he would have voted for the amendment—the amount which was realized by the aircraft holding corporations? In 1 year five of them got the benefit of over $2,000,000 by reason of the privilege of filing consolidated returns.

Are we to overlook such conditions entirely, because, if I may call it such, a theoretical proposition with reference to the Southern Pacific has been brought into this matter? We know that these other evils exist. We know the public is deprived of what it ought to have in regard to taxes, and we know that it is a great disadvantage to the small corporations which have to contend with them. We know those evils exist. Why, therefore, not deal with the situation so as to reach the greatest possible number who may be affected, in an advantageous way so far as the Government is concerned?

Mr. HASTINGS. Would the Senator give us some details as to how that $2,000,000 was made up in the case of aircraft corporations of which he speaks?

Mr. BORAH. While that is being looked up I will read further in continuation of what I just began to read:

That owns and controls the stock in the Central Public Service Co. And to whom does this Central Public Service Corporation belong? It belongs to the Public Utility Holding Co., which I believe does not hold all the stock in this company but enough to exercise a controlling influence in its affairs. And to whom does the Public Utility Holding Co. belong? It belongs to a concern which it is very difficult to define, a kind of hybrid holding-financing-trading-investment trust company, the American Founders.

Now, the only corporation that pays taxes under this proposition is the first corporation.

Mr. HASTINGS. There is consolidated with it all the profits of other companies, is there not? The only advantage I know anything about in a consolidated return is the convenience of it, plus this, that if there be under the parent company a losing unit the parent company may deduct the loss of the unprofitable unit from their income. If all the companies which are held by a holding company are making money, there is absolutely no advantage, so far as I know. In addition to that, there is provided, according to my recollection, a 2-percent increase in the tax which they have to pay if they make a consolidated return.

Mr. BORAH. That raises the question why the 2-percent additional tax was imposed if it was not well understood that there was a distinct advantage in filing a consolidated return? It is recognized in the bill itself that the making of consolidated returns is a favor to corporations; and so the bill proposes to add 2 percent in cases where consolidated returns are filed. What does the 2 percent amount to? It gathers up, perhaps, one tenth of the amount which they are actually realizing in the way of benefit from the consolidated returns.

Now, all the arguments in favor of holding-company control can be applied to the situation of the Central Gas & Electric Company and subsidiaries. But what defense is there from the point of view of the public service, operating efficiency, financing, or anything else, for this string of public-utility companies running up to the American Founders?

Now, I will use another case:

The United Founders owns three other investment trusts, which in turn are holding companies also—the American Founders Corporation, the American General Corporation, and the Investment Trust Associates. There are a great many others, but it controls these outright, owning from 70 to 90 percent of the stock. These holding companies in turn own another holding company, called United States Electric Power Corporation, or they have a large interest in it, which I will explain later. This United States Electric Power Corporation owns the Standard Power & Light Co. and that, in turn, controls the Standard Gas & Light Corporation. There are five layers of holding corporations.

Why are all these different holding companies organized? What is the object of them?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I will yield in a moment. They get a very great advantage or they would not be organized. All up and down the line of the five layers of corporations, they pay tremendous salaries, the highest in the world; they pay large profits, some of them the greatest in the world. Why are they organized? For the same reason that any corporation is organized, namely, to make money by reason of their corporate existence. I say, therefore, that they, each and every one of them, all five of them, should make reports to the Government as to what they have earned. Now I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have the figures here for the year 1930, and from the records of the Department it appears that 241,616 corporations in this country paying dividends of a billion and a half dollars paid not one cent of income taxes to the United States Government. Is it not most probable that a great many of these 241,616 corporations have escaped taxes through the consolidated returns route?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, by what authority does the Senator make that statement? Where does he get his information?

Mr. McKELLAR. From the Treasury Department.

Mr. HASTINGS. How could it be possible for them to pay dividends without having paid the tax?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is because the Treasury Department figures reveal that there were certain corporations showing taxable net income, and then 241,616 showing income but no taxable income. In other words, by reason of the credits and allowances made, and by the consolidated-returns route, 241,616 corporations, making a billion and a half dollars in earnings or income, which they pay out to their stockholders, pay not one cent of income to the Government of the United States.

Mr. HASTINGS. I cannot understand that.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will just look at the RECORD of February 1, at page 1774, he will find the figures which show it.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I think the Senator from Delaware will find that in large part that is due to the fact that dividends paid by one corporation to another corporation are nontaxable.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. For the benefit of the Senator from Delaware, I want to state that recently, during the last few days, in the investigation being conducted before the Federal Trade Commission it was found that one holding corporation, which had correspondence with State Senator Thayer in New York and officials in Kentucky and Tennessee, had been engaged in this practice; that its subsidiaries had actually made a profit and paid the income into the holding company, and the holding company had kept it and not paid any income tax to the Government. If the bill shall go over until Monday, as seems probable, in view of the extended debate that is going on, we will be able to obtain those figures and give the sum in dollars which the holding company actually collected from its subsidiaries, retained for itself, and failed to pay any taxes on to the Government of the United States. That is a matter of record; their own records show it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware asked me a few moments ago for the figures with reference to the Aviation Corporation. Those figures were put in the RECORD in detail on April 9 by Mr. McFARLANE in the House of Representatives. I read yesterday the conclusions or general results from the detailed figures which appear in the RECORD of April 9.

Mr. HASTINGS. On what page?

Mr. BORAH. I have not the page before me; I only have the page with reference to the matter which I read; but the detailed figures appear in the RECORD of April 9 in the address of Mr. McFARLANE. The Senator will have no trouble in locating them.

But here is what he says in conclusion as the result of the figures:

> We find that the Bendix Aviation Corporation has saved, through the filing of consolidated returns and in the change of income-tax laws which have been changed since the law of 1918, the sum of $625,863.49 in money they would have been required to pay to the Government had the law not been changed and had they been required to file separate returns rather than consolidated returns.
> The Curtiss-Wright Corporation saved $101,709.31 in the same way. The General Motors Corporation saved $150,980.75. The United Aircraft & Transport Corporation saved $854,959.29. The Aviation Corporation of America saved $313,454.44. All told, there was a saving of $2,046,967.28.

Mr. HASTINGS. Over a period of how long?

Mr. BORAH. I understand over a period of 1 year.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator ought to add to what he has just said that Mr. McFARLANE, who supplied those figures, said in his speech, or he told me today—he told me today, but I think he also said it in a portion of his speech—that the figures for the largest corporations he was trying to examine in connection with the aircraft matter are not included. In the case of the largest of all he was unable to get access to the figures. So those figures are only a part of what the aircraft companies saved.

Mr. HASTINGS. The particular thing in which I was interested, I will say to the Senator from Idaho, was whether or not those figures are based upon the fact that this holding company owned other corporations that had losses during those years. Can it be accounted for in any other way?

Mr. BORAH. I cannot say as to that.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, how could any conceivable answer to the question of the Senator from Delaware prejudice the merits of the contention of the Senator from Idaho? Suppose a farmer who owns two tracts of land makes a profit on one of them and sustains a loss on the other. He is compelled to pay taxes on both farms. Why should not a holding company be required to pay taxes, at least, on every one of its subsidiaries on which profits are regularly made?

Mr. HASTINGS. May I say to the Senator from West Virginia that my inquiry is designed solely for the purpose of ascertaining the facts? I am trying to find out whether there is any other method whereby the large holding companies can profit except by owning corporations which are not making a profit during the year. That is the cause of my inquiry. I am trying to find out whether there is any other way by which that may be done.

Mr. BORAH. Reading further from this article—

> The United Founders owns three other investment trusts—

I was interrupted, so I will have to reread it, in order to get the continuity—

> The United Founders owns three other investment trusts, which in turn are holding companies also—the American Founders Corporation, the American General Corporation, and the Investment Trust Associates. There are a great many others, but it controls these outright, owning from 70 to 90 percent of the stock. These holding companies in turn own another holding company, called United States Electric Power Corporation, or they have a large interest in it, which I will explain later. This United States Electric Power Corporation owns the Standard Power & Light Co., and that, in turn, controls the Standard Gas & Light Corporation. There are five layers of holding corporations. Then come the operating companies, of which I think there are 17 subsidiaries. I think one of them is an engineering company, which supplies management. There may be another company or two of that kind, but most of them are operating utility companies.

I ask the able Senator from Delaware and I ask the Senate upon what theory could these five layers of holding companies be excused from making their individual returns to the Government as to their incomes? Why should they be permitted to entwine themselves and double themselves up into a bow knot and come in as one concern? They ought to make separate and distinct returns for each one of the five holding companies. We would know why they are in existence, what their business is, how much they should pay, and what the Government is entitled to have from them. There can be no argument of a sound nature, it seems to me, why the Government should not call upon each of those five holding companies connected with one business enterprise to make a report to the Government.

Who else is excused from making a report except the great holding companies of the country?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. Let me interject a word that may have a tendency to shorten the debate and not prolong it until Monday. I stated yesterday that I voted against the Borah amendment with great misgivings. Since having cast that vote I have resolved my misgivings in favor of the amendment, and I am going to change my vote. If the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] persists in his motion for reconsideration, I submit he will find that other Senators have resolved the matter in a different way. I hope he will withdraw his motion and let us get down to voting.

Let me say—which is rather irrelevant—that I was depicted on the front page of some of the newspapers as having "deserted the administration" on the other vote I cast. I wonder why the Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee and the chairmen of other committees do not tell us in detail just what the administration thinks about the various measures we are professing to consider here. I find that on one vote 22 other Democrats "deserted the administration" along with me, and on the other vote 24 Democrats "deserted the administration" along with me, if it may be assumed that the administration is telling us just exactly how to vote on all these questions. I do not think that is so. I think when the newspapers speak of me as "deserting the administration" because I exercise my judgment in voting upon these questions they are simply misrepresenting.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I will be very frank with the Senator from Delaware about this matter. Everybody knows this was a close vote and that there are at least two Senators who are away and cannot vote today, so I am going to stay here until they get back or until I find some recruits. [Laughter.] I am interested in this matter in such a way that I feel justified in doing that.

Let me continue:

> Even here, again, there are more holding companies. For instance, one of these subsidiaries is the Louisville Gas & Electric Co. of Kentucky. The Standard Gas & Light Co. controls this company, but not directly. Again, a holding company must be interposed, for some reason, called the Louisville Gas & Electric Co. of Delaware.

Why are all these companies interposed?

What is the object of creating different companies? There must be a great profit in it. If there is a great profit the Government is entitled to know.

> Thus we have the Louisville Gas & Electric Co. of Kentucky, held by the Louisville Gas & Electric Co. of Delaware, controlled by the Standard Gas & Light Co., a corporation controlled by the Standard Light Co., controlled by the United States Electric Power Corporation, controlled by these three investment trusts, and finally by the United Founders of Delaware.
> The justification of the holding company is in the Standard Gas & Light Co., which operates 17 companies, which can give them intelligent management (and, so far as I know, does give them intelligent management), extensive financing, and a wide degree and variety of engineering skill. But what public service are all these other holding companies furnishing?

That is a question I should like the able Senator from Delaware to answer. What public service are all these holding companies furnishing? What public good are they serving? If they are rendering a service to the public, very well and good.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know that it will help solve the problem, but I want to say that I voted against the Senator's amendment yesterday, but if it comes up again I shall vote for it.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have heard three Senators make that statement here in the last 2 minutes.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I think I am one of the three to whom reference is made. I was in the position of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I had many misgivings yesterday about my vote. I am satisfied that I voted on the wrong side and I propose to support the Senator from Idaho if the matter comes to a vote again.

Mr. LONG. I want the Senator from Idaho to know that he has secured 3 votes in the last 3 minutes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	Hatfield	Overton
Ashurst	Costigan	Hayden	Patterson
Bachman	Couzens	Hebert	Pope
Bailey	Cutting	Johnson	Reynolds
Bankhead	Davis	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Barbour	Dickinson	King	Schall
Barkley	Dill	La Follette	Sheppard
Bone	Duffy	Lewis	Shipstead
Borah	Fess	Logan	Smith
Brown	Fletcher	Lonergan	Steiwer
Bulkley	Frazier	Long	Stephens
Bulow	George	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Byrd	Gibson	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Byrnes	Glass	McNary	Thompson
Capper	Goldsborough	Metcalf	Townsend
Caraway	Gore	Murphy	Vandenberg
Carey	Hale	Neely	Van Nuys
Clark	Harrison	Norris	Wagner
Connally	Hastings	Nye	Walsh
Coolidge	Hatch	O'Mahoney

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on the motion of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] to reconsider the vote by which section 141 of the bill was stricken out on yesterday.

Mr. COUZENS. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEWIS (when Mr. DIETERICH's name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. DIETERICH], if present and voting, would vote "nay" on this question.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I regret to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], the Senator from Montana [Mr. ERICKSON], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the Senators from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] and [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]; and

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] with the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO].

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN]. If the Senator from New Jersey were present, he would vote "yea", and if the Senator from Nevada were present he would vote "nay."

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK]. If the Senator from Vermont were present, he would vote "yea", and if the Senator from Alabama were present he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 58, as follows:

So Mr. HASTINGS' motion to reconsider was rejected.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator from Idaho to withdraw his motion to reconsider?

Mr. BORAH. I desire to withdraw my motion to reconsider.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider is withdrawn.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 116, beginning with line 10, it is proposed to strike out all of section 143 (a).

On page 119, it is proposed to strike out beginning with line 2 and ending with the word "except" on line 3.

On page 120, it is proposed to strike out lines 24 and 25, and on page 121 to strike out lines 1 and 2.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, that is the amendment with reference to withholding the interest on tax-free covenant bonds?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct.

Mr. HARRISON. I have talked to the experts regarding that amendment, and I am willing to let it go to conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 13, lines 14 and 15, it is proposed to strike out "in excess of the credit against net income provided in section 26."

On page 14, at the end of line 20, insert the following:

Interest upon obligations of the United States or its possessions, or of any State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia; or upon obligations of any instrumentality of the United States or any possession thereof, or of any instrumentality of any State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or of the District of Columbia, shall be included in gross income.

On page 16, beginning with line 23, strike out through line 19 on page 17.

On page 19, beginning in line 23, strike out—except on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry, or the proceeds of which were used to purchase or carry, obligations or securities (other than obligations of the United States issued after Sept. 24, 1917, and originally subscribed for by the taxpayer) the interest upon which is wholly exempt from the taxes imposed by this title, or.

On page 30, strike out lines 5 to 17, inclusive.

On page 33, strike out lines 12 to 18, inclusive.

On page 137, lines 16 and 17 and lines 21 and 22, strike out "in excess of the credit provided in subsection (c) of this section."

On page 138, strike out lines 1 to 6, inclusive.

On page 138, strike out beginning with line 24 down through line 2 on page 139.

On page 141, strike out all after "indebtedness" in line 8 down through "title" in line 14.

On page 142, lines 17 and 18 and lines 22 and 23, strike out "in excess of the credit provided in subsection (f) of this section."

On page 146, strike out lines 9 to 12, inclusive.

On page 146, strike out beginning in line 23 down through line 3 on page 147.

On page 159, line 10, strike out "in addition to the credit provided in section 26,".

On page 245, after line 13, insert the following:

If the application of this act with respect to the taxation of the interest upon any obligation of the United States or its possessions, or of any State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, or upon any obligation of any instrumentality of the United States or any possession thereof, or of any instrumentality of any State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or of the District of Columbia, is held unconstitutional, so that the interest on such obligation is held to be wholly exempt from Federal income taxation, no deduction shall be allowed on interest paid or accrued within the taxable year on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry such obligation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I promise not to detain the Senate for more than a few moments.

I realize the importance of passing the revenue measure, and I have no desire to detain the Senate unduly in the discussion of a subject which has been before the Congress and before the Nation for years, on which I apprehend that every Member of this body has long since made up his mind.

I may say briefly that this is a proposal to subject to the ordinary rules of income-tax legislation the income from the great mass of securities ordinarily known as "tax-exempt securities." This subject has been debated in previous Congresses; everything has been said upon it, probably, that can be said. Neither in this Congress, nor in any other Congress, has there been any substantial opposition on its merits.

It is a proposal designed for two purposes. One is to close one of the largest and most extensive loopholes in the taxing power of the Federal Government. The other is to put the taxing power of the Federal Government on a firm foundation.

One of the greatest difficulties in levying Federal taxes has been the fact that in this country, unlike England and some other countries, we have a great mass of tax-exempt securities, which have hitherto been unreached by the Federal taxing power; and that condition upsets every calculation and every comparison with every other taxing system.

As I have stated, there has been very little said, either in this Congress or in any other Congress, in opposition to the merits of the proposal that we set up a fundamental taxing base under which all income, from whatever source, will be taxed.

Mr. FESS. Mr President, I did not quite understand whether the amendment would apply to existing bonds, or only to those to be issued in the future.

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator that the amendment is intended to apply to both existing securities and securities to be issued in the future.

Mr. FESS. Has the Senator investigated as to the constitutionality of applying such a provision to existing bonds?

Mr. CLARK. I was just about to come to that question. Substantially the only objection which has been raised to the proposal to tax so-called "tax-exempt securities" has been on the ground of constitutionality. Senators have stood on this floor, Representatives have stood on the floor of the body at the other end of the Capitol, and repeatedly pledged their allegiance to the principle of taxing tax-exempt securities but have insisted repeatedly that such a tax would be unconstitutional. Many Senators and many Representatives, while professing allegiance to this principle, have insisted that the only way the purpose might be accomplished would be through the submission and ratification of a constitutional amendment.

Mr. President, I again read, as I did at the last session, the language of the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.

I may be deficient in my understanding of the English language, or, despite more than 20 years' experience in the practice of law, I may be deficient in the legal application of plain words of English, commonly understood in our language, but if the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States does not give the Congress power to tax income from "whatever source derived", whether from securities hitherto considered nonexempt, or from securities heretofore considered exempt, I am frank to say that I would not myself be able to draft an amendment which would confer that power on the Congress.

It has been said frequently that the Supreme Court has passed on this question. I have never been able to find a case in which the Supreme Court passed on it squarely. I think the issue should be put up to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. Has there ever been a law passed attempting to tax the income from what we now call "tax-exempt securities"?

Mr. CLARK. There has not been; and that is the occasion of my remark that the question has never been passed on squarely by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. LOGAN. It could not be passed on if Congress took no action about it.

Mr. CLARK. That is exactly what I had in mind when I made my remark a moment ago.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, does the Senator from Missouri think that an amendment to the Constitution could possibly be made any plainer by the use of any other words than those found in the sixteenth amendment?

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator that if I were given carte blanche to draft an amendment to the Constitution designed to accomplish the purpose toward which I aim and to which so many Representatives and Senators have already given adherence, I would not know how to make it any clearer.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield to me?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I agree with the conclusion of the able Senator from Missouri, but frankness and plainness of speech are best. I said on the floor of the Senate, possibly a year ago, as Senators will remember if they deigned to pay attention to what I said, that I thought the Senator from Missouri was correct in stating that the sixteenth amendment gave Congress full and plenary power to lay taxes on incomes from whatever source derived; and I went on to say that I myself, believing that I have some familiarity with the resources of the English language, could not, if the sixteenth amendment did not, draft an amendment which would permit the Congress to lay a tax on the income derived from securities issued by States and municipalities thereof and by the United States.

Desirable as that end is, much as we wish to reach it, we may not disguise or overlook the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States has directly decided that the sixteenth amendment does not give Congress the power to lay taxes upon incomes derived from bonds issued by the States or by the Federal Government. I shall cite the decisions so that Senators may peruse them themselves. Senators will observe that they are recent cases.

The decisions are as follows: Brushaber v. Union Pacific Railroad Co. (240 U.S. 1); Peck & Co. v. Lowe (247 U.S. 165); Eisner v. Macomber (252 U.S. 189); Evans v. Gore (253 U.S. 245); Metcalf and Eddy v. Mitchell, Admx. (269 U.S. 514). Desirable as is the end sought to be reached I believe if we were to take this action, protracted litigation might result and we might not be successful in the courts. Therefore I and other Senators have introduced resolutions proposing to submit an amendment to the Constitution of the United States granting the Congress the power to lay taxes on securities issued by States and by the Federal Government. Notwithstanding these decisions, I am tempted to vote for the amendment, because my desire, directly to reach the end sought by the Senator, is great.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator in just a moment.

I thank the Senator from Arizona for his very illuminating remarks. I realize, of course, that the Supreme Court of the United States has in the last several years angled at this proposition, but I insist that the only way to give the Supreme Court an opportunity to pass squarely on the issue is for the Congress to enact a law putting the issue up to it.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me further?

Mr. CLARK. In just a moment.

I realize the habit in which the Supreme Court and other courts of appellate jurisdiction frequently indulge of putting obiter into their decisions. I regard the dicta to which the Senator from Arizona has referred as obiter, and I insist that the only way in which the issue can finally be determined is by putting the question squarely up to the Supreme Court.

I may say to the Senator from Arizona, who, as I understand, has drafted a resolution for the submission of an amendment to the Constitution, that I shall be glad to vote for his proposed amendment, and I shall be glad to have it submitted to the States, but I do not believe that under existing law there is any certainty if the question is put squarely up to the highest tribunal in the United States, that the Court will decide adversely to my contention.

Mr. ASHURST. Now will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. On this subject I am but Saul sitting at the feet of Gamaliel when comparing myself with the able Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator is too kind in that remark.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator would add to his amendment—using the appropriate language—a provision that if his amendment should be declared to be beyond the power of Congress, it shall not affect adversely any other portion of the bill, I shall vote for his amendment.

Mr. CLARK. So far as I am concerned, I will be very glad to vote for the Senator's resolution and for the submission of the Senator's amendment to the Constitution of the United States at any time. But I have always believed that a straight line was the shortest distance between two points; and I think we might attain the desired end by going in a straight line rather than going all around Robin Hood's barn.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I must not be put into the attitude of in any sense opposing any sensible and legal way in which we can reach tax-exempt securities, because they constitute a reservoir of more than $40,000,000,000. People our country over have their breast pockets or their strong boxes plethoric with tax-exempt securities.

Most of the economists of our country, practically all our financiers, among them three Secretaries of the Treasury, including Mr. Mellon himself, who is supposed to be the apotheosis of standpatism, have urged, almost vehemently, that there should be no securities which are tax exempt.

So I wish to emphasize that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] is performing a valuable service, and I hope before he calls for a vote on the amendment he will add a provision to the effect that if the amendment shall be declared to be unconstitutional and beyond the power of Congress, such declaration shall in nowise affect any other section.

Mr. CLARK. I shall be very glad to do that.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, that provision is already in the bill, on page 245:

> If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

Mr. ASHURST. Then, Mr. President, what I said was almost presumptuous. I should have presumed that the able Chairman of the Finance Committee and his committee would have taken care of that.

One other word. The Senator from Missouri is a man so frank and so ingenuous that I know I may depend upon the answer he will give to me. Is there in the amendment which the Senator proposes any language which, by any intendment, could be construed to repeal title V of the present tax law of 1932? In other words, is there anything in this amendment which would tend to repeal the present tariff on oils, coal, copper, or lumber? I rely on the Senator's answer.

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator that there is no such purpose whatever in this amendment, though I am very much in favor of such a proposal.

Mr. ASHURST. I know that to be so.

Mr. CLARK. But I do not mix up the two questions in this amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. I knew that I could depend on the Senator's frank answer, and I will not have to search through the bill.

Mr. CLARK. As a matter of fact, the technical provisions of this bill, I will say to the Senator, were drawn by the legislative drafting service to accomplish the purpose which I wished to accomplish.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, should not the able Senator from Missouri express his regret that the Committee on the Judiciary has not reported to the Congress the proposed constitutional amendment to eliminate tax-exempt securities, to which so many references have been made?

Mr. CLARK. I will say, so far as I am concerned, that I will be very glad to vote for such a proposal. The only reason I have not drafted and introduced one on my own motion is that the promise has been given here that it would be done by much abler hands than mine.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator propose by this amendment to tax dividends from so-called "tax-exempt securities", the same as dividends from any corporation?

Mr. CLARK. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. I am in sympathy with the Senator's purpose. I should like to inquire, however, whether the Senator has given consideration to a serious objection that I have heard made, namely, that the removal of the tax-exempt privileges from securities issued by the municipalities and the so-called "poorer States" would make their securities less marketable, and would also place a correspondingly heavy burden upon their financial undertakings?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, that might have been a valid objection 2 or 3 years ago, but in this time, when all the States, whether poor or rich, are coming to the Federal Government for aid of every conceivable kind, it does not seem to me that the source of most of this revenue and most of the aid which is now being extended all over the country should be undermined by this great reservoir of tax-exempt securities.

Mr. WALSH. When this same question has been under debate in the past, Senators from States which have some difficulty in carrying their financial burdens, and some municipalities which have had difficulty in marketing their securities, made objection to this exemption being lifted.

Mr. CLARK. I am entirely familiar with that fact, but, as I said, Mr. President, in a time when all States are coming to the Federal Government, no matter what their credit is——

Mr. WALSH. Fortunately my State has not that difficulty.

Mr. CLARK. Then the Senator will not complain about this addition to the Federal revenue.

Mr. WALSH. I am strongly in favor of the principle.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. KING. May I say to my friend from Massachusetts, that even the larger States which have such financial strength as has the great State of Massachusetts, I think would object—at least the municipalities, and many of the people—to an amendment such as the Senator suggested, or to an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, because, obviously, if the Federal Government may tax the securities of municipalities and States there will be a feeling that the Federal Government might in time menace the integrity of the States; and certainly, if subject to Federal taxation, the securities of municipalities, of school districts, and of the States themselves, even the securities of rich and powerful States, would sell upon the markets for less than they now sell.

Mr. WALSH. That is undoubtedly true, but I was endeavoring to point out that it might be a very serious and heavy burden to municipalities which have difficulty in marketing their securities.

Mr. KING. I think this question is so serious that it ought to be submitted to the people for their determination. My own opinion is that many of the States will vote against an amendment to the Constitution of the United States for the reasons which I have so imperfectly stated. While I should be very glad to see the securities issued by the Federal Government subjected to taxation, I would be rather reluctant—sympathetic as I am with the proposal—to put into the hands of the Federal Government the power to interfere with municipalities and States by subjecting their securities to taxation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In line with that thought, certainly if the Federal Government is going to subject State, county, and municipal bonds, and the income from them, to Federal taxation, the States and counties and cities ought to have the right to tax Federal securities or income derived from them.

Mr. KING. Absolutely.

Mr. CLARK. I am thoroughly familiar with the contention made by the Senator from Utah. I realize the danger arising from taxation by the Federal Government of the income from securities issued by States and municipalities. I have always been a State rights Democrat. But, Mr. President, we have arrived at the time when the States, by coming to Congress with their hats in their hands, have put such a burden on the taxing power of the Federal Government that it is necessary for the Federal Government to have the power to tax and raise revenue from every source. The Governor of Kentucky, the Senator's State, came here with his hat in his hand and said that the State of Kentucky was absolutely incapable of raising a penny for relief, and threw the whole burden on the Federal Government.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator should state that Kentucky has not come here with its hat in hand any more than have other States.

Mr. CLARK. I agree with that, except that it is a more extreme case.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; it is not a more extreme case. There are a number of States that have received as high a proportion of relief from the Federal Treasury as has Kentucky. I will say that, instead of the Governor of Kentucky coming here with his hat in his hand, he called an extraordinary session of the legislature to raise money for the purpose of relief, and they got into a quarrel about the sales tax, something which has happened in nearly every State, and the legislature adjourned without passing any tax law. The Governor is on the verge of calling a session of the legislature within the next few days, which will deal with the question of raising revenue.

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that I have not criticized either the State of Kentucky or the Governor of the State of Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. But the Senator did not mention any other State than Kentucky.

Mr. CLARK. Kentucky happens to be the only State of which I have knowledge where an exception was made by the Federal administration in the granting of relief. So far as my own State is concerned, the Governor called a special session of the legislature, and they got into a row on the subject of the sales tax, and the Federal Relief Administrator cut the State of Missouri off the relief. That was before the adjournment of the legislature. The legislature then passed a tax bill which would raise sufficient revenue to provide the contribution.

I am not quarreling with the State of Kentucky. All I say is that the States by their own action, and the municipalities by their own action, have thrown this terrific burden of taxation on the Federal Government, and the Federal Government ought to have the right to raise the revenue and tax this great reservoir which has hitherto gone untaxed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is unfortunately true that the States and counties and cities have, to a very large extent, come to the Federal Government for relief. We all hope that that is an emergency situation which will pass away in the very near future, but I do not believe that we are wise in undertaking to change the fundamental system of our Government with reference to taxation forever, based upon a temporary emergency that exists in all the States.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, the situation has been changed already. It is just a question as to whether a tremendous volume of wealth shall be permitted to escape taxation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Bearing out what the Senator has said with reference to a change in the viewpoint of the public upon the question of Federal, State, and municipal securities being exempted from tax, I inquire of the Senator if he has observed from his mail a large number of requests urging him to tax the incomes received in the nature of salaries by municipal and State employees and, vice versa, the movement in the States to tax income and salaries of Federal employees?

Mr. CLARK. I think that is true.

Mr. WALSH. I have received an exceedingly large number of letters—hundreds of letters—urging that in this bill there shall be incorporated a provision levying a tax upon the salaries and incomes of municipal and State employees.

Mr. CLARK. Of course all these tax exemptions rest on the old principle and theory under which the Federal Government was not permitted to tax State securities or salaries of State officials, and vice versa; but that objection falls if the tax is made uniform. In other words, a State cannot destroy the Federal Government by taxing either Federal securities or the salaries and incomes of Federal officials if the tax is made uniform with that applying to other citizens. The Federal Government cannot destroy any municipality or any State if it simply levies the same tax upon the securities of the State or municipality or upon the salaries of State or municipal officials that it levies on every other citizen of the United States.

The principle involved in the contention that there should be no taxation by the Federal Government of the securities of States and of municipalities, and vice versa, was operative before the adoption of the sixteenth amendment. All those questions had to do with special taxes. It was feared when the United States Government was founded by the fathers of the Republic that the Federal Government might subvert the liberties of State governments or the subdivisions of State governments by taxation, especially of the securities of States or subdivisions of States, for the purpose of destroying them. The same fear existed in the minds of the State's rights advocates in the United States. That has all been wiped out by the adoption of the sixteenth amendment organizing income taxation. No reason has ever been strongly asserted why, in view of the adoption of the sixteenth amendment, the principle of universal taxation should not be applied.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to suggest to my friend from Missouri, the able Senator now speaking, that he should keep in mind the city he so nobly represents—St. Louis—and the city for which I speak—Chicago—which have issued a very large number of bonds, and that those bonds are under contract as being exempt from certain forms of taxation, particularly by the Federal Government. May I ask my able friend what effect his proposal would have upon the bonds which have already been sold upon a contract of exemption from taxation?

Mr. CLARK. I think it might possibly have exactly the same effect that the measure which we passed at the last session of Congress—changing the gold clause—had on bonds which hitherto had been issued by the Federal Government referring to a definite fineness of gold in payment.

Mr. LEWIS. Decreasing the value in the hands of the possessor?

Mr. CLARK. I doubt if that would be true on the market, although that might be the result.

Mr. LEWIS. It would be, of course, a violation of the contract at the time the bonds were sold.

Mr. CLARK. That is the same proposition as that for which the Senator voted at the last session with reference to the payment of United States Government bonds in gold of a certain fineness.

Mr. LEWIS. I could not see it that way, for our contention was that the mere elimination of gold did not decrease the real value of the security, as its value really came from the credit of the Government. But the municipalities selling their bonds with a specific contract of exemption, the bonds being in the hands of the purchaser, he would then be met by the fact that the Federal Government had stepped in after the purchase and reduced the actual value.

Mr. CLARK. I do not think the one is any more binding than the other.

Mr. LEWIS. I feel it would prevent the negotiation by municipalities of essential securities called for by their welfare and their need, and would prevent them having income by which they could return to the Federal Government some of the money which they had been borrowing and to which my friend from Missouri correctly refers.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator will keep in mind that quite recently during the depression, and particularly since the present administration came into power, we have issued billions of dollars worth of bonds through the Home Loan Corporation, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and various other governmental agencies, and in all those bonds we have specifically written that they are to be tax exempt. It would seem to me rather inconsistent, having issued those bonds, perhaps four or five or six billion dollars of them during the past year or two, and solemnly declared to those who purchased them that they would not be subject to taxation if we should now enact a law making them taxable.

Mr. CLARK. We solemnly declared, as I stated just a moment ago, that holders of United States bonds would be paid at maturity in gold of a certain percentage of fineness. Yet we passed a bill, for which the Senator voted and for which I voted, changing that percentage of fineness. I can see no difference between the two cases so far as Government obligations are concerned.

The argument is frequently made that if we shall eliminate the tax-exempt securities we will raise the interest cost at which the United States and municipalities will in the future be able to float bonds. Conceding that to be true for the sake of the argument, I believe that the sooner we get down to an honest fundamental system of having a general basis for taxation, the better off the country will be. Even if it shall make a slightly higher interest cost in the flotation of Government securities or State or municipal securities, the Federal Government and the States and municipalities will be on a better basis, a firmer financial basis, to pay an honest rate of interest rather than giving this tax exemption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair invites the attention of the Senator from Missouri to a matter which now should be considered and disposed of. In order to make the Senator's proposal in order it is necessary to secure unanimous consent to reconsider the votes by which the Senate approved the committee amendments on page 13, lines 14 and 15; on page 33, lines 12 to 18; page 137, lines 15 to 17; page 138, lines 1 to 6, inclusive; page 146, lines 23, to line 3,

Mr. CLARK. I understood in offering the amendment that it was to be considered by unanimous consent. If that is not true, then I ask unanimous consent for the necessary reconsideration of the votes to which the Chair has referred, and that my amendment may be considered in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the first objection usually made to this proposal is that it is unconstitutional. Nobody can ever be certain that the decision will be on a constitutional question, and I am not certain in this case; but if a committee of Senators were appointed today, assuming that we had no constitutional provision on the subject, for the purpose of drafting an amendment which would give Congress authority to adopt the kind of an amendment which the Senator from Missouri has offered, and the wisest men in the United States were appointed on the committee, and they deliberated, can it be conceived that they could use any language which would be any plainer than this?—

> The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.

Can that language be improved upon? Is there any scholar living today who can use any language that is more emphatic, or plainer? Every student in every eighth-grade school in the United States could easily construe law so worded. If this committee of wise men had deliberated and then brought in this language, can one conceive of a court saying, "Congress shall not have power to levy taxes without considering the source of the income"? Can one conceive of any language which could be plainer or more explicit than the language of the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution, which I have just read?

It is true that there are some decisions of the United States Supreme Court which indicate that they might hold this kind of a law to be unconstitutional; but I should like to see the question go to the Supreme Court, and when they write their opinion holding it unconstitutional—if they should do so—I should like to see them point out how Congress could use language which is any plainer than the language we have already used in this amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. President, I submit that it is an impossibility. I submit that the sixteenth amendment is as plain as language can make it; and I should like to see anybody who is wise enough to find a logical reason for getting around it. I think the Supreme Court will sustain this amendment if it shall be adopted.

The original contest before the Supreme Court over taxation of this kind took place prior to the adoption of the constitutional amendment; and in some of the court's opinions some reasoning was indulged in which I have read, but which I do not believe, with due respect to the men who used the language, can be sustained if we consider the language of the amendment itself.

I assume, therefore, that the provision will be held to be constitutional if it shall be enacted.

Now let me address myself to the other alternative to which the able Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] has so well alluded. He says that in order to tax income of this nature we must have an amendment to the Constitution. In my humble judgment, Mr. President, if that be true, we are at the end of the road. I do not believe a constitutional amendment on this subject could be ratified. It is true that the proposed law would tax some securities which are now untaxed. Every State has that advantage. It would be necessary to get three fourths of the States to give up that advantage, which, in my humble judgment, they would not do.

I do not believe that the method of trying to secure a constitutional amendment will in a hundred years bring us to the point where we can enforce this kind of a law if a constitutional amendment is necessary. As I see the matter, it is this proposed law or nothing, although, like the Senator from Arizona and the Senator from Missouri, I would vote for that kind of a constitutional amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I voted for an amendment similar to this the last time the proposal was before the Senate, though my original position was that we should not tax these securities. Mr. Mellon was the gentleman who proposed an amendment of this kind when I first read it; and, probably because of my antipathy to some other things he had done, I was against it. I have been thinking about the subject a little bit during the last hour or so, however, and here is what we are about to do, I am afraid; and I should like to have the Senator explain the matter to me, because I am undecided whether or not I shall vote as I did last time.

If we tax the bonds of the State of Virginia, necessarily they will have to carry a great deal more interest in order to pay the tax. Today, if we desire to put up a power plant, we will say, or a municipal water plant, we can sell municipal bonds at a tremendous advantage as compared with taxable securities. We can sell them perhaps at 4 percent or 4¼ percent, when, if they were to be taxed, they might sell at 5 or 6 percent; and I understand from a friend of mine here in the Senate that quite an elaborate estimate has been made of the amount which the Federal Government would get back in taxes if this proposal should be adopted. The estimate compared an issue of taxable Government bonds with an issue of nontaxable Government bonds, and showed that the difference in the cost of the money to the Government if the bonds were taxable would amount to about $100,000,000, whereas the Government would get back $25,000,000 in taxes.

I am very much afraid that if we should adopt this amendment we would cripple the financing of municipalities and States for public improvements, and place them too nearly on an equality with private interests, whereas now the municipalities and States have a distinct advantage in marketing their securities.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana has asked me a very practical question. I shall answer it frankly, as I understand it.

In the first place, I believe that if this amendment shall be adopted and held constitutional, it will result in some injury to State and county and municipal bonds now in existence and will result in the necessity of paying a higher rate of interest on future bonds. I think that is a logical conclusion to draw, although I think that phase of the subject is greatly exaggerated, because these bonds have another attractive feature besides the fact that they are nontaxable. Suppose that does happen, however; why should it not happen? In other words, why should one man hold the bonds of a municipality and pay no taxes on them, and another man hold bonds of another kind, perhaps drawing a higher rate of interest, and pay taxes on them?

To my mind, there is only one proper thing to do, and that is to have the law apply to all alike.

There is a further reason why, as the Senator well said in asking his question, some people would be inclined to oppose a law of this kind; and I have had it called to my attention probably oftener than it has been called to the attention of any other Member of this body, because it is well known all over the country that I am in favor of Government and State and municipal ownership of public utilities. People from all over the country have said to me, by letter and otherwise, that if this proposal is enacted into law it will be more difficult, sometimes impossible, and always more expensive for a municipality to build its own electric plant or water plant or gas plant. I have to admit that. I think it is true. But why is that a logical objection? As a believer in municipal ownership, I do not want to do anything unfair either to the people who do believe in it or to those who own private utilities of the kind with which municipal plants come in competition. I believe we ought to look at the matter from a broad viewpoint; and if we do, I do not understand why we should have a prejudice against this kind of law, even though it would enable us to own municipal plants on the basis of issuing bonds drawing a lower rate of interest.

Mr. President, it seems to me we cannot defend such a stand. That is a selfish reason. I do not believe that the position can be defended on that ground. That is the reason, however, why I think a constitutional amendment like the one presented by the Senator from Arizona cannot receive the approval of the State legislatures. Their opposition would be selfish. Their securities have a natural advantage in the market, and they can borrow money at a lower rate of interest. So they would reject it.

After all is said and done, after everything has been equalized, there is really, in my judgment, no difference whatever. A tax-exempt security enables a municipality to borrow money at a lower rate of interest, but it loses taxes. It may not be in that municipality, but wherever the bonds are owned over the State, assuming that a bond taxed will have to draw a rate of interest higher than the untaxed bond as measured by the amount of the tax, and that is a fair assumption, although it does not work out quite so in practice. There would be absolutely no difference. On the one hand, however, when we have tax-exempt securities, we classify the people into two classes, and we raise a great prejudice against one class, many times, I think, unjustly.

I have no prejudice against the man who owns tax-exempt securities. I own some myself. I do not see anything wrong in that. If somebody does not buy the school bonds issued by the school district, they will not be able to build schoolhouses. And we cannot buy any but tax-exempt bonds when we are buying that kind of securities.

A man will buy such bonds for a reason other than the fact that they are tax-exempt, the same reason why he buys Federal bonds, namely, that he can absolutely forget about them, go to sleep or go on with his work, and when the time comes for the interest payment, it will come to him. That is worth a great deal. A man who does not want to get rich overnight will take advantage of that kind of a situation and invest his money accordingly.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask the Senator this question, and his answer may determine my vote.

The Senator is preeminent not only among the lawyers of the Senate, but of the Nation, and I ask the Senator, in view of his clear, unequivocal statement that the sixteenth amendment gives the Congress the power to tax income from so-called "tax-exempt securities", whether it is the opinion of the able Senator that the sixteenth amendment gives to Congress the power to lay taxes on the income derived from securities issued by a State or a municipality in a State?

Mr. NORRIS. I think so. I cannot draw any other conclusion from the language.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. I am bound to say that a clear reading of the sixteenth amendment, if we interpret and construe words as we all do and should, leads one irresistibly to that conclusion.

Mr. NORRIS. I think so.

Mr. ASHURST. But the Senator, as an able and a skillful lawyer, knows that there must be some doubt about the question, because the Supreme Court of the United States has four or five times decided the other way. We may also take comfort and refuge in the knowledge that the Supreme Court reverses itself.

Mr. NORRIS. It was divided in those decisions.

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, yes; that is true.

Mr. NORRIS. There have been divided decisions by the Supreme Court. Let me say just a word in reply to the Senator from Arizona. I do not want to cast any reflection upon those who do not agree with me on this subject.

Mr. ASHURST. I understand that.

Mr. NORRIS. To my mind, it is so clear that there cannot be two sides to it. When I read the language, I cannot give it any other construction. I have to admit, however, that there is doubt about it, because the Supreme Court has held that the sixteenth amendment does not give us this authority. In my judgment, however, they have not done so directly.

The adoption of this amendment would bring forth a direct decision. Then if they decided it was unconstitutional we might have to rack our brains in order to determine what sort of language could possibly be used that would be plainer than that now employed in the sixteenth amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to have the Senator suggest to me, if we must have another constitutional amendment, as has been stated, what language would be used to give the Congress authority to levy a tax on such an income, if the language now employed does not do it.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has put his finger on the crux of the matter. I do not know how I could draw such language. Can the Senator suggest language that would do what we thought the language in the sixteenth amendment would do, but which the Supreme Court has said it does not do?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The able senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], who sits at my left, has presented a proposed amendment to the Constitution, in which in considerable detail he provides that Congress shall have the power to lay taxes on incomes derived from debentures and bonds issued by States, and so forth. If the Senator will pardon a reference to my own amendment, viewing the sixteenth amendment as being so clear, I descended to detail, and provided in my proposed amendment that Congress should have the power to lay taxes on income derived from debentures and bonds issued by States, and so forth, and so on. However, that is no clearer than the sixteenth amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, if it is necessary for us to adopt another constitutional amendment before we can tax income from bonds of the Government, it is necessary for us to pass a constitutional amendment before we can tax income from any source, because the language of the sixteenth amendment embraces Government and State and municipal bonds just as well as it embraces any other income.

Mr. NORRIS. Absolutely.

Mr. LOGAN. We would have to have a constitutional amendment providing that we could tax the income from notes or bonds of corporations.

Mr. NORRIS. We would have to legislate in the Constitution for every single thing of that kind.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. GORE. It is true that the language of the sixteenth amendment seems about as explicit as human ingenuity could make it that Congress shall have the power to tax incomes from whatever source derived, but the Supreme Court has settled the extent and has fixed the limits of that amendment. In a series of decisions they went rather slowly, but they went surely, to this conclusion, that the sixteenth amendment did not subject to taxation at the hands of Congress any subject whatsoever which had not been liable to taxation prior to the adoption of that amendment. The sole effect given to that amendment by the Supreme Court is this, that whereas prior to that amendment Congress could not levy a direct tax except in accordance with the rule of apportionment, and therefore could not tax incomes, because such a tax was a direct tax and had to be levied in accordance with that rule.

The Supreme Court has held that the sole effect of the sixteenth amendment is to enable the Congress to lay a direct tax upon incomes without reference to the rule of apportionment, but in accordance with the rule of uniformity.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has stated it correctly. That is what the Supreme Court has said. But the Supreme Court, in my humble judgment, has absolutely ignored the words, "from whatever source derived."

Mr. GORE. They may have ignored them, but they have fixed the limit.

Mr. NORRIS. Perhaps they will ignore them again. Does the Senator want to speak further?

Mr. GORE. Yes; if the Senator will indulge me. I myself was interested in a case which came up from Oklahoma to the Supreme Court of the United States. A certain oil company had obtained a lease of school lands from the State of Oklahoma. I contended that the income of the oil company derived from the sale of oil produced under that mining lease on State-owned land was not subject to taxation at the hands of Congress, on two grounds: first, that the source of the income, being State land, was exempt from taxation and that as the source was exempt the income was exempt. And that rule is universal; the other contention was that the oil company—the Coronado Oil Co.—insofar as the oil lease on State land was concerned was a State agency and was therefore exempt from Federal taxation.

The Supreme Court of the United States sustained both contentions, and held that the income of an oil company produced upon school land owned by a State was not subject to Federal taxation, because since the land was owned by a sovereign State the Federal Government could not tax the land, therefore could not tax income derived from the land, and further held that the company, being an agency of the State government, could not be taxed by the Federal Government.

That is not so strong a case as would be an attempt to levy a Federal tax on interest derived from State bonds. There cannot be a doubt, if we pass a measure of this sort, but what the Supreme Court will so hold. I am assuming some reverence on the part of the Supreme Court for ancient traditions and established precedents. It may be that the Supreme Court had recourse to one other rule of interpretation in construing the sixteenth amendment in the case to which I have just referred; that is, that no legislative enactment will ever be construed to the disadvantage of a sovereign unless the sovereign is mentioned in the act and has been sanctioned by our courts.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Oklahoma is right, we are helpless, in my opinion. We cannot amend the Constitution, because the States will not give up the advantage their securities now have, and the Supreme Court will say that we have no authority to tax those securities.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield in just a moment.

The Supreme Court has rendered these decisions by a divided court. I do not believe any man lives, on the bench or off the bench, who can answer the statement made by the Senator from Kentucky, that if the language does not permit this kind of an amendment, then we will have to start to legislate in the Constitution, we will have to go outside of the general language, and in the Constitution give authority to Congress to levy a tariff tax, or to levy some other kind of taxes. We will have to mention the particular thing we are going to give Congress authority to do.

Here is general language which, as Congress believed when it passed it, was all embracing and would give this authority. Some men—and some of them happen to be on the Supreme Court—have said that the Congress did not mean what it said. They were the only men that I know of in the United States who reached that conclusion. The only thing we can do, if that is sound, is to amend the Constitution, and declare that Congress meant what it said when it adopted the sixteenth amendment.

I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course we all know that what Congress was aiming at when it adopted the sixteenth amendment was to secure authority to levy income taxes.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the decision of the Supreme Court we had no power to levy taxes on incomes from any source, so the sixteenth amendment was submitted in order to enable us to levy a tax on incomes derived from any source. I am wondering if the Senator from Nebraska believes that the States would have ratified that amendment had they thought they were conferring upon the Government of the United States the power to levy taxes from incomes on their bonds?

Mr. NORRIS. I think they would have at that time. The States' securities now are vast in amount, of course, as compared to those that were in existence at that time; but I do not think, with all due respect to the Senator from Kentucky, that it makes any difference whether they would have ratified the amendment or not. They did ratify that amendment, and I do not know how we could have made it any plainer.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator from Kentucky has closely approached the suggestion I wish to present to the Senator from Nebraska. It is my understanding that the Supreme Court has held not that the language of the sixteenth amendment is inadequate but that in the light of the legislative history of the amendment its purpose was in effect to do away with the constitutional rule with respect to apportionment among the several States. If the Supreme Court be correct in that construction of the amendment, or whether it be correct or not, the course before the Congress would appear to be to write a new amendment with a new legislative history, indicating the all-inclusive purpose of the Congress in submitting the amendment and of the States in ratifying it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator if the Supreme Court were to hold this legislation unconstitutional, but I do not believe that remedy, however much I favor it, would ever meet with success. I think it would be an impossibility to have ratified the kind of an amendment which has been suggested here.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator is entirely familiar with the very cumbersome process of amending the Constitution.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. And even if the process of amendment of the Constitution should ultimately be successful it would necessarily involve a delay of a great many years.

Mr. NORRIS. A great many years.

Mr. CLARK. And that delay would occur in this time of great crisis and great distress, when there is no certainty, since the proposition has never been squarely put up to the Supreme Court of the United States, that the Court would uphold an amendment such as I have now proposed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in that connection, if the difficulty of securing an amendment to the Constitution, and the difficulty of getting the Supreme Court to hold an amendment like this constitutional, are about equal, should we not start out in the regular and logical way, by at least submitting such an amendment to the States, and seeing what they will do with it?

Mr. NORRIS. I am in favor of it. I will be glad to do it. But the Senator will find that he is going to have great difficulty in getting that kind of an amendment passed by this body for submission to the States.

Mr. BARKLEY. That may be true, because it takes two-thirds majority in both Houses. I will say, in that connection, that there are some Senators here, and many people elsewhere, who doubt the wisdom of such an amendment, even assuming it would be adopted by the people.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I admit that.

Mr. BARKLEY. And they are perfectly sincere about it.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, the course suggested by the Senator from Kentucky has not been the course of income-tax legislation. If we had waited for a constitutional amendment in 1893, when the first income-tax law was passed, we would have sat back and waited and probably would not have it even now. Congress passed an income-tax amendment. The Supreme Court, by a divided opinion, in which one Justice, as is well known, changed his opinion overnight, declared it unconstitutional.

Then there came a long period of reactionary Government in this country, and finally, when the Democrats came back into control, the House of Representatives passed a bill, which was agreed to by the Senate, and vetoed by the President, imposing an income tax, even under the hitherto existing state of the Constitution, which was designed to get around the objections raised in the income-tax decision in the Supreme Court in 1895.

When that bill was vetoed by the President of the United States a new party had come into power and the amendment was adopted.

In 1911, as I recall, exactly what I now propose was done. A bill was passed by the House of Representatives imposing an income tax, and at the same time a constitutional amendment was submitted to the States authorizing an income tax. I think that is what ought now to be done.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator for his very interesting exposition.

Let me conclude, Mr. President. I hope Senators, unless they have questions to ask me, will permit me to conclude what I have to say. I do not want to delay this bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Is it quite fair in this bill to say this income shall be taxed when only a month ago in the home-loan bank bill we made the bonds of the Home Loan Corporation tax exempt? Did we not do that?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. They have been purchased in good faith by persons many of whom distrust ordinary banking institutions and corporations.

Mr. NORRIS. I will answer the Senator's question. My own idea is that they ought to be exempt. They were made exempt by the law that brought them into being. They have been issued under that law. I hope that when the bill goes to conference the necessary amendment will be made to give effect to the very suggestion the Senator makes.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I do not want to interrupt the Senator unduly, but I should like to say as the proponent of the amendment that I am perfectly willing to accept an amendment to my amendment exempting obligations of that kind where the Government has recently issued them. What I am trying to do is to get a square vote on the general proposition, send the matter to conference, and then accept any amendment recognizing the general principle that also recognizes meritorious exceptions.

Mr. NORRIS. I think there ought to be in the law we may enact an exemption in accordance with the law that brought the bonds into existence. I agree fully with the Senator from New York. I expect, when this matter goes to conference, that will result if an amendment of that nature is not now offered and adopted.

Mr. President, let me conclude. I want to say something about the revenue that will be brought to the Federal Treasury by this amendment. I had a very indefinite idea myself as to what revenue it might produce and I do not know of any definite estimate. I will ask the Senator from Missouri whether he has any estimate.

Mr. CLARK. I have not. I have had several different estimates from various branches of the Government, but they varied so much that I have not relied on any of them. I am sticking to the general principle.

Mr. NORRIS. The amount will be large. Everybody knows that. The cry has been, and rightfully, that we must raise more revenue. We are spending more than we receive. Here I think is the greatest source of income revenue that exists today. I believe the amendment will bring more money into the Treasury than any other item in the income-tax provisions.

The Chairman of the Finance Committee stated a few days ago, referring to the veto by the President of the independent offices appropriation bill and the fact that we passed the bill over the President's veto, that we need more money. We can get it right here. We can get it from some other amendments we have adopted. It will give us revenue, and I think fair revenue and honest revenue, more than any other item connected with the income-tax provisions. I do not believe it will work an injustice.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is there any way by which to assure ourselves that the amount of revenue we might derive for the Federal Government by taxing municipal, State, and Federal bonds would not be more than added to the expense of the people in the rates of interest they would be required to pay upon the identical securities?

Mr. NORRIS. As I said in the beginning, I think it will result in increased rates of interest on such securities, but it will not all be absorbed in that way. The rate which municipalities, States, and counties will have to pay will probably be increased somewhat. It will not be the entire amount of the tax, in my judgment. It will not be that great.

I know what moved me to get this kind of security. I did not intend to tell this, but I think it answers the Senator's question, because there are many men like myself with a little income and a little capital laid aside for a rainy day. They are in the Senate or in the House interested in legislation. Everybody cannot appreciate that a Senator will get so interested in what he is doing here that he forgets all about his private business, but I did, and my private business was going to the dogs. As to my real-estate holdings, the tenant paid me whatever he wanted to, and if he did not want to pay anything he did not, and I was so busy I would not think of it until the next year, and then I could not find him.

I wanted my investment, as long as I stayed in the Senate and continued in this work, to be of such nature that it would not take any of my time, that I would not have to think about it. That condition can come only from investment in some of these bonds. I never felt like investing in any wildcat concerns. If I had had time and had been in my office at home I might have done that and made more money. I wanted to devote my time to my work here. Other men here interested in other businesses wanted to devote their time to their work here. The result is that, wanting an investment that does not need any attention, that brings a sure return although it may be small when the stipulated date comes, we invested in that kind of securities. I know it is worth a good deal to me to have the feeling that I could have an investment of that kind.

I believe that accounts to some degree for the desirability of getting this kind of bonds. The Federal Government issues bonds that are possibly taxable, taxable under the surtax, and if a Senator's income is high he pays a high rate on his Federal bonds, and yet they sell above par when they draw only 3½-percent interest.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate what the Senator has said and I realize there is an inducement to obtaining possession of tax-exempt securities because of the peace of mind it brings. I am not in the fortunate class that possesses any of them, and I congratulate the Senator if after a long service in the Congress he is able to possess any of them of any sort.

Mr. NORRIS. I have always saved a little of my salary and always made a little money ever since I have been in Congress. When I cannot do that I am going out of Congress.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Nebraska will always be able to do that. My experience and observation have been that whenever we levy a tax that can be passed on to the public, more is passed on than is represented by the tax. If we levy a tax on some articles under consideration and which are taxed in this very bill, more than the amount of tax is added to the price of the commodity when the public buys it. It is multiplied time and time again.

What worries me and what I fear is that if we shall levy this tax, if we ever shall, upon income derived from these public bonds, which are nothing more nor less than the obligations of the people which they have incurred in order to obtain money to make some public improvement, to elevate their condition, to raise their standard of living and the welfare of their community—when they shall be taxed, and when that tax shall be passed on to the people, more will be passed on than is represented by the tax we get out of the income from the bonds, whether they be Federal or State or municipal bonds. If that shall not occur it will be an exception to all instances where the expenses of the Government taxes are passed on to the public.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I wonder if we cannot get a vote on this proposal and settle it?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire also to offer an amendment to it. My amendment is as follows:

On page 1, lines 5 and 6, I move to strike out the words "or of any State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof."

I offer the same amendment in lines 8 and 9 and the same amendment in line 4 on page 3 and also on lines 7 and 8 on page 3.

The purpose of my amendment, of course, is to remove from the scope of the original amendment the securities of States and subdivisions thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to have the amendment explained. I could not understand its effect from the reading.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is merely to remove from the scope of the original amendment States, counties, and subdivisions thereof.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to be heard if there is any desire to adopt that kind of an amendment. I think it would kill the original amendment.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, not having the context of the amendment before me or in my mind, I do not quite appreciate the force of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Tennessee. Of course, Congress now has the power to tax incomes derived from Federal bonds. It needs no legislation upon that point so far as the power to tax is concerned.

I think the Senator from Nebraska has overestimated the revenue which would flow from this source, from the taxation of State and municipal securities.

There are today outstanding in this country a little less than $20,000,000,000 of State and municipal bonds. The amount is a little more than $19,000,000,000; it is a little less than $20,000,000,000. At 5 percent, the aggregate interest from all these bonds would be about $1,000,000,000. That is the income which it is intended to tax under this amendment.

As a rule, those securities are held by insurance companies, savings banks, and other corporate concerns which come under a tax of 13¾ percent. That is the maximum. Assuming that all these bonds are held by corporations, the aggregate revenue derived from this source would be only one hundred and thirty-seven and a half million dollars. I think the Senator from Nebraska is mistaken as to the economic effect of such a tax. The tax would be capitalized when the bonds were sold, and subtracted from the price paid to the State or the municipality for the bonds. It would be capitalized in the first instance and subtracted. It would be subtracted from the proceeds which would be paid for the bonds. It would depress their price. The State would lose more in the proceeds than the United States would gain by the tax. I think this is capable of mathematical demonstration.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] had a computation made with respect to United States bonds which are entirely tax exempt, as compared with United States bonds which are in part tax exempt and are in part subject to taxation. The computation showed that the Government realized $25,000,000 in taxes from these taxable bonds which it had issued, but it paid over $100,000,000 in interest upon those bonds more than it was paying on tax-exempt bonds, or would have paid upon those bonds if they had been issued tax free.

Mr. President, we are trying to have our cake and eat it, too. It cannot be done.

Not only that; Chief Justice Marshall declared that "the power to tax is the power to destroy." That would have been as true coming from a street urchin as from a Chief Justice; but whenever one sovereign government can tax the property, the officers, the salaries, the securities, and the instrumentalities of another government, it can destroy that government. Such a power could be used—could be abused—to destroy our dual system of government.

I wonder if any Senator would be willing to grant to a State the power to tax interest and income derived from Federal bonds. If it is a good rule, why not let it work both ways?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORE. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. The amendment I propose grants precisely that power to the States, to tax the income derived from Federal securities.

Mr. GORE. Certainly; it ought to be reciprocal. Let each one pick the pockets of the other if that is to be the program. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, this is merely another instance, it seems to me, where we are trying to defeat the inevitable effect of an economic law which is too omnipotent to be defeated by any mere enactment of Congress.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, on January 16 last I had incorporated in the RECORD through the courtesy of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], our leader, a report on tax-exempt securities. It covers about 10 pages. I have made a study of this subject; and, in my opinion, we cannot pass legislation here which will authorize the taxation of securities issued by States and subdivisions thereof.

If we should tax the securities issued by the Federal Government, we should bear in mind that the securities of our Government will not be on a parity in the market with tax-exempt securities that are already issued by States and subdivisions thereof. I am satisfied that the way to proceed is first to submit a constitutional amendment dealing with issues by States and subdivisions thereof, and if and when that amendment is adopted, then have Congress enact legislation that will affect the future issues of the Federal Government.

I invite Senators to read my report. I spent some time in procuring information from every known source on this subject; and, although the hour is late, I am going to impose upon my fellow Senators by having read in my time an opinion by Mr. David Wood, one of the leading authorities on the laws appertaining to governmental securities in the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

(From page 682 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Jan. 16, 1934:)

LEGAL OPINION OF DAVID M. WOOD

In addition to the statement of Mr. Stam, I quote from an opinion by Mr. David M. Wood, of New York:

"The Constitution of the United States nowhere expressly declares that Congress has no power to tax the bonds of the States or of their subdivisions or the income derived from such bonds. It is, however, equally silent regarding the power of the States to tax the bonds of the United States and the income derived from those bonds. The limitations upon the powers of Congress and of the State legislatures with respect to such taxation, therefore, if they exist at all, are implied limitations, and the intention to impose such limitations must be determined from a study of the entire Constitution and its historical background.

"When, as a result of the American Revolution the Thirteen Colonies achieved their independence from Great Britain, they became 13 independent nations, each jealous of its own sovereignty and suspicious and distrustful of its neighbors. Men at that time did not consider themselves Americans. They were Virginians, Pennsylvanians, New Yorkers, etc. No idea of national unity at that time existed except in the minds of a few remarkable men. At length, however, the necessity for a Federal Union of these 13 independent nations became apparent, and a convention was assembled which undertook the drafting of a Federal Constitution. The representatives of no State in this convention, however, had any intention of surrendering the sovereignty of their State to the new Federal Government which they hoped to set up, and yet it was necessary to vest in the new Government the attributes of sovereignty. The result was a compromise. The States delegated to the Federal Government some of their sovereign powers and reserved all others to themselves. Thus arose a system of dual sovereignty which has prevailed in this country ever since.

"The Federal Government and the States, although both exist within the same territorial limits, are separate and distinct sovereignties, acting separately and independently of each other, within their respective spheres. The Federal Government, in its sphere, is supreme, but the States, within the limits of the powers which they have not granted to the Federal Government, are as independent of it as that Government, within its sphere, is independent of the States.

FEDERAL TAXING POWERS LIMITED

"Of necessity, the Federal Government had to be granted the power of taxation, but certain limitations were imposed upon the exercise of that power. All direct taxes were prohibited, unless levied in proportion to the census, which the Constitution directed to be taken. This limitation should be remembered, as it is one which affects the question under discussion. The States, however, reserved to themselves the power of taxation for State and local purposes. Thus it is quite possible for the States and the Federal Government to levy taxes upon the same source of revenue. Conflicts in the exercise of these respective taxing powers were almost inevitable, and the courts had occasion to decide cases arising out of these conflicts almost immediately after the establishment of the Federal Government.

"Chief Justice Marshall, in McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat. 316), pointed out that if the States possessed the power to tax the Federal Government, or the means or instrumentalities through which it exercised its constitutional powers, the Federal Government would be subordinate to the States. He declared the power to tax was the power to destroy, and that if it were conceded that the States possessed the power to tax the Federal Government or its governmental instrumentalities, they could impede, if not destroy, the Federal Government. To maintain the supremacy of the Federal Government within its appropriate sphere, as the Constitution clearly intended, Chief Justice Marshall rendered his famous decision in McCulloch v. Maryland that the States had no power, by taxation or otherwise, to impede, burden, or in any manner control the operation of the laws enacted by Congress to carry into effect the powers vested in the Federal Government.

"Applying the principle announced in this decision, the same Court, in the case of Western v. Charleston (2 Pet. 449), held that an ordinance of the city of Charleston, S.C., attempting to tax securities issued by the United States was unconstitutional. The Court pointed out that such a tax would inevitably fall upon the borrower, and that, in reality, it would be a tax upon the exercise of the power of the Federal Government to borrow money; in short, a tax upon the United States Government itself. That decision has been repeatedly followed by the Federal courts as well as by the courts of the various States.

EARLY DECISIONS NEVER SERIOUSLY QUESTIONED

"But it is equally true, to admit the power of the Federal Government to tax the States or the means or agencies through which they exercise their sovereign powers, would subordinate the States to the Federal Government, which, likewise, was not intended by the framers of the Constitution. It follows, therefore, as a necessary corollary to the decisions in McCulloch v. Maryland and Weston v. Charleston that the United States cannot tax the governmental functions of the States. Accordingly we find the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Collector v. Day (11 Wall. 113) and in the United States v. Railroad Co. (17 Wall. 322), holding that the United States could not levy taxes upon bonds issued by an instrumentality of State government. These decisions likewise have not been seriously questioned since they were rendered generations ago.

INCOME TAX LAW OF 1894

"In the year 1894, however, Congress passed a law providing for the taxing of income, including income derived from interest upon notes, bonds, or other securities, except certain bonds of the United States. It was contended that, while the bonds issued by the States or their instrumentalities of government could not be taxed by Congress, there was no reason why it could not tax the income derived from these bonds. The validity of this law was considered by the Supreme Court of the United States in Pollock v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co. (157 U.S. 429). Chief Justice Fuller, in delivering the opinion of the Court, said:

"'We think the same want of power to tax the property or revenues of the States or their instrumentalities exists in relation to a tax on the income from their securities * * * it is obvious that taxation on the interest therefrom would operate on the power to borrow before it is exercised, and would have a sensible influence on the contract, and that the tax in question is a tax on the power of the States and their instrumentalities to borrow money, and consequently repugnant to the Constitution.'

"The Income Tax Law of 1894 was held unconstitutional in this same case on still another ground. I have referred to the fact that the Constitution required an apportionment among the States, based upon the census, of any direct taxes levied by Congress. In the Pollock case the Court held that an income tax was a direct tax and as the tax had not been apportioned among the several States in proportion to the census it was unconstitutional.

NECESSITY FOR THE SIXTEENTH AMENDMENT

"This decision rendered the levy of income taxes by the Federal Government impracticable until the ratification of the sixteenth amendment, which provides as follows:

"'The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States and without regard to any census or enumeration.'

"Upon the ratification of this amendment—indeed, before it was ratified—it was contended that its effect would be to vest in Congress the power to levy taxes upon the income derived from State and municipal bonds, but when the Supreme Court of the United States had occasion to consider the effect of the amendment, it declared that it merely removed the requirement for an apportionment among the States of taxes laid upon income. Justice Van Devanter in Evans v. Gore (253 U.S. 245), said:

"'Thus the genesis and words of the amendment unite in showing that it does not extend the taxing power to new or excepted subjects, but merely removes all occasion otherwise existing for an apportionment among the States of taxes laid on income, whether derived from one source or another.'

"If the effect of the sixteenth amendment was not to extend the taxing power of Congress to new or excepted subjects, then it did not confer upon Congress power to tax the income from State and municipal securities, for such income had been excepted from the taxing power of the Federal Government.

NATIONAL LIFE CASE

"The Supreme Court of the United States has never had occasion to pass upon the constitutionality of an act of Congress attempting directly to tax income derived from State or municipal bonds, but in National Life Insurance Co. v. United States (277 U.S. 508) it was called upon to consider whether the effect of a statutory computation of deductions was to impose a tax upon the income of State and municipal securities. It held that the act did indirectly impose a tax upon such income and that insofar as it affected State and municipal bonds it was unconstitutional. Justice McReynolds, in delivering the opinion of the Court, said:

"'It is settled doctrine that directly to tax the income from securities amounts to taxation of the securities themselves (Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Wisconsin, 275 U.S. 136). Also that the United States may not tax State or municipal obligations.'

"In Willcuts v. Bunn (282 U.S. 216) Chief Justice Hughes said:

"'The well-established principle is invoked that a tax upon the instrumentalities of the States is forbidden by the Federal Constitution, the exemption resting upon necessary implication in order effectively to maintain our dual system of government. The familiar aphorism is "that if the means and instrumentalities employed by the General Government to carry into operation the powers granted to it are exempt from taxation by the States, so are those of the States exempt from taxation by the General Government" (Ambrosini v. United States, 1, 7). And a tax upon the obligations of a State or of its political subdivisions falls within the constitutional prohibition as a tax upon the exercise of the borrowing power of the State. * * *

"'In the case of the obligations of a State or of its political subdivisions, the subject held to be exempt from Federal taxation is the principal and interest of the obligations. Pollock v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co., supra. These obligations constitute the contract made by the State, or by its political agency pursuant to its authority, and a tax upon the amounts payable by the terms of the contract has, therefore, been regarded as bearing directly upon the exercise of the borrowing power of the Government. In Weston v. Charleston (2 Pet. 449, 468, 469), where the tax, laid under an ordinance of the city council upon United States stock which had been issued for loans made to the United States, was held invalid, the principle was thus stated by Chief Justice Marshall: "The right to tax the contract to any extent, when made, must operate upon the power to borrow before it is exercised and have a sensible influence on the contract. The extent of this influence depends on the will of a distinct government. To any extent, however inconsiderable, it is a burden on the operations of government * * *. The tax on Government stock is thought by this court to be a tax on the contract, a tax on the power to borrow money on the credit of the United States, and consequently to be repugnant to the Constitution." This language was applied by the court in Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., supra (157 U.S. at p. 586) in holding invalid Federal taxation "on the interest" from municipal securities.'" (Italics mine.)

OTHER RECENT CASES

"In Indian Motocycle Co. v. United States (283 U.S. 570) Justice Van Devanter said at page 576:

"'It has been adjudged that bonds of the United States issued to raise money for governmental purposes, and the interest thereon, are immune from State taxation, because such a tax, even though inconsiderable in amount and imposed only on holders of the bonds, would burden the exercise by the United States of its powers to borrow money. * * * And this immunity has been held to include bonds of a municipal corporation in a territory issued to raise money for municipal purposes, the decision being put on the ground that such a corporation is an instrumentality of the United States exercising delegated governmental powers. * * * It also has been adjudged that bonds of municipal corporations in the several States issued to raise money for public municipal purposes, and the interest thereon, are immune from Federal taxation, and this on the ground that such corporations are representatives of the States and exercise some of their powers, and that under the implications of the Constitution the governmental agencies and operations of the States have the same immunity from Federal taxation that like agencies and operations of the United States have from taxation by the States.' (Italics mine.)

"In Educational Films Corporation v. Ward (282 U.S. 379), Mr. Justice Stone declared that, 'this Court, since McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat. 316) has consistently held that the instrumentalities of either government, or the income derived from them, may not be made the direct object of taxation by the other * * *' (Italics mine.)

REVERSAL OF DECISIONS NOT PROBABLE

"To my mind it is inconceivable that the Supreme Court of the United States would reverse a long line of decisions extending from John Marshall's time down almost to the present date, and sustain, as constitutional, an act of Congress levying a tax on the income derived from State and municipal securities. The recent opinions, above quoted, clearly indicate that the court would hold such an act unconstitutional. Indeed, were it to do otherwise, it would open a Pandora's box of evils. If Congress is not prohibited by the Constitution from taxing the income from State and municipal bonds, then the States are not prohibited from taxing the income derived from bonds issued by the Federal Government. The consequences of such a decision would be very far-reaching, but I do not intend to indulge in needless speculation upon them, as I am firmly convinced that it would never be rendered.

"Lest I be misunderstood, let me make it perfectly clear that I have been discussing taxes levied by Congress directly upon the income derived from State and municipal securities. Such securities, and the income derived therefrom, may be made indirectly the subject of taxation, as, for instance, through the levy of inheritance taxes, or corporation franchise taxes, etc. An inheritance tax is not a tax upon the security, but upon the right to inherit, and it may be measured by the value of the inheritance, notwithstanding the fact that the property passing may consist wholly of tax-exempt securities. Likewise franchise taxes have been sustained, which are measured by the corporate income, including income from tax-exempt securities. Such taxes are taxes upon the right to exercise the corporate franchise, and are not taxes upon the securities themselves. Other forms of excise taxes exist or may hereafter be devised which may indirectly affect State and municipal securities. These taxes, however, are not within the scope of this opinion.

"If the taxation of income from State and municipal bonds is desirable, the remedy lies in a constitutional amendment. In that way the extent, to which such taxation might be permitted, could be definitely fixed, and the desired result could be accomplished, without endangering the existence of the dual system of government, which, with all its frictions and imperfections, has worked remarkably well.

UNDER CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT, OUTSTANDING AS WELL AS NEW BONDS COULD BE TAXED

"The question is sometimes asked whether, under such a constitutional amendment, Congress could tax the income of outstanding State and municipal bonds, or whether it would be limited to taxation of income from bonds issued after the ratification of the amendment. The answer to that question would depend upon the terms of the amendment. There is nothing to prevent the amendment of the Constitution so as to confer upon Congress the power to tax the income from all outstanding State and municipal bonds. Indeed Congress might be authorized to tax the bonds themselves. That would not amount to a breach of contract on the part of the Federal Government. The Federal Government has entered into no contract with the holders of State and municipal bonds to refrain from taxing them or the income derived from them. The only contract which exists is between the State, or municipality, which issued the instrument and the holder, a contract to which the United States is not a party. The reason taxes are not now levied by Congress upon income derived from such securities, is only because of the fact that the taxing power of Congress does not extend to that subject, and not because of any contract made by the United States with the holder of the bonds, to refrain from taxing them or the income derived from them.

"Whenever the people of the United States determine to vest in Congress, by constitutional amendment, the power to tax State and municipal bonds or the income derived therefrom, Congress will possess that power to whatever extent the people grant it, but, until such a constitutional amendment is ratified, Congress possesses no power to tax the income derived from bonds issued by the States or by their municipalities or political subdivisions."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Cutting	Keyes	Reynolds
Ashurst	Davis	King	Robinson, Ind.
Bachman	Dickinson	La Follette	Russell
Bailey	Duffy	Lewis	Schall
Bankhead	Fess	Logan	Sheppard
Barbour	Fletcher	Lonergan	Shipstead
Barkley	Frazier	Long	Smith
Brown	George	McGill	Steiwer
Bulow	Gibson	McKellar	Stephens
Byrd	Gore	McNary	Thompson
Byrnes	Hale	Murphy	Townsend
Capper	Harrison	Neely	Vandenberg
Clark	Hastings	Norris	Van Nuys
Connally	Hatch	Nye	Wagner
Copeland	Hatfield	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Costigan	Hayden	Overton	White
Couzens	Hebert	Pope

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I wish to reannounce the absence of the Senators and the reasons for their absence as previously given by me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to say a word on the pending amendment. If Senators desire to kill the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, let them vote for the amendment to that amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee. To my mind, it would kill it completely.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a moment.

As I see the whole matter, this is a contest between a theory of taxation based on ability to pay and a theory of taxation based on consumption. We have been having this fight in the Senate and the House of Representatives and in the country for several years. If we are to have a system of taxation based on ability to pay, it can only be based on ability to pay. In other words, it must be uniform; and, to my mind, the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee would absolutely kill the whole proposal.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that after the 15th day of June no Senator be permitted to speak more than 50 times nor more than 2 hours on the pending bill or any amendment thereto. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is out of order.

Mr. LONGERAN. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that within the last 3 or 4 weeks the Treasury Department gave an official opinion on the question of dealing with tax-exempt securities. It suggested that the first step to take is to have a constitutional amendment adopted and ratified, authorizing the taxation of securities issued by the States and subdivisions thereof, and, following that, that the Federal Government deal with the problem through Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEWIS (when Mr. DIETERICH's name was called). My colleague [Mr. DIETERICH], were he present and voting, would vote "yea."

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am not advised as to how that Senator would vote were he present, and therefore I withhold my vote. If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was completed.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY];

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN];

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED];

The Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT];

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]; and

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH].

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, on this vote my colleague, the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] has a pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea" on this question. I am informed that if present the Senator from Arkansas would vote "nay."

Mr. WAGNER (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. LEWIS. I regret to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

I also wish to announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the Senator from Montana [Mr. ERICKSON], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—38

Adams	Davis	Keyes	Sheppard
Bachman	Fletcher	King	Smith
Bailey	George	Lewis	Steiwer
Bankhead	Gibson	Lonergan	Stephens
Barbour	Gore	McKellar	Thompson
Barkley	Hale	McNary	Townsend
Byrd	Harrison	Murphy	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Hastings	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Connally	Hatfield	Overton
Copeland	Hebert	Robinson, Ind.

NAYS—27

Ashurst	Cutting	Logan	Reynolds
Brown	Dickinson	Long	Russell
Bulow	Duffy	McGill	Schall
Capper	Frazier	Neely	Shipstead
Clark	Hatch	Norris	Vandenberg
Costigan	Hayden	Nye	Walsh
Couzens	La Follette	Pope

NOT VOTING—31

Austin	Dieterich	McAdoo	Thomas, Okla.
Black	Dill	McCarran	Thomas, Utah
Bone	Erickson	Metcalf	Trammell
Borah	Fess	Norbeck	Tydings
Bulkley	Glass	Patterson	Walcott
Caraway	Goldsborough	Pittman	Wheeler
Carey	Johnson	Reed	White
Coolidge	Kean	Robinson, Ark.

So Mr. MCKELLAR's amendment to Mr. CLARK's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, the amendment which I offered has been completely emasculated by the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] to my amendment. The whole purpose of the amendment has been destroyed by the adoption of that amendment. In view of that fact, and in view of the further fact that my amendment involved the striking out of certain provisions of the bill which ought not to be stricken out unless the whole purpose of the amendment is to be served, I withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none and the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to offer some clarifying amendments to several sections to which the Senate has already agreed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the votes by which the several amendments now proposed to be amended were heretofore agreed to will be reconsidered.

The clerk will state the first amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 237, after line 20, in the amendment offered by Mr. SHIPSTEAD, and agreed to yesterday, it is proposed that a heading be inserted, as follows:

SEC. 613. Tax on distilled spirits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is also proposed to amend the amendment of Mr. MCKELLAR by inserting after "(d)" the words "Compensation of officers and employees."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the House text on page 133, lines 1 and 2, it is proposed to strike out the words "for such taxable year."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 68, line 6, after the word "for", it is proposed to insert "all or a part of."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, we derive a very small revenue from candy, and in view of the situation I offer an amendment to eliminate the tax on candy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert in the proper place a new section as follows:

SEC. —. Termination of tax on candy: The tax imposed by section 613 of the Revenue Act of 1932 shall not apply to candy sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer after the date of the enactment of this act.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection to that going to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, that is all. The Senator from Nebraska desires to ask for a modification of his amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, after the amendment I offered yesterday was agreed to, I found there should be an additional proviso, and I am offering an amendment to that end. It would simply perfect the amendment.

Provided further, That business done for the Federal Government or any of its agencies shall not be considered as nonmember business within the meaning of this act.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska, Is that a modification of the amendment he offered, and which was adopted?

Mr. NORRIS. It simply adds a proviso to it.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand; but it carries out the same thought the Senator had in offering his amendment?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection to the amendment's going to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the Senate agreed to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska will be reconsidered.

Without objection, the amendment now proposed to that amendment is agreed to, and without objection the amendment as amended is agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senate is aware that I have an amendment which was offered and printed some days ago, which proposed to increase the tariff on copper imported into the United States from the present rate of 4 cents per pound to 10 cents per pound. I made the best argument of which I was capable, and I wish to say that the Senate did me the unusual compliment of listening to what I had to say on that occasion. Therefore I will not vex the ears of my fellow Senators at this late hour in a work of supererogation in repeating what I said last Wednesday.

Moreover, the able Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has an amendment which he intends to propose to strike out the tariff of 4 cents a pound on copper, which is now the law and will be for another year.

I have in the most unobtrusive fashion possible, but with great diligence, learned that the Senator from Missouri will be unsuccessful; that if he should make his motion, it would not carry and he would lose on the question.

I repeat, frankness and plainness of speech are best; so I say, with much regret, that, after a thorough, and I hope not an offensive, canvass, I have reached the conclusion that my amendment to increase the tariff from 4 cents to 10 cents a pound will likewise be defeated. Whether I am doing the proper thing or not in not asking for a roll call on my amendment subsequent events must determine.

After many years of service I have come to the conclusion that a Senator does not elevate himself in the esteem of his fellow Senators when, at a late hour, after many weeks of weary work, he inflicts a long speech upon them which he knows will not change one vote.

I am confident that I have not a sufficient number of votes to adopt my amendment, and I am equally confident that the able Senator from Missouri has not a sufficient number of votes to strike out the copper tariff. Therefore, I make this statement to the Senate, and ask permission at this time to have a vote on my amendment without further debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arizona will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill, it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. Excise taxes on certain articles: (a) In addition to any other tax or duty imposed by law, there shall be imposed a tax as provided in subsection (c) on every article imported into the United States.

(b) The tax imposed under subsection (a) shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in the same manner as a duty imposed by the Tariff Act of 1930, and shall be treated for the purposes of all provisions of law relating to the customs revenue as a duty imposed by such act.

(1) Such tax shall be imposed in full notwithstanding any provision of law granting exemption from or reduction of duties to products of any possession of the United States.

(c) There is hereby imposed upon the following articles imported into the United States a tax at the rates hereinafter set forth, to be paid by the importer:

(1) Copper-bearing ores and concentrates and articles provided for in paragraphs 316, 380, 381, 387, 1620, 1634, 1657, 1658, and 1659 of the Tariff Act of 1930, 10 cents per pound on the copper contained therein: Provided, That no tax under this paragraph shall be imposed on copper in any of the foregoing which is lost in metallurgical processes: Provided further, That ores or concentrates usable as a flux or sulphur reagent in copper smelting and/or converting and having a copper content of not more than 15 percent, when imported for fluxing purposes, shall be admitted free of said tax in an aggregate amount of not to exceed in any one year 15,000 tons of copper content. All articles dutiable under the Tariff Act of 1930, not provided for heretofore in this paragraph, in which copper (including copper in alloys) is the component material of chief value, 6 cents per pound. All articles dutiable under the Tariff Act of 1930, not provided for heretofore in this paragraph, containing 4 percent or more of copper by weight, 6 percent ad valorem or 1½ cents per pound, whichever is the lower. The tax on the articles described in this paragraph shall apply only with respect to the importation of such articles. The Secretary is authorized to prescribe all necessary regulations for the enforcement of the provisions of this paragraph.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In furtherance of the Senator's very worthy purpose not to inflict another speech upon the Senate, I shall not do so myself; but I should like in his time to put in the RECORD the fact that after the adoption of the 4-cent tariff on copper the importations dropped from 168,000,000 pounds to 11,000,000 pounds, and the price went up from 5½ cents to over 7 cents per pound; so that really the present situation is very favorable to the copper producers in this country.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to say that the Senator from Arizona has been one of the most zealous and persistent advocates of this matter with whom I have ever come in contact in my life, and I am very glad he has taken this position.

Can we now have a vote on the amendment?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from Arizona and I have at last reached an absolute agreement on the question of copper. He has found out that he cannot put on a 10-cent tax, and I have found out that I cannot take off the 4-cent tax at this session, in this bill. Therefore I am entirely willing to have the Senator's amendment submitted to a vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask to be permitted to insert in the RECORD, without reading, a table of figures from the Bureau of Customs, Treasury Department, showing the importations of copper and the amount of revenue derived under the tax bill of 1932.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

Imports of copper and copper manufactures dutiable under sec. 601, Revenue Act of 1932, June 21, 1932, to Feb. 28, 1934, inclusive

	Rate of duty	Pounds, copper content				Duty collected
		June 21 to Dec. 31, 1932	Calendar year 1933	January and February 1934	Total under Revenue Act of 1932

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I now read an Associated Press dispatch.

I have always depended upon the reporters of the press as being as accurate as human limitations permit. The reporters must shoot from the hip. The editorial writers may sit down and turn the stylus. They may see to it that they do not split infinitives; but the reporters who send out the dispatches, I repeat, must shoot from the hip. I marvel at how nearly accurate the reporters for the various newspapers are.

Relying, therefore, upon their accuracy, I wish to read a dispatch from the Associated Press, as follows:

PHOENIX, ARIZ., March 27. (A.P. dispatch).—Gov. B. B. Moeur, of Arizona, said today that he was asking the various governors to support Senator ASHURST's amendment proposing a tariff of 10 cents per pound on copper imported into the United States, and that if the tariff of 10 cents per pound on copper became a law, Arizona would never ask for one dollar of relief from the Federal Treasury.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. McNARY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEWIS (when Mr. DIETERICH's name was called). I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. DIETERICH], if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who is unavoidably absent from the Senate. I do not know how he would vote on this question and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WAGNER (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON] to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. COOLIDGE] and to state that if present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS. I beg to reannounce on this roll call the pairs announced by me upon previous roll calls as follows:

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY];

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN];

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED];

The Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT];

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from Montana [Mr. ERICKSON], the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the Senators from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN and Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], are necessarily detained from the Senate.

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is necessarily detained. If present, he would vote "nay" on this question.

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] has a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF].

I regret to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. If the Senator from Maryland were present he would vote "nay" on this question, and if the Senator from Montana were present he would vote "yea."

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is also necessarily absent. I am authorized to say that if present he would vote "yea" on this question.

Mr. HATFIELD (after having voted in the negative). Has the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. HATFIELD. I have a pair with that Senator. Not being able to secure a transfer, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BLACK. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]. I do not know how he would vote on the question, but if I were at liberty to vote I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 53, nays 7, as follows:

YEAS—53

CLAIM OF FRANKLIN SURETY CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1076) authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Franklin Surety Co., which was, on page 2, line 4, after the word "claim", to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. BAILEY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

RICHARD A. CHAVIS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2032) for the relief of Richard A. Chavis, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment, agree to the conference requested by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. COOLIDGE, and Mr. PATTERSON conferees on the part of the Senate.

ANNUAL REPORT OF ASSISTANT DIRECTOR GENERAL OF RAILROADS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury forwarding the annual report of the Assistant Director General of Railroads for the calendar year 1933.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 13, 1934.

[NOTE.—Report accompanied similar messages to the House of Representatives.]

COMMITTEE TO AUDIT AND CONTROL THE CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF THE SENATE

Mr. BYRNES, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred Senate Resolution 222, submitted today by Mr. MCGILL, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized during the Seventy-third Congress to send for persons, books and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

COMMEMORATION OF THE TWO HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF DANIEL BOONE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have been authorized by the Committee on Banking and Currency to report back favorably Senate bill 3355, authorizing the Daniel Boone Bicentennial Commission to have coined a memorial half dollar similar to other authorizations in other situations. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (S. 3355) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Daniel Boone, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in commemoration of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Daniel Boone, there shall be coined by the Director of the Mint six hundred thousand 50-cent pieces of standard size, weight, and silver fineness and of a special appropriate design to be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be legal tender in all payments at face value.

SEC. 2. That the coins herein authorized shall be issued at par and only upon the request of the secretary of the Daniel Boone Bicentennial Commission.

SEC. 3. Such coins may be disposed of at par or at a premium by said commission and all proceeds shall be used in furtherance of the Daniel Boone Bicentennial Commission projects.

SEC. 4. That all laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same; regulating and guarding the process of coinage; providing for the purchase of material, and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of the coins; for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting; for security of the coin; or for any other purposes, whether said laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein directed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, is the report of the committee a unanimous one?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that I polled the committee, and more than a majority of those with whom I was able to confer authorized the report. There are one or two members whom I was not able to see. It is the usual bill. We passed one the other day for Maryland, and one for Arkansas, and one for some other association. The measure is an entirely meritorious one.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COOPERATIVE FARMS—LETTER FROM FORMER SENATOR BROOKHART

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from former Senator Smith W. Brookhart to the national commander of the American Legion relative to cooperative farms.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HYATTSVILLE, MD., April 11, 1934.

Mr. EDWARD A. HAYES,
National Commander American Legion, Indianapolis, Ind.

MY DEAR COMMANDER: It has just been called to my attention that you were quoted in a Chicago paper on April 4 as follows:

"Smith W. Brookhart has repeatedly urged regimentation of American farming under the communistic system. Such statements coming from a corner soap-boxer would be unimportant. Uttered by a special adviser to the A.A.A. they become dangerous and should be investigated as seditious."

As a member of the American Legion I challenge your right as its commander to put a false construction upon the acts of any member for political purposes. The Legion is not in politics as a party, and every member has the right to respectful treatment from its commander, regardless of his political views. You have not accorded that right to me, and I challenge your insolent and autocratic assumption as more dangerous and seditious than any public policy I have ever advocated. When did you become the dictator of the opinions of legionnaires upon the farm problem?

My proposition for cooperative farms, fully stated, was as follows:

"The Farm Bureau Federation of the State of Ohio has declared that the Government should lease and operate the farm lands. This suggests a permanent reorganization of agriculture. At one time the Government owned most of the farm lands. The parting with this title is one of the great mistakes of American statesmanship. It can only be corrected by the Government resuming the title and reorganizing the farms into cooperative units big enough to meet the demands of modern machinery, efficiency, and civilization generally. This could be started by the acquisition of a tract of land in each agricultural congressional district large enough for the most efficient organization. Let it be equipped with a village for modern sanitary living conditions, with school, hospital, and adequate medical and nursing staffs. It should also have a machine shop and small industries for processing its own products. It should have good roads, the best machinery, and the best livestock. It should also have complete electrical equipment and a cooperative bank and department store. It would then be operated by a cooperative organization of farmers and laborers. If this could be done on a scale large enough to give it a fair trial, it might lead to a final solution of the age-old farm problem."

You call this "regimentation." I am willing to concede that you may be expert at regimenting this country into militarism, but I see no such qualifications for the farm problem, nor even for a soldiers' bonus or pensions for disabilities since the war. So I must call your attention to the fact that our Government has already regimented 158,000,000 acres of public lands over to the railroads, and that is the equal of four and one half States as big as Illinois or Iowa. The Transportation Act of 1920 also regimented over $7,000,000,000 of water into railroad values above their market value and raised the farmers' rates 60 percent above prewar while his own prices went far below. The Government now has many million acres of public lands which it is regimenting out by leases to corporations and individuals many times more than would be required for my cooperative farms. Three or four million acres would set up these farms, and their whole equipment would not cost one tenth what the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has loaned to the railroads, the banks, and other corporations—and the R.F.C. is a child of rugged individualism, the bill promoted and signed by Herbert Hoover. You ought to investigate him for seditious regimentation.

If you are really interested in the regimentation of the farmers, I will try and get a night school started for you so you can learn how the railroad laws, the banking laws, the tariff laws, the corporation laws, and the gambling markets have regimented the farmers into 13 years of deep depression and how it will take other more drastic governmental action in addition to these cooperative farms to lift them out. You may also learn something about regimentation in general that will clear up some of your present distorted ideas. You will hardly dispute that the best thing in our civilization is the public-school system, regimented by the States and by the National Government in the District and the Territories, even compulsory education in most of them. Next comes the public-road system with only a few private initiative toll-bridge nuisances left. Then comes the Post Office System, the Panama Canal, public parks, docks and harbors, municipally owned utilities, Muscle Shoals, and we must not forget Boulder Dam, again authorized over the signature of Herbert Hoover. So, my dear commander, when you get informed so you can use your head instead of your prejudices you will find that an indictment of "regimentation" is an indictment of the American people, the American Government and the American flag. You will also find that a cooperative organization is not regimentation at all, but on the other hand the most democratic form of business ever devised by the mind of man. And if you will go with me out in Iowa I will show you a cooperative farm 85 years old, 1,500 people, 27,000 acres, the most successful farming enterprise in the State and the most law-abiding people.

Very sincerely yours,

SMITH W. BROOKHART.

COMPETITION OF JAPANESE TEXTILE MANUFACTURERS—ARGUMENT BY O. MAX GARDNER

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an argument by Hon. O. Max Gardner, counsel for Cotton Textile Institute, before the Tariff Commission in Washington, D.C., January 23, 1934, which will convey to the Senate certain important information concerning the competition of Japanese textile manufacturers with American textile manufacturers.

There being no objection, the argument was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I appear as counsel for the Cotton Textile Institute. On behalf of the institute and its entire membership representing one of the great basic industries of this country, employing in its affiliates more than 500,000 men and women, I desire to express appreciation to the Tariff Commission for its diligence and splendid cooperation in the preparation of the information necessary to act intelligently upon this provision of the National Recovery Act. Those of us who have been interested in this research from the beginning, last August, could not have made the progress that we have in the development of the facts except for the cooperation of this arm of the Government.

I should like to say, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that the Cotton Textile Institute, with which members of the Cotton Rug Manufacturers Association are affiliated, has cooperated in every possible way from the beginning to make the National Recovery Act a success.

It will be remembered that the President, in a national broadcast some 2 weeks before this bill was introduced, directed attention to the textile industry as having within it certain members whose business practices produced demoralized conditions. The President mentioned 10 percent of the textile group in this class. The Cotton Textile Institute commenced at that time, and prior to that time, to exert every power at its command to bring this great and diversified industry in the North and East and South and West into perfect agreement with the policy of the Government. This statement is borne out by the fact that the first code, code no. 1, is the Cotton Textile Code. That code today is in operation giving effect and purpose to the policy of the Government as efficiently as any other code that has been submitted. I think that General Johnson and the President would say to you that there has been in every stage of this movement complete cooperation on the part of the Cotton Textile Institute.

I think that this picture ought to go into the record: In March 1933 there were employed in the cotton textile industry in America 320,000 men and women, and, I fear, perhaps some few children. In September 1933 the cotton textile industry had 446,000 operatives, an increase of 146,000 people from April 15 to September 1, an increase in employment of 45 percent over that period. No other industry in America can show such a record; but, more significant than this increased employment, which was one of the fundamental purposes of the National Recovery Act and spread of employment, is the fact that in March 1933 the total monthly salary paid to the textile workers, the 320,000 men and women, amounted to $12,800,000. In September of 1933 it amounted to $27,000,000, an increase in wages to this increased number of operatives of approximately 114 percent.

Now, the Cotton Rug Manufacturers Association is included in that statement. But the significance of this application before this body and its merit is found in the fact that whereas, actually, the cotton textile industry had increased its employment in conformity to the purposes of this act and to give it effect had spread employment, and had increased wages for that purpose, the cotton rug manufacturers, starting in September or August or July, have suffered a loss in employment, so that today there are approximately only 15 percent as many men and women employed in the manufacture of cotton rugs as there were in June and September. In other words, 85 percent of these men and women are out of employment, whereas the whole industry has shown this tremendous expansion. I respectfully submit that this condition is directly attributable to Japanese competition, crushing competition, in cotton rugs.

I happen, Mr. Chairman, to know something about the early inception of this National Recovery Act. I served on the Industry Committee when this act was being prepared. When this act was prepared and submitted to Congress this section 3 was not in it. When it passed the House it was not in it. My recollection is that it was put in when it went to the Senate. Now, why was it put in there? I think that this case presented is a case that is as clearly and manifestly in contemplation of the act of Congress as any case that could be presented. In this case we respectfully submit that an emergency exists.

I think that this provision of this act, that is, section 3, conferring this power upon you as the agent of the President to make this inquiry, is one of the finest and most efficient methods of the administration to bring about the readjustment of America's economic and social structure, without which we would be helpless. That is the reason Congress finally placed this provision in the statute. Let me read you section 3 of the act under which we ask relief:

"On his own motion, or if any labor organization, or any trade or industrial organization, association, or group, which has complied with the provisions of this title, shall make complaint to the President that any article or articles are being imported into the United States in substantial quantities or increasing ratio to domestic production of any competitive article or articles and on such terms or under such conditions as to render ineffective or seriously to endanger the maintenance of any code or agreement under this title, the President may cause an immediate investigation to be made by the United States Tariff Commission, which shall give precedence to investigations under this subsection, and if, after such investigation and such public notice and hearing as he shall specify, the President shall find the existence of such facts, he shall, in order to effectuate the policy of this title, direct that the article or articles concerned shall be permitted entry into the United States only upon such terms and conditions and subject to the payment of such fees and to such limitations in the total quantity which may be imported (in the course of any specified period or periods) as he shall find it necessary to prescribe in order that the entry thereof shall not render or tend to render ineffective any code or agreement made under this title."

We know that when this act was being prepared the Secretary of State was on his way to the London Conference, where it was expected that tariff barriers and economic needs that had disturbed the relations of world commerce would be discussed. Yet, out of the rebirth of the Nation, it was found that the National Recovery Act had intervened. The language of the act is positive and direct. There is nothing ambiguous about it. When facts show—and they show it in this case—that speed is of necessity, the President is authorized to make an immediate investigation; and, if he shall find the existence of such facts, he shall, in order to effectuate the policy of this section, direct that the article or articles concerned shall be permitted entry into the United States only upon such terms and conditions and subject to the payment of such fees and subject to such limitations as he may prescribe in order that the entry thereof shall not render or tend to render ineffective any code or agreement under this title.

That is why we are here. I submit that the evidence presented by the Cotton Rug Manufacturers Association will not only tend to show, but will convince this group beyond the shadow of a doubt, that the American cotton-rug industry is being ruined, literally ruined, by the flood of imports into this country, resulting in the paralysis of the members of this group, if not corrected by the arm of the Government that you set in motion.

It is a significant thing, gentlemen, that under the increased operating costs of the National Recovery Act the cotton-textile industry of America has practically lost its export trade. In 1932 the cotton-textile industry exported about 7 to 7½ percent of its total manufactured products. We have practically lost our foreign trade, and that is not unnatural because none of the foreign competitors of the American cotton industry are under a code or anything like the restrictions and the humane and social policies that characterize the American plan under the administration of Franklin D. Roosevelt. The Philippines is a particularly favored section under the arm and protection of the United States. Yet we have lost—practically lost—their trade to the Japanese. The Japanese are landing goods there every day, because they can pay the tariff and still occupy the market.

The same is true of Cuba. We have no trade in Cuba—practically none—in cotton textiles.

Even in Puerto Rico we are suffering great disadvantages, and our exports have practically passed out. Unless relief of some sort is granted, we are going to be confronted in this country with trying to operate a great industry whose products will have to find a market only with the American consumer. Of course, our condition is nothing like the condition of England, where 70 percent of their products are exported; nor is it like the condition of Japan, where a large percentage of her cotton goods are exported. While we have only 7 percent, that 7 percent represents $115,000,000, and it represents the employment of around 50,000 people. As the export business dries up, that 7 percent necessarily has to come back into domestic business and becomes a competitor with the 93 percent engaged in the manufacture of American goods.

Mr. Chairman, we are going to present only two or three witnesses. We are taking notice of the fact that this branch of the Government exercises its power to perform its duty. We realize that you have not heard either yesterday or today a scintilla of evidence from the witness stand that is not already in your possession. Speaking for the Cotton Textile Institute, I would be perfectly content to permit this group to make its recommendation to the President without the introduction of a particle of evidence, because of the confidence we have in the fairness and diligence and research of this Commission.

I think we are in a public hearing because the statute requires it, and we are here to bring just as much light and information as we think will tend to clarify the record and to satisfy your judgment.

The first witness to be called in this case is Mr. Roy Cleeland, of Philadelphia. Mr. Cleeland has been working now for 5 months in the preparation of the record and in the study of the history of the cotton-rug industry and the inroads that have been made constantly and increasingly ruinous to its condition in American industrial life. He has performed a service for the industry and for the country which I think is very patriotic and unselfish. Mr. Cleeland is the president of the Cotton Rug Manufacturers' Association, and is familiar with every phase of the industry. He is also president of the Robert Cleeland Sons, of Philadelphia. He understands the whole science of manufacture. He knows particularly about rag rugs and Chenille rugs, and in his particular function encompasses the whole industry.

I ask Mr. Cleeland to come around as the first witness.

* * * * * * *

Mr. BAILEY. In closing Mr. Gardner said:

That is our case. We are at the pleasure of the Commission.

Mr. Bevans brought out a number of matters which should be answered, Mr. Chairman, that are not altogether in the evidence. I should like, at the pleasure of the Commission, to have a little time to make answer to them as best I can. I shall undertake to do that now or will do it at your pleasure. It is now half past 5. I am sure I could finish in 15 or 20 minutes.

(Permission to proceed is granted.)

Mr. Chairman, on the question of the remedy that the complaining parties would ask this Commission to make, I state to the Commission very frankly that we have gone into this matter carefully to see all the various elements involved in it, recognizing, as we think we do, that the policy even of the administration on the tariff or on the question of duties or on the question of this act itself has not been fully determined.

I do not feel, Mr. Chairman, that it is wholly incumbent upon us to prescribe the remedy. But we want to be just as courteous and helpful as we can to this Commission, but there are so many problems involved in this matter and it is so intricate in its detail, since this act is all new, that I, speaking for the Cotton Textile Institute and for the rug manufacturers in particular, wish to say that we feel that we have brought this complaint under competent jurisdiction. We have undertaken to fortify it as best we could by our own evidence and research and investigation of this committee.

We do not think that we can bring here anything constructive except the fact of what we allege to be our injury and our injustice. We think that the remedy is in the hands of the President of the United States, based, doubtless, upon the recommendation of this competent court.

I am not going to undertake to say that an allotment is a proper thing. I am certainly not going to argue that an embargo is the proper course to pursue.

We do not want to assume a selfish attitude of undertaking to invoke a law or the enforcement of a law that would accrue to the selfish interests of our group and would be a penalty upon the consuming public. If I know how to interpret the position of this group, they want first to protect the industry engaged in this business. They want the right to live in America with a reasonable profit, and that is all. I would not be here undertaking to represent them if I thought they were undertaking to avail themselves of this law for the exploitation of the consuming public; and that is not their purpose.

If your decision is as important as we think it is, and as important as the statute contemplates it should be, then I think the statute steps in and comes to the aid of us in this request, and we are entitled to just as speedy a determination as is consistent with fair treatment.

I am not going to undertake to answer the entire argument of counsel for the Japanese——

Mr. BEVANS. For the American importers.

Mr. GARDNER. For the American importers. I meant no offense in that, Mr. Bevans. I am sure you understand.

Mr. BEVANS. It is perfectly all right.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Bevans undertook to interpret what was the purpose of the N.R.A. He said that it is a perversion of the N.R.A. for us to make this application in the spirit in which we have made it; that it was not designed as a protection to the American workman. Mr. Bevans is dead wrong. If it was not designed for that purpose, what was it designed for? If this Administration has any one definite, crystallized policy, it is to lift the American workman, to shorten his hours, to increase his wages, to spread employment, and to improve generally his social and economic condition. That is the purpose, the very gravamen, the mudsill upon which rests the N.R.A.

If Mr. Bevans wants to get the real purpose of the N.R.A., I submit that he read the hearings before the committees of Congress. He should get the debates. When the Supreme Court is determining the meaning of a statute, the first thing the Attorney General tries to do is to get at the meaning of Congress. He studies the hearings and debates as an essential part of the intent of Congress in making the law If our opponent gets the debates and reports of the hearings, he will find that running through them all is this situation: Millions of American workmen were idle, and this act had its genesis and its origin in a desire not only to give more people work but to improve the conditions of those who were working, and give them more than starvation wages in this country.

I do not intend to indulge in an unfair attack upon the strategy of Mr. Bevans, but there is one piece of evidence in this case which is significantly absent, and it is available if he had desired to bring it forward. You will bear in mind that in the examination of these witnesses one of the first questions he asked each of them was, "Are you under the code?" "Have you increased wages?" "Have you shortened hours?" "Have you employed more men and women?" All through the record these questions occur when Mr. Bevans inquires of American industry and of the employees and operatives in this cotton-rug industry.

Now, when we come to the question of the conditions existing in our greatest competing country, Japan, on these particular items Mr. Bevans not only does not ask his own witnesses about them, he does not wish to permit us to question them on this point. I see in this presence three Japanese, who I submit know everything about wages, standards of living, and industrial and social conditions in every single mill in Japan. I argue that the absence of any evidence on that point should be taken into consideration by the Commission. It leads irresistibly to this conclusion: If these witnesses could testify to the fact that Japan, since last July, had reorganized her industrial structure, as we have reorganized ours in this country, if Japan had changed her hours of labor as we have changed ours, if Japan had increased her employment as we have ours, then Japan would be on a parity, and there would be no new differences between conditions prevailing in the two countries. But the uncontested fact is that we have changed our conditions greatly, resulting in tremendous increases in costs, and Japan has not. I rejoice in the changes we have made. I am glad to live in a country that stretches its hands down to our people and lifts them up. This is the policy of the administration if I know how to interpret it. Just remember this, gentlemen of the Tariff Commission: The enactment of N.R.A. as a national policy excludes America from the field of fair and equal competition in world trade. And it is because of this fact, and this fact alone, that Congress wrote section 3 of the National Industrial Recovery Act. Japan, in order to have and to hold world markets, has apparently determined upon a policy of lowest possible costs. America, on the other hand, has determined that her workers shall not be exploited. This is the big issue before you and this Government today.

Therefore it is a pertinent matter, and I reiterate that there is a similarity involved in this section 3 that ought to be answered in this court and given consideration by my opponent, and that is, he should have admitted we have changed from the old status, and that there is no evidence that Japan has changed at all.

I argue that today Japan is operating upon the same basis, upon the same number of hours, with the same character of employees and operatives that she operated with in January 1933 or in January 1932 or 1931. Whereas we have had a revolution affecting the very fiber and life of American industry, there has been no change there; and if that is not a factor to be considered by this Commission, then I fail to understand the purpose of Congress.

Is there any evidence in this court that Japan has a code? Have they got a new code? Or is it the code given expression to by the counsel this morning, when he stated that they had no concealment of their business; that everything was known to the world?

I take it, Mr. Chairman, that that is the truth, and that is the policy of this ingenious and remarkable nation. And instead of standing here in condemnation of the Japanese, at times I feel that they should be paid a respectful tribute, that they are able with their skill and ingenuity and with their standard of living, and with their high and intensely nationalized spirit to so subordinate their personalities and every selfish instinct that they are willing to tell the world that their purpose is to find and conquer the markets. And they are not satisfied, Mr. Chairman, merely with having taken the markets of our export trade from us. They now want our domestic market. But I do not believe that this Congress or any other government can stand in America that will permit the Japanese, or any other people, to exploit the American market, when we have laid down standards under N.R.A. for the uplift of the American workman and American industry. No party or individual can stand before the organized public opinion of America on that point.

Mr. Bevans says the Americans want a cheap rug, therefore, a Japanese rug. So many millions of our people have been bankrupted, busted, unemployed, and in the bread lines of this country for the past 4 years that certainly they want to buy every commodity as cheaply as they can. But that is a condition which the administration is trying to rectify. They are trying to take the men who have been idle and unemployed and convert them into producers so that, in turn, they may be made consumers of American products, not consumers of products of Japan, Portugal, Belgium, or France, but consumers of things made in America.

Mr. Bevans referred to the fact that we are revolutionizing our whole political philosophy; that the Democratic Party in 1932 made a campaign in denunciation of the Smoot-Hawley bill and demanded that the tariff should be lowered instead of raised. Does he realize, Mr. Chairman, that the world has been rebuilt since the campaign of 1932? Does he not know that it has been a hundred years since 1932? We are living in an entirely new world. And any man in any business organization, politics, or profession that tries to use the yardstick of 1932 to measure the economic and social conditions that prevail in 1934 is more than blind.

The Democratic Party would commit suicide and its policies would deserve to be repudiated if, having done as much for American manhood as it has, it would now undertake to destroy everything it has created. N.R.A. is a new child, and nothing like it has ever been seen before in the annals of America or any other civilized country. I predict that before this year ends this Tariff Commission will become the most important adjunct of the Government of the United States in its efforts to solve the problems that have arisen, and will continue to arise, if we are to preserve the purposes that are set out in section 3 of this act.

I do not care what they do with the N.R.A. They may close it down tomorrow; but I say to you, sirs, that it has now become the common law of the United States. They cannot rub it out. They may take it from the statute, but it is now in the hearts of men and never again will it be permitted in any section for men to work 11 hours a day.

As Governor of North Carolina I tried for years to get the situation in the southeastern section corrected and to write a labor law that would be acceptable and uniform for all. It could not be done because of the selfish groups involved. It was only when the broad policy of the United States abolished all these State lines and set up a uniform standard for all the workers, East and South and West and North, that we were able to get under the benefits of this humane and noble concept.

I submit that it is not a question of whether you can buy rugs cheaper if you import them from Japan. Our people in their poverty and in their distress would, of course, like to buy everything cheaper; they would like to buy flour cheaper; they would like to buy meat cheaper. That is not the standard we have set up in America. That is not the policy we are going to write into the history of America. We are going to lift America and not pull her down.

The policy of Mr. Bevans is that we should sacrifice the standards which we have set up here, which have been the recognized standards of the world, in order to meet the standards of some other country. That is not the policy or philosophy of America, and never will be.

He raised the point further that Japan is one of our greatest customers for cotton, and that is true. They are buying more cotton in 1934. Japan is buying cotton from America because she does not raise it; but I predict in this hearing, and I would like to have it go into the record, that before 10 years elapse Japan will develop in Brazil or in Peru adequate supplies for her cotton and will not be dependent upon the American supply.

Japan just recently entered into an arrangement with India to take 1,500,000 bales of cotton from India. India boycotted Japanese goods in 1932, and then Japan entered into this arrangement, and they are exchanging one and one half million bales of cotton for 400,000,000 yards of cloth. But Mr. Bevans argues that having taken 1,500,000 bales of cotton from India is evidence of the fact that they will take it all from India. Our cotton is in the world market. There is just so much cotton. When they take one and one half million bales from India, that is so much of the 24,000,000 bales raised in the world. If Japan should not get one and one half million bales from India, England would get it, or Germany or China, or some other country, so that there is no beneficence or charity in the fact that she buys her cotton from India. She would buy it all from India if she could have it at a bargain.

Mr. Chairman, may I say this before I sit down: We have endeavored to the best of our knowledge to bring to this Commission the conditions that prevail in the cotton-rug business, and I ask you to remember this picture: In La Grange, Ga., there is a plant weaving cotton rugs with a capacity to employ 548 operatives. It has been running successfully. And yet this striking thing appears, all the other mills in the Callaway chain, manufacturing sheetings, drills, and all the other cotton textiles, have been running fairly uniformly all the time; there has been no let-up or unemployment; and yet we find this one mill making these rugs which presents a dramatic and graphic picture of our whole story. Something has happened to the Callaway rug mill. What?

The Japanese, by reason of their internal situation, by means of which they can manufacture cheaply, are able either to buy cotton in India or in America and ship it across the ocean and manufacture it, bring it back to this country, and put it in the hands of the merchants of America at a cost that absolutely means the closing down of the Callaway mill employing 548 men and women. Now, if America stands for that, if we are going to preserve N.R.A., and if we are going to undertake the job that we have started in America, it brings with it this concomitant result: We bring ourselves clearly within the picture which Congress drew and the blueprint under which you are operating here today for our relief.

I respectfully submit that I do not overestimate the importance of this case. The investigators have studied it. You are the Ways and Means Committee in session. President Roosevelt is the first President of the United States in 20 years who did not undertake to revise the tariff when he took office. The present Ways and Means Committee, where tariff and revenue matters originate, has not even discussed the tariff question. Why? Because the Congress of the United States, through the Ways and Means Committee and through the Finance Committee and through the leadership of this Nation, from the President down, are relying upon you to perform whatever function is necessary and to recommend whatever levy or tribute is necessary to protect and to safeguard the welfare of the American workman and the American citizen.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States, submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers in the Regular Army.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

The calendar is in order.

THE JUDICIARY

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Howard L. Robinson to be United States attorney for the northern district of West Virginia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of this nomination in order to enable Mr. Robinson to begin the performance of his duties at the term of court which will be held in Clarksburg, his home town, next Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified.

POSTMASTERS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

JOHN R. FETTER

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

To the Senate:

In compliance with the request of the Senate of April 10, 1934, I return herewith the resolution of the Senate of April 4, 1934, advising and consenting to the appointment of John R. Fetter to be postmaster at Hopewell, N.J.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 13, 1934.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the action of the Senate in confirming this nomination be reconsidered, and that the nomination be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 38 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Saturday, April 14, 1934, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, APRIL 13, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Thou who art the All-Father, infinite in the treasures of mind and heart, we rejoice that we are Thy children, that our conflicts are not unwatched, that our struggles are not unrewarded, and that our sorrows are not without sympathy. We thank Thee for that one face that stands fully revealed; it is the face of Him whose name is above every name. Without Him the brightest day of human life would be dark, all music would be a dirge, earth would hold only one color, and joy would pass into an eclipse. O God, we have been appointed to a great task. May we spend our hours in gallant, self-sacrificial service, and thus prove ourselves worthy of such preferment. O keep in our minds that there is only one ambition, and that ambition is to do Thy will by promoting contentment, peace, and happiness in human hearts and homes. In the name of the Savior of men. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THOMAS JEFFERSON

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to read a Jefferson speech, but this is one that has been prepared within the last 48 hours, and I feel I should read it.

I wish to say in reference to Missouri that we have a Jefferson holiday in our State.

When the bill to declare his birthday a holiday was before the State legislature it received the vote of every member present of both houses of the general assembly. There was no one of any party who voted "no" on the question. The Governor who signed the bill was Republican, and when he signed it, he said, "Tell Shannon I am a better Jeffersonian than he ever dared to be." [Laughter.] This was three or four years ago, and today, in the 10,000 public schools and in the hundreds of private schools of Missouri, this day will be fittingly observed, and I feel assured in saying to you that the same spirit that moved the general assembly of my home State to pass the law and the Governor to sign it still prevails. There will be no politics in the recognition of Jefferson's great services that will be brought to mind there today, and the tributes that will be rendered to his memory in the schools of the State will be those of a generation that is coming to learn of the great things that this man did for his country and for the schools of his country.

It has been my very great pleasure and privilege for many years to endeavor to keep alive in the minds of the fellow citizens of my own State, and those beyond its borders where opportunity offered, the memory and the teachings of that great American, Thomas Jefferson.

I recollect that a few years ago, when the Hamiltonian dynasty was in the ascendant, bestriding our industrial world like a colossus while Democrats everywhere were peeping about to find themselves political graves, my efforts were met, first with a smile and then with cynical derision. So long had the persistent plans of the lords of the big business world and their allies in the political world been directed to the task of keeping the doctrines and even the memory of this patriot, genius, and statesman in the background that I found that even in our schools and school histories the great part played by him in the founding and development of the foundations of our Nation was minimized and consistently belittled until it became a wide-spread, if not a wholly popular, notion that there was only one man of those early days—Mr. Hamilton—to whom we owed a debt of gratitude for the blessings of government we enjoyed and for the crumbs of comfort that, at intervals, trickled down to us from the big table of the overlords.

But I am glad to state to this House that Thomas Jefferson has emerged from the obscurity into which the captains of privilege would have relegated him. I make no special claims to credit for this change of opinion in the public mind. Many distinguished men of both parties, true Americans, with an honest respect for the records of our country's history and for the achievements of its fathers, have come to the front and paid their impartial tributes to the memory of Thomas Jefferson, not only in this day but in the past when there were men who held patriotism above party and historic truth above the selfish interests of industrial cliques and privileged political oligarchies.

REPUBLICAN TRIBUTES TO JEFFERSON

Among those of the opposite political faith today, let me mention, with profound respect for his broad statesmanship and polemical fairness and honesty, my distinguished friend, the Honorable JAMES M. BECK, of Pennsylvania. Mr. BECK made an address at the Jefferson Day dinner of the Sons of the Revolution, 6 years ago, which was and is a classic of eloquence and is one of the most brilliant tributes to Jefferson it has ever been my pleasure to read.

From the dim past we hear the voice of Abraham Lincoln deploring the fact that "the principles of Thomas Jefferson were in danger of being overthrown in this Nation." And we hear the voice of another Republican statesman, one of the greatest in an era of great men, Senator George F. Hoar, who declared that—

> Every American political sect finds its political doctrine in Jefferson, almost as every religious sect finds its doctrine in the Savior of mankind.

We are met today on an anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson, and I am glad of the opportunity afforded me to remind you that the spirit of Jefferson is still alive and that it must be kept alive if we are to return to the wise counsels and the rational doctrines which he bequeathed to us. In my own State, as I have said, we have declared the anniversary of Jefferson's birthday a public holiday. Other States have followed our example, and movements are on foot in still other States to so honor his memory. I hope to see the day when the Congress will, in atonement for a long-neglected duty, pass a law declaring the birthday of this great American a public holiday in the District of Columbia, thus doing honor to him not as the presumptive founder of a political party but as the author of the Declaration of Independence, the crusader for our Bill of Rights, the apostle of freedom for white and black, the friend of free education for the masses, the far-visioned prophet of the Nation's territorial expansion, and the explorer of its wilderness expanses where unborn States lay waiting for the tides of humanity and prosperity that his wisdom and foresight saw in its destiny.

One hundred and ninety-one years ago today Thomas Jefferson was born at the base of Monticello Mountain. Eighty-three years later he died at its summit, after a life crowned with unselfish devotion to the Republic he helped to form and to the welfare of the people whom he regarded as the bone and sinew of the American democracy whose foundations he fervently believed he was laying when he penned the immortal Declaration of Independence and added to our constitutional document the forgotten rights of the individual man.

HIS PRINCIPLES VITAL TODAY

We are familiar enough, no doubt, with the political principles for which Jefferson stood—principles, I fear, that for a passing moment in our national career have come to be honored more in the breach than in the observance. I am hopeful that the day of emergencies into which we were recklessly plunged by the followers of the Hamiltonian system, almost to the brink of national ruin, will soon pass, and that we shall again witness a return to those sound principles of government of, for, and by the people which Jefferson deemed so essential and so vital to the perpetuation of a true democracy.

I would not undertake in the brief limits of a half-hour speech even to attempt to review the great principles that this many-sided statesman stood for. I should like on this commemorative occasion to revert to some of the unfamiliar things in his life, to illustrate how comprehensive was the genius of the man, how manifold his interests for the welfare of the people, how diversified and significant were the channels through which he sought to inculcate the cultural development of the Nation whose destinies he so clearly visioned, and of the people whose individual welfare he was so jealously mindful of.

Jefferson's dreams were always practical ones; they were never fashioned in ordinary prosaic ways. Whatever he did, he did with a sense of beauty as well as utility. It is not generally known, perhaps, that he was an architect of exceptional ability. Into everything he planned of an architectural character, whether home or public building, he put something of classical beauty and symmetry that left its impression upon the Nation's arts of construction in a day when men's minds were more concerned with the mere utilities of life than with its aesthetic aspects.

I have here a book which contains photogravures of the architectural creations of Thomas Jefferson, which stand as mute witnesses of his greatness as an architect and builder, and of his restless spirit, ever seeking for perfection and the right expression, whether in his literature or his art.

I prize this book deeply. It was given to me by a former Governor of Missouri and a former Member of this House—a Republican—Henry S. Caulfield. It contains 133 pages and index, including 96 plates.

The Old Dominion is full of architectural structures, homes, and public buildings that stand as memorials today of the genius of Thomas Jefferson, their designer, and in some instances their builder as well.

JEFFERSON THE GREAT ARCHITECT

Here are pictures of Jefferson's home at Monticello, the interior and exterior beauties of which have won the admiration of the great architects of the country. Here we find exemplified his knowledge of oriental as well as of colonial architecture. The general design of the mansion, and its elaborate and beautiful interior, evidence a skill and a taste rare in his days. He transplanted the designs of the architectural masters of the Old Continent, which he had studied while abroad, into the new lands of his own beloved country, always adapting classic models to the local environment and combining beauty with utility.

Here are pictures and plans of the Virginia Capitol, which Jefferson designed, and which marked an epoch in modern architecture. The University of Virginia, a group of buildings designed by Jefferson, was considered his crowning architectural achievement. The classic magnificence of this institution is familiar to every American traveler. He not only planned the buildings but the disposition and development of the grounds, which today attract the attention of every visitor to this great institution.

Here are copies of the original drawings made by the hand of Thomas Jefferson. Scattered over the State of Virginia—at Bremo, Barboursville, Poplar Forest, Edgehill, Farmington, and other great colonial estates—still stand mansions that attract the eyes of passers-by on the highways; they were all designed by Jefferson. The great portico at Montpelier, the home of President Madison, has been attributed to him, and the history of early American architecture in the Colonial States bears ample evidence of the influence of Thomas Jefferson, the architect.

In the office of every Member of this House can be found the book a copy of which I now hold in my hand. It is another enduring evidence of the pioneering genius of Thomas Jefferson. Its outside binding bears the inscription, "Jefferson's Manual; Rules and Practice, House of Representatives." This book has been a guiding torch to the deliberations of this body and of the Senate for 130 years. Jefferson's Manual covers 177 of its 545 pages. When Jefferson, as Vice President of the United States, from 1797 to 1801, presided over the deliberations of the Senate, he prepared and codified the fundamental principles of parliamentary practice for his own guidance in his customary farsighted way. In 1837 the House, by the adoption of a rule which still exists, permitted the provisions of Jefferson's Manual to govern the House in all cases to which they were applicable. The changing practice of new conditions may have brought modifications of the rules which Jefferson formulated, but his Manual still embodies the foundations of the most important portions of the House's practices and, as we know, it has long been regarded abroad among English parliamentarians as the best statement of what the laws of parliamentary conduct were at the time Jefferson wrote it.

A GREAT PARLIAMENTARIAN

In the introduction to Jefferson's Manual I read a statement attributed to a famous Speaker of the English House of Commons, which will illustrate the purpose that Jefferson, the father of real equality and democracy, had in mind when he sat down to plan the method and the purpose of conducting our deliberative sessions as representatives of the people. Quoting the maxim of the English Speaker of the House of Commons, to the effect that it was necessary for minorities to protect themselves against the encroachments of majorities and against the attempts of power, Jefferson said:

> The maxim is certainly true and is founded in good sense that it is always in the power of the majority, by their numbers, to stop any improper measures proposed on the part of their opponents, and the only weapons by which the minority can defend themselves against similar attempts from those in power are the forms and rules of proceeding which have been adopted as they were found necessary, from time to time, and are become the law of the House, by a strict adherence to which the weaker party can only be protected from those irregularities and abuses which those forms were intended to check, and which the wantonness of power is but too often apt to suggest to large and successful majorities.

So we find in this familiar book, whose foundations were established by Thomas Jefferson a century and a quarter ago, the warnings displayed and the roads indicated by which we are enabled to guard our Republic against the insidious encroachments of power in the hands of great majorities, and the dangers that lurk in any abandonment of or vital change in the basic principles of democratic government which Jefferson championed and which guided our Government through its formative years and the period of its greatest expansion and progress. In this book we have an ever-present monument to the parliamentary wisdom and farsighted caution of Thomas Jefferson, patriot and statesman.

I turn now to another phase of this great man's manifold concerns for the welfare of the people and for the Nation, whose ideals he was so instrumental in formulating. My good friend, Walter Williams, president of the University of Missouri, in a letter he wrote me not long ago, referred to Thomas Jefferson as "the supreme American."

JEFFERSON'S PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY

I now hold in my hands two little volumes which bear witness to the fact that Jefferson was supreme, not only in his pure American statesmanship and ideals, but he was also supreme in his humanitarianism and practical Christianity. It was the fashion of certain Jeffersonian critics of the early days to brand him as an atheist; this was only one of many calumnies that his enemies heaped upon him. These books are known as the "Jefferson Bible." One of them was presented to me by a colored man, Sam Royston, of my home city, and the other was presented to me by Willa Y. Mitchell, a daughter of Pike County, Mo., now principal of the Winnwood school in Clay County, Mo.

The Jefferson Bible is an enduring refutation of the charges of infidelity made against Jefferson and is living evidence of the fact that he sought to guide his public and his private conduct by the teachings of the Man of Galilee.

Thomas Jefferson compiled the Jefferson Bible by his own hands, as he did many other things that marked him as a pioneer in the ways of truth, honor, and honesty in public life.

In 1803, while "overwhelmed with other business", he cut from the leaves of the gospels of the Evangelists the actual words uttered by Christ, the passages that he believed would best present the ethical teachings of Jesus; and he arranged them on the pages of a blank book, in a certain order of time or subject, so that he might always have before him, not scriptural commentaries or theological interpretations but the actual words of the founder of Christianity. It was a novel idea, one never attempted before. Through the doctrines of love, charity, and humanitarianism which he found in the sayings of the Meek and Lowly One, I firmly believe, in the light of all the records of his life, he sought to guide his public and private conduct. In his introduction to the Jefferson Bible he wrote:

> His (Christ's) moral doctrines relating to kindred and friends were more pure and perfect than those of the most correct of philosophers and greatly more so than those of the Jews, and they went far beyond both in inculcating universal philanthropy, not only to kindred and friends, to neighbors and countrymen, but to all mankind, gathering all into one family, under the bonds of love, charity, peace, common wants, and common aids.

Then Jefferson wrote his friend, Charles Thompson, a confirmation of his own practical adoption of what he considered the pure teachings of Christ. He said:

> I, too, have made a wee little book from the same materials (the gospels), which I call the "Philosophy of Jesus." It is a paradigma of His doctrines, made by cutting the texts out of the book and arranging them on the pages of a blank book. A more precious or beautiful morsel of ethics I have never seen. It is a document in proof that I am a real Christian, that is to say, a disciple of the doctrines of Jesus, very different from the Platonists, who call me infidel and themselves Christians and preachers of the gospel, while they draw all their characteristic dogmas from what its author never said nor saw, and of which the Great Reformer, were He to return to earth, would not recognize one feature.

We have in this so-called "Jefferson Bible" the irrefutable record of his religious convictions and his practical Christianity—a belief and a faith that guided him when he wrote that "all men were created free and equal and by their Creator endowed with inalienable rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." This little book is the monument to Thomas Jefferson, the practical Christian.

A BOOK OF JEFFERSONIANA

This 283-page book that I now hold in my hand is entitled "The Complete Anas of Thomas Jefferson." It is truly what the name implies—a revealing compendium of Jeffersonian literature, notes, and speeches collected and bearing on some particular person or place or subject.

The topics mainly concerned are Alexander Hamilton and his policies. The reason for preserving the record of Jefferson's career and philosophy was that posterity might know how sacredly fundamental their differences were. Jefferson's public and private utterances show that the contests from 1791 to 1800 were contests between the advocates of a republican form of government as opposed to the advocates of a monarchial form of government.

The Jeffersonians stood for government by the people, and the Hamiltonians favored a revival of English ideals, a king in fact, or a monarchy of some kind.

To illustrate how intensely hostile Jefferson was on the subject of a monarchy, I have found more than 40 statements by him on this subject. He repeatedly charged that Hamilton and his associates favored a monarchy. In a communication to General Washington, Jefferson said:

> I was much an enemy to monarchies before I came to Europe. I am 10,000 times more so, since I have seen what they are.

At this moment there is a congressional committee investigating the utterances of an individual concerning an alleged contemplated change in our form of government. Jefferson's idea was to be eternally vigilant and watch for any disturbances which tended to menace the security of the Republic.

Notwithstanding the great differences between Jefferson and Hamilton, Jefferson, in the Anas, described Hamilton as being a man honest and honorable in all private transactions. The University of Virginia is not only a monument to the architectural genius of Thomas Jefferson; it is another imperishable reminder of Thomas Jefferson as the protagonist of free education and academical training for the youth of America.

In this field, also, he was a pioneer. He was the first conspicuous and persistent advocate of State aid to the higher institutions of learning, as he was of local taxation to support the common schools of his State, as the nurseries of culture, prosperity, and good government.

ADVOCATE OF FREE EDUCATION

Jefferson's description of the purposes and aims of a common-school education and the fundamentals of citizenship that should there be acquired is the very essence of common and of pedagogical wisdom. He considered education of youth a "holy cause", says one of his biographers; and he defined its main objects to be to equip the youth of the land for the battles of life in any sphere in which his fate might cast him. Here, in brief, is his definition of a primary education:

> 1. To give to every citizen the information he needs for the transaction of his own business.
> 2. To enable him to calculate for himself and to express and preserve his ideas, his contracts, and accounts in writing.
> 3. To improve, by reading, his morals and faculties.
> 4. To understand his duties to his neighbors and country, and to discharge with competence the functions confided to him by either.
> 5. To know his rights; to exercise with order and justice those he retains; to choose with discretion the fiduciary of those he delegates; and to notice their conduct with diligence, with candor, and judgment.
> 6. And, in general, to observe with intelligence and faithfulness all the social relations under which he shall be placed.

I have, at the outset of my remarks, referred to the fact that even in the schools of our country has the name and fame of Thomas Jefferson been shrouded in obscurity, if not with an insidious measure of contempt. I am here to assert that if those precepts of Thomas Jefferson were framed and hung in every primary schoolroom of this land, and brought daily to the attention of the rising generations of young students, we would be hearing less today of communistic principles, or partisan hatreds, or of changing standards of government, and more of pure patriotism, ideal Americanism, and self-reliant citizenship.

Jefferson was not only an advocate of practical learning in the schools; his educational plans for a higher education, prepared for the University of Virginia, and used as a model for the later universities of the country, were wise and comprehensive. That great institution was to be nonsectarian. He studied the universities of Europe with great care, and determined that America would not lag in the highest forms of professional training. Forty years of observation, experience, travel, and reflection were compressed into his plans for his State university, and it became not only the pride of his State but the pride of his life. The founding of the university was not accomplished without long and entangling oppositions. I like to linger over the account of Edmund Bacon, the overseer, of Jefferson's supervision of the foundations of the first building that marked the beginning of that great institution. It is related in these words in William Ellery Curtis' biography of Jefferson:

> My instruction was to get 10 able-bodied men to commence the work. I soon got them and Mr. Jefferson started from Monticello to lay off the foundation and see the work commenced. An Irishman named Dinsmore and I went along with him. As we passed through Charlottesville, I went to old Davy Isaac's store and got a ball of twine, and Dinsmore found some shingles and made some pegs and we all went out to the field together. Mr. Jefferson looked over the ground for some time and then stuck down a peg. He stuck the very first peg in that building and then directed me where to carry the line, and I stuck the second. He carried one end of the line and I the other in laying off the foundation of the university.
> After the foundation was nearly completed, they had a great time laying the cornerstone. The old field was covered with carriages and people. There was an immense crowd there. Mr. Monroe laid the cornerstone. He was President at that time. Mr. Jefferson—I can see his white head just as he stood there and looked on. After this he rode from Monticello every day while the university was building, unless the weather was very stormy. He looked after all the materials and would not allow any poor materials to go into the building if he could help it.

And Jefferson continued his supervision of that institution to the end of his life. The last entry in its records noted his presence as a member of the board of visitors only a few days before his death.

THREE OF HIS GREATEST ACHIEVEMENTS

It is not hard to understand why Thomas Jefferson made the request that is perpetuated on his tomb—the three things that he wished to be remembered by. He brushed aside the facts that he had been President of the United States, Vice President, Secretary of State, Minister to France, Minister Plenipotentiary to negotiate treaties of commerce with foreign nations, Delegate to Congress, member of the Virginia Legislature, Member of the Continental Congress, representative to the provincial legislature, vestryman of his church, and, in his early career, a justice of the peace in his community, to name his honors in reverse order. His wish was that posterity should recall him as the "author of the Declaration of Independence, the author of the Statute of Religious Freedom of the State of Virginia, and the founder of the University of Virginia." These are the everlasting monuments of Thomas Jefferson, the educator, the idealist, and the champion of equal rights to all men.

Truly it has been said, he named for himself his passports to immortality—the rights of man, religious liberty, and universal education.

I am aware that it has been customary in certain party circles to circumscribe the influence of this man as that of merely a master politician, a great party leader. Let me say that Thomas Jefferson was a leader in every form of activity in which his multifarious genius was engaged. His leadership was comprehensive. Possessed of extraordinary moral, intellectual, and organizing powers—not a dreamer, but always a doer—and having a sublime faith in his convictions of right and wrong and of the destiny of the people for whom he sought to help build an ideal form of government—a "new nation", in the words of Lincoln, "dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal"—he propounded his views freely and lent all the energies of his great mind to fashioning his ideals into action. This he did, not merely in political matters, but in all the activities of a growing nation, in all the ramifications of culture, in all the spheres of public activities that he deemed essential in the science of government as well as in the regulation of sources of human moralities and well-being.

THE SUPREME AMERICAN

The range of Jefferson's vision and action was marvelous and manifold in its objectives. He looms in the backgrounds of our national history as, indeed, what Walter Williams named him, "the supreme American."

Jefferson was the father of our patent system. However, though a great inventor himself, he never applied for a patent, believing that inventive genius was the property of mankind.

He was the founder of our coinage system and of the almighty dollar as a unit of the system.

He was responsible in a large measure for the adoption of our present system of property inheritance, in that he brought about the abolishment of the old system of primogeniture and entail under which, as in the mother country, England, the eldest child was given preference and the rest of the family were left to shift for themselves when an ancestor died.

He was a lover of books and a student of history, and an adept in the bibliography of the governments of the world from the most ancient days.

He was the first American statesman who gave thought and study to the labor question, which, though simplified in those days of slavery, he foresaw would one day become a vital problem.

He was an apostle of freedom for the Negro slaves and wrote the first document that in later days became the language of the emancipation proclamation, the thirteenth amendment.

He was an advocate of the freedom of the press, though he himself was one of the most bitterly abused men by the press of his day.

There was hardly a single social or cultural or sociological subject, hardly a single phase of political life or educational life, upon which he did not express an opinion of wisdom and force. His utterances on these subjects were wide and varied in their interest. In the books which record his expressions of opinion, in public utterances, State papers, and letters to his friends, the scope of his interest and his advice is amazing. I have found 13 instances in which he discussed music; 22 in which he gave his views of ecclesiastical matters; 95 on public offices; 57 on the obligations of officeholders; 28 on the treatment and destinies of Negroes; 45 on the institution of slavery; 25 on temperance; 71 on the province of newspapers; and he even ventured some wise, if unheeded, suggestions upon the subject of matrimony.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I am deeply conscious of the futility of trying to obtain a conception of the genius and the character of Thomas Jefferson by what has been said of him in the way of tribute or criticism by historians and biographers. I might go on indefinitely to quote the tributes that have been paid to him by great men of all political parties—men of the stamp of Abraham Lincoln, George F. Hoar, George Graham Vest, William Jennings Bryan, or the great contemporaries of his time who, whether friendly to his policies and beliefs or not, never failed to pay tribute to his intellectual and moral attainments.

THE VOICE OF JEFFERSON STILL POTENTIAL

There is only one sure way in which we can come in these days to know Jefferson—the leader who lived and moved and gave guidance to the ideals of the young Nation, and the mind and heart of the man himself—and that is by a study of the records of his own utterances, the things that he put into words in that clear and forcible expression which was characteristic of everything he wrote or said. He was one of the world's greatest thinkers. We must let Thomas Jefferson speak for himself, and posterity may be thankful that his words have been preserved, for his political wisdom and intellectual foresight is as new and vital and necessary today, I firmly believe, as they were when they found utterance a century and a quarter ago. Conditions may change, but, as Jefferson himself would have said, and did say, the principles of truth are eternal; they may, in the words of the poet, "be crushed to earth" at times, but they will "rise again: The eternal years of God are hers;" while "Error dies among his worshipers."

I want now, as briefly as I may, to release a few records for our edification. On this occasion of his natal anniversary let us listen to his voice again and mark how pregnant and alive is his wisdom still and how applicable to our own complex conditions of life and government are the tenets of his philosophy of government, self-government, individuality, and personal freedom.

Let me quote from Forman:

When Congress met in December the Republicans had for the first time a majority in both Houses. There proceedings were not, as under the former administrations, opened with a set speech from the President. Jefferson regarded this as the chief of the ceremonials which he wished to end; and he transmitted to each House a written message, explaining in a brief note to the President of the Senate his reasons for changing the custom. This was in harmony with a systematic plan to check the tendency of his predecessors to exalt the executive above the legislative department and above private citizens.

This was followed by a suggestion that newspaper reporters be admitted unconditionally to the sessions of both Houses, so that the press of the country could give its readers a proper summary of the proceedings of Congress. This was another contribution of Jefferson's to the "liberty of the press."

He opposed exclusive and hereditary rights to inventions, giving these reasons:

Inventions cannot, in nature, be a subject of property. Ideas should freely spread from one to another over the globe, for the moral and mutual instruction of man and the improvement of his condition. Society may give an exclusive right to the profits arising from inventions, as an encouragement to men to pursue their ideas which may produce utility, but this may or may not be done, according to the will and convenience of society, without claim or complaint from anybody. Other nations have thought that these monopolies produce more embarrassment than advantage to society, and it may be observed that the nations which refuse monopolies of inventions are as fruitful as England, which grants them, in new and useful devices.

It was Jefferson's belief that a monopoly should not be permitted to take over what he called "the fugitive fermentations" of the individual brain, an idea, and then capitalize it for all time against mankind. He believed that those great inventions belonged to mankind in general and not to a monopoly to wrest exorbitant profits from the people.

HIS VIEWS OF PARTY GOVERNMENT

Jefferson, at the outset of his career, was not a party man. He once said, "If I could not go to heaven but with a party, I would not want to go there at all." He did not believe in factions, but he came to believe in party responsibility and to recognize the advantage of organization for the promotion of political principles, and finally concluded that parties were not only necessary but beneficial in provoking discussion and interest in public affairs. The third administration of our national affairs was that of Jefferson, of 8 years' duration. These 8 years of strict party government presented an example of harmony in the Cabinet of six persons to which the previous history of our national affairs presented no parallel. There were constant dissentions in the Washington Cabinet, and he came to learn of the dangers of a hybrid administration. The first great failure of bipartisan government was that under George Washington, made up of Federalists, represented by Hamilton, on one hand, and of Republican-Democrats, represented by Jefferson, on the other. It resulted in constant friction, and finally Jefferson withdrew from the Cabinet of Washington with the firm conviction that the only fixed responsibility was party responsibility.

He was jealous of individual power above the party. He said:

I have never been so well pleased as when I could shift power from my own shoulders to the shoulders of others, nor have I ever been able to conceive how any rational being could propose happiness to himself from the exercise of power over others.

The safe Executive he believed is the one who is always reluctant to exercise power beyond that which is allotted to him by the constitutional provisions.

Though a great sufferer from newspapers and pamphleteers, Jefferson advocated freedom of the press in these notable words:

As to myself, conscious that there was not a truth on earth which I feared should be known, I have lent myself willingly as the subject of a great experiment, which was to prove that an administration, conducting itself with integrity and common understanding, cannot be battered down, even by the falsehoods of a licentious press, and still less by the press as restrained within the legal and wholesome limits of truth. I have never, therefore, even contradicted the thousands of calumnies so industriously propagated against myself. But the fact being once established that the press is impotent when it abandons itself to falsehood, I leave to others to restore it to its strength, by keeping it within the pale of truth. Within that, it is a noble institution equally the friend of science and of civil liberty.

Here are a few of his admonitions about the much-vaunted topic of liberty:

The God who gave us life gave us liberty at the same time; the hand of force may destroy, but it cannot disjoin them.

A government wherein the will of the everyone has a just influence * * * enjoys a precious degree of liberty and happiness. It has its evils too, the principal of which is the turbulence to which it is subject. But I hold that a little rebellion now and then is a good thing and as necessary in the political world as storms in the physical * * *. It is a medicine necessary for the sound health of government.

The ground of liberty is to be gained by inches; we must be contented to secure what we can from time to time and eternally press forward for what there is yet to get. It takes time to persuade men to do even what is for their own good * * *. But this ball of liberty is now so well in motion it will roll around the globe, at least the enlightened part of it, for light and liberty go together. It is our glory that we first put it in motion, and our happiness that, being foremost, we had no bad examples to follow.

Nor did he neglect hygienic instruction. He wrote:

An attention to health should take place of every other subject. The time necessary for this by active exercises should be given in preference to every other pursuit. I know the difficulty with which a studious man tears himself away from his studies at any given moment of the day. But his happiness and that of his family depend upon his health. The most uninformed mind, with a healthy body, is happier than the wisest valetudinarian.

Here is his summing up of the character of Napoleon Bonaparte, which may well be interpreted as his opinion of war in general. He made more than 50 utterances on Bonaparte:

Bonaparte has been the author of more misery and suffering to the world than any being who ever lived before him. After destroying the liberties of his country he has exhausted all its resources, physical and moral, to indulge his own maniac ambitions, his own tyrannical and overbearing spirit. His sufferings cannot be too great.

Of the men who toil, whether free or bonded, he had much to say:

Our ancestors who migrated to this country were laborers, not lawyers.

And of the slaves on his plantation he said:

My first wish is that they (the colored laborers) may always be well treated, and the second is that they may enable me to have that treatment continued by making as much as will admit it.

Of the Presidential office and those who succeeded and preceded him in the office he made these comments:

No man will ever bring out of the Presidency the reputation that carried him into it.

It is a splendid misery.

Neither the splendor nor the power nor the difficulties nor the fame or defamation, as may happen, attached to the first magistracy, have any attractions for me.

The President is extremely affected by the attacks made and kept up on him in the public papers. I think he feels those things more than any person I have ever yet met with. I am sincerely sorry to see them.

Washington's fame will go on increasing until the brightest constellation in yonder heavens shall be called by his name.

He was opposed to centralization of government and these were some of his reasons:

What has destroyed the liberties and the rights of man in every government which has ever existed under the sun? The generalization and concentration of all cares and powers into one body, no matter whether of the autocrats of Russia or France or of the aristocrats of a Venetian senate.

Whenever the people are well informed, they can be trusted with their own government.

Again he said:

I wish to see all mankind exercising self-government and capable of exercising it.

HIS LOVE OF THE SOIL

Jefferson, in his lifetime, was much interested in the problems of agriculture and arboriculture. I have found 12 utterances of his on arboriculture and 33 on agriculture.

No occupation—

He wrote—

is so delightful to me as the culture of the earth. Agriculture is the basis of the subsistence, the comfort, and the happiness of man.

There are evidences that Jefferson himself had misgivings about the security of the principles of government which he espoused. Even in that early day he saw that it would be difficult to enact them all into law and harder still to keep them intact. Hence, if today we sense that there has been a departure from some of his teachings, we are only feeling, as Jefferson feared would be brought about by changing conditions, the growth of industrial enterprise, and the ambitions of its great captains. Yet, none the less, must we revert to those principles which he enunciated lest we forget the ancient landmarks or lose sight of the great foundations upon which he with the other fathers of the Republic sought to launch this new experiment in the governments of the earth.

His great tolerance of opinion extended even to the parties who were opposed to him and who fought him most bitterly in the days when he was attempting to put into practice his theories of government. He said on one occasion:

I tolerate with the utmost latitude the right of others to differ from me in opinion without imputing to them criminality.

In a day when slavery was an accepted institution, and when the lines were being firmly drawn between the North and the South, that were eventually to break into fratricidal war, we find him giving the same concern to the Negroes and their human rights as to the rights of the white laborers of his country. There was always a touching consideration that he expressed for the slave laborers on his plantation, and at his death there were gathered around him many of these old Negroes, who had been with him all their lives, to mourn his departure and to accept the inheritance of freedom which his wish and will passed on to them.

INHERITORS OF JEFFERSON'S SPIRIT

Jefferson's life was beautiful, and his death, likewise, was beautiful. I associate in my mind the closing careers of two statesmen whose charity, benevolence, and humanitarian tolerance seem to me modeled upon the life of Thomas Jefferson, and whose passing seemed to be inspired by the gospels of his teaching.

Stormy enough was the political life of Andrew Jackson, but when the hour of death arrived and there gathered about him those of his household and many of his slaves, as he saw them weeping, he looked up from his pillow and said:

Don't cry; gather closer; I am going to leave you but we will soon meet again. We will all meet in heaven, both white and black.

Not long ago this House lost one of its most eminent members, Edwin William Pou. The press notices say that Mr. Pou had written the epitaph for his tombstone. It was to read:

I know not what record of sin may await me in the world to come, but this I do know: I was never mean enough to despise a man because he was poor, because he was ignorant, or because he was black.

When Thomas Jefferson declared that he did not want to go to heaven as a party man, he breathed a kindred spirit of tolerance—a tolerance that not only animated his political life, but all his dealings with the men, white or black, who worked with him and with his fellow citizens, no matter with what party they were allied.

Here are three great Americans, widely separated though they may be by years of service and changing conditions, three eminent citizens of the South, whose Heaven was not to be curtailed or hopes of happiness bounded by any earthly considerations of race, color, or party. [Applause.]

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. Under the special order for today the Clerk will first call the bill, Private Calendar No. 500.

FOUR-MASTED AUXILIARY BARK QUEVILLY V. THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1934) conferring jurisdiction upon certain courts of the United States to hear and determine the claim by the owner of the four-masted auxiliary bark Quevilly against the United States, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of Compagnie Maritime Normande, formerly known as "Société Anonyme du Quevilly", owner of the four-masted auxiliary bark Quevilly, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between said four-masted auxiliary bark Quevilly and the United States destroyer Sampson on January 26, 1917, may be determined in a suit to be brought by said claimant against the United States in the United States District Court for the southern district of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court in admiralty cases, and that said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine said suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages, and costs, if any, as shall be found due against the United States in favor of the said Compagnie Maritime Normande, formerly known as "Société Anonyme du Quevilly" or against the said Compagnie Maritime Normande, formerly known as "Société Anonyme du Quevilly", in favor of the United States, by reason of said collision, upon the same principles and under the same measures of liability as in like cases between private parties, and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and upon such notice it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That such suit shall be begun within 4 months of the date of the approval of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

S.S. "W. I. RADCLIFFE"

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1935) to amend the act of March 2, 1929, conferring jurisdiction upon certain courts of the United States to hear and determine the claim by the owner of the S.S. W. I. Radcliffe against the United States, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress (H.R. 11698) approved March 2, 1929 (Private, No. 480, 70th Cong.), entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon certain courts of the United States to hear and determine the claim by the owner of the S.S. W. I. Radcliffe against the United States, and for other purposes", be, and the same hereby is, amended by deleting therefrom the words "Wynstay Steamship Co. (Limited), a British corporation, owner", and substituting in the place and stead thereof the words "Wynnstay Steamship Co., Limited, and W. I. Radcliffe Steamship Co., Limited, British corporations, owners", and that said act be further amended by deleting therefrom wherever they may appear the words "Wynstay Steamship Co., (Limited)", and substituting in the place and stead thereof the words "Wynnstay Steamship Co., Limited, and W. I. Radcliffe Steamship Co., Limited"; and that the suit heretofore commenced in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, under the said act of March 2, 1929, may be continued in the names of Wynnstay Steamship Co., Limited, and W. I. Radcliffe Steamship Co., Limited, as parties libelant.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A. C. MESSLER CO.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 503) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of A. C. Messler Co.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have gone over the committee report very carefully, and I may say to the gentleman that this is one of those border-line cases involving a considerable sum of money.

Mr. CONDON. I do not think so. The total amount asked for originally was $23,000, and the House last year reported out a bill in compromise for about $12,000. At that time the War Department did not approve the claim, but said that it had no objection to the claim being considered in the Court of Claims. For this reason the bill was introduced in the Senate this year by Senator METCALF asking the right to go into the Court of Claims, and I do not think the amount in any event will equal $20,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I notice that at one time there was a private bill determining the amount at $12,000, which, of course, was an arbitrary figure with respect to the claim which then amounted to $16,378.68.

Mr. CONDON. And that also was a compromise when it was first introduced.

Mr. BLANCHARD. This report came from the War Department in 1932, and because I am in doubt about the bill, I want to ask the gentleman if the War Department has confirmed the report of 1932? If not, I am going to ask that the bill go over.

Mr. CONDON. I hope the gentleman will not do that, because it will defeat the bill.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I do not think so. If it would, I am sorry.

Mr. CONDON. Do I understand the gentleman wants a repetition from the War Department that it has no objection to the bill being considered by the Court of Claims?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice and become no. 1 on the next call of the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

VELIE MOTORS CORPORATION

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2905) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Velie Motors Corporation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to hear some statement.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. This bill passed the House in the Seventy-second Congress. It is a jurisdictional bill and involves a contract by which the Velie Motors Corporation contracted to manufacture and furnish 10,000 machine-gun carts, and that they should be suitably packed, boxed, and marked at Moline, Ill.

The War Department later gave instructions that they should be recrated according to new specifications. This claim is for the additional cost of recrating.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The record discloses that the Velie Motors Corporation has gone into insolvency. Is the gentleman familiar with the receivership and the affairs of liquidation?

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. The affairs have not been fully liquidated.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Velie lost control of the corporation and it was in the hands of the bankers.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Velie, before his death, was in full charge of the company. The bankers were entirely out of the picture for some little time before his death. The members of the family are in control of the situation and are the largest stockholders.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Do I understand that the assets of the corporation were sold?

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And the gentleman is familiar enough with the facts of the situation to make that statement?

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. I think so.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have checked up on it, and I feel that I must object to the bill.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Will the gentleman let it go over without prejudice?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EDWARD F. GOLTRA

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1091) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, consider, and render judgment on the claims of Edward F. Goltra against the United States arising out of the taking of certain vessels and unloading apparatus.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States, whose duty it shall be, notwithstanding the lapse of time or the bar of any statute of limitations or previous court decisions, to hear, consider, and render judgment on the claims of Edward F. Goltra against the United States for just compensation to him for certain vessels and unloading apparatus taken, whether tortiously or not, on March 25, 1923, by the United States under orders of the Acting Secretary of War, for the use and benefit of the United States; and any other legal or equitable claims arising out of the transactions in connection therewith: Provided, That separate suits may be brought with respect to the vessels and the unloading apparatus: Provided further, That either party may appeal as of right to the Supreme Court of the United States from any judgment in said case at any time within 90 days after the rendition thereof, and any judgment rendered in favor of the claimant shall be paid in the same manner as other judgments of said Court of Claims are paid.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LLOYD offers a committee amendment: On line 6, page 2, after the word "apparatus", insert "but no suit shall be brought after the expiration of 1 year from the effective date of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, are there other bills that have preferential status?

The SPEAKER. That is all. Under the special order, the Clerk will call the calendar, beginning with the star.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, before that is done, a few days ago, at the call of the Private Calendar, at my request, private bills H.R. 313, H.R. 315, and H.R. 316 on the calendar were passed over without prejudice. I now ask that they be taken up in the order I have indicated.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the bills, as indicated.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman state what the bills are?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Yes. They are all by Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina, and all involve the same transaction, a bail-bond matter, where the prisoner was apprehended as the result of the work done by these men who were on the bail bond.

C. J. HOLLIDAY

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 4927) for the relief of C. J. Holliday.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $524.07 to C. J. Holliday, of Pelzer, S. C., which sum represents the loss sustained by the said C. J. Holliday on bail bond of Reuben G. Johnson, who afterwards was captured and returned to the United States officers by the said C. J. Holliday, record of said estreatment of bond being shown in the order of Hon. H. H. Watkins, United States district judge, at Greenville, S.C., February 7, 1923.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, after line 1, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANCHARD: In line 5, on page 1, strike out "$524.07" and insert in lieu thereof "$500."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANCHARD: After the words "South Carolina", on page 1, line 6, insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

J. B. TROTTER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4929, for the relief of J. B. Trotter.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $537.65 to J. B. Trotter, of Pelzer, S.C., which sum represents the loss sustained by the said J. B. Trotter on the bail bond of Reuben G. Johnson, who afterward was captured and returned to the United States officers by the said J. B. Trotter, record of said estreatment of bond being shown in order of Hon. H. H. Watkins, United States district judge, of Greenville, S.C., February 7, 1923.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, after line 2, insert: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANCHARD: On page 1, line 5, strike out "$537.65" and insert in lieu thereof "$500."

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. Is this an arbitrary amount that the gentleman is offering as an amendment? Why reduce the amount to $500? Is a larger amount due?

Mr. BLANCHARD. It is not an arbitrary reduction. There is a question as to whether or not this man should receive court costs or should be reimbursed to the extent of the amount of the bail.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. That amendment is entirely satisfactory to me.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANCHARD: Line 6, on page 1, after the words "South Carolina", insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COTTON INDUSTRY

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on Agriculture, submitted the following conference report (Rept. No. 1239) on the bill (H.R. 8402) to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8402) to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 5, 7, 8, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 6, 9, 10, and 19, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert a comma and the following: "but if the President finds that the economic emergency in cotton production and marketing will continue or is likely to continue to exist so that the application of this act with respect to the crop year 1935–36 is imperative in order to carry out the policy declared in section 1, he shall so proclaim, and this act shall be effective with respect to the crop year 1935–36. If at any time prior to the end of the crop year 1935–36, the President finds that the economic emergency in cotton production and marketing has ceased to exist, he shall so proclaim, and no tax under this act shall be levied with respect to cotton harvested after the effective date of such proclamation"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert a comma and the following: "for the crop year 1935–36, if the provisions of this act are effective for such crop year, that two thirds of the persons who have the legal or equitable right as owner, tenant, share cropper, or otherwise to produce cotton on any cotton farm, or part thereof, in the United States for such crop year"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert: "$1,000, or by imprisonment for not exceeding 6 months, or both"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert:

"SEC. 24. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to develop new and extended uses for cotton, and for such purpose there is authorized to be made available to the Secretary not to exceed $500,000 out of the funds available to him under section 12 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8402) to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendments nos. 1 and 3: These amendments strike out the provisions of the House bill which make the proposed bill effective for the crop year 1935–36 and which authorizes the extension of its provisions for the crop year 1936–37. Amendment no. 1 also strikes out the provision authorizing termination of the bill at any time.

The House recedes with an amendment on amendment no. 1, the effect of which is to make the bill applicable during the crop year 1934–35, to authorize its extension by the President so that it may be applicable during the crop year 1935–36, and to retain the provision of the House bill authorizing the termination of its provisions at any time. Since under the conference agreement on amendment no. 1, the bill will not be applicable to the crop year 1936–37, the House recedes on amendment no. 3.

On amendment no. 2: This amendment strikes out the provision of the House bill providing for a finding by the Secretary of Agriculture that farmers favor a tax for the crop year 1935–36 and a similar finding for succeeding crop years. The amendment also requires a finding for the crop year 1934–35 which was not required under the House bill. See amendment no. 1. The amendment also substitutes for the provision of the House bill requiring a finding that two thirds of the persons who own, rent, share-crop, or control cotton land favor a ginning tax, a provision which requires that two thirds of the persons who have legal or equitable title as owner, tenant, share-cropper, or otherwise to produce cotton on any farm or part thereof for the succeeding crop year favor a ginning tax.

The conference agreement eliminates the finding for the crop year 1934–35, but requires it for the crop year 1935–36 if the bill is to be applicable for that year, and adopts the provisions of the Senate amendment on the finding itself.

On amendment no. 4: This amendment makes the rate of tax 75 percent of the average central price, rather than 50 percent, as contained in the House bill. See amendment no. 5. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 5: This amendment makes the minimum tax 8 cents per pound, rather than 5 cents per pound, as contained in the House bill; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 6: This amendment exempts from the tax all cotton having a staple of 1½ inches in length or longer. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 7: Under the House bill, the tax on nonexempt cotton was postponed until bale tags were secured for it, if the cotton was to be stored by the producer. Bale tags for such cotton could be secured upon payment of the tax or surrender of exemption certificates covering the cotton. This Senate amendment strikes out this provision. The amendment also provides that a producer harvesting more cotton than his allotment of tax-exempt cotton may, in a subsequent year when the tax is in effect, if he does not harvest in the subsequent year the amount of cotton for which he holds certificates, pay the ginning tax on the excess in the prior year with exemption certificates issued for the subsequent year. The amendment further provides that a producer to whom an exemption certificate is issued, who does not use it for the year issued by reason of his not producing an amount of cotton less than that represented by the certificates, may use the unused certificate in a subsequent year when the allotment and tax are applicable. The Senate recedes, thus restoring the House provision which authorizes postponement of the payment of the tax and retaining the substance of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment which is covered in the language restored and in other provisions of the bill.

On amendment no. 8: Under the House bill, the allotment of tax-exempt cotton to each State was to be based upon the ratio of its average production for the 5 crop years preceding the enactment of the act to the average national production for the same period. This amendment makes both periods 10 years. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 9: This amendment provides a minimum allotment of 200,000 bales of tax-exempt cotton to each State if in any one of the 5 years preceding the enactment of the act the production of such State equaled 250,000 bales. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 10: Under the House bill no certificate or allotment was to be granted to a producer unless he agreed to comply with requirements to assure his cooperation in reduction programs and to prevent expansion of competitive production by him. This Senate amendment limits the provision so that the requirement preventing expansion of production relates only to expansion on lands leased by the Government. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 11: This amendment strikes out the exception contained in the House bill permitting transportation of cotton beyond the county of production for storage under section 4 (f), in conformity with Senate amendment no. 7, which eliminates the provision with respect to storage. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 12: This amendment reduces the criminal penalty for violation of section 12 (d) (relating to willful violations of the act, willful failure to pay tax, and other crimes) from a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both, to a fine not exceeding $100. The conference agreement makes the punishment a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding 6 months, or both.

On amendments nos. 13 and 15: The House bill authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to make regulations to carry out the powers given him and provided a fine for violating such regulations. These Senate amendments authorize the Secretary to enact a penal statute to carry out such powers and make violation of the penal statute the offense. The Senate recedes on both amendments.

On amendment no. 14: This amendment provides that no producer shall be taxed or penalized in the ginning of his first six bales and further provides that the total allotment for the crop year 1934–35 shall not exceed 10,000,000 bales. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 16: This amendment reduces from 6 months to 30 days the time, after filing claim for refund of tax, prior to which no suit or proceeding by the taxpayer may be begun for the recovery of the tax paid. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 17: This amendment strikes out the provision of the House bill defining the term "bale" when used in describing a quantity of cotton as 500 pounds of lint cotton, and substitutes therefor a definition of bale as a package containing 500 pounds average gross weight of lint cotton and customary bagging and ties. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 18: This amendment strikes out the provision of the House bill authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase taxable cotton and to dispose of it for charitable purposes, in the development of new and extended uses for cotton, and for other purposes, and which authorized the making of appropriations of funds available to the Secretary of Agriculture under section 12 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. The House recedes with an amendment which authorizes the Secretary to develop new and extended uses for cotton and which limits the amount which is authorized to be appropriated from the funds available under such section 12 to $500,000.

On amendment no. 19: This amendment strikes out the amendment contained in the House bill to the Agricultural Adjustment Act authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to include in agreements made under section 8 (1) of that act provisions for the reduction of acreage or production for market of agricultural commodities. The House recedes.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL—1935

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conferees on the legislative department appropriation bill may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

G. T. FLEMING

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H.R. 4930, for the relief of G. T. Fleming.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Will the gentleman let that go over without prejudice?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. No. I object.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes; I will reserve the objection if the gentleman wants to make a statement.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. The two bills that have just been passed by the House grew out of the same identical facts. The facts are these: This man was bailed out by these gentlemen as a friend, but he broke faith with them, absconded, and did not appear for trial. The bond was estreated. These men walked up like men and set out to get the fugitive. They ran him into Marion, N.C., but missed him; they ran him over to Kingsport, Tenn., but missed him: they ran him to Augusta, Ga., and missed him, but finally caught him at Lagrange, Ga., and had to pay a reward to get him. These men did this without cost to the Government, and they went on this man's bail without premium, as a friendly act.

I think this practice of refusing the refund of these claims will operate against the Government considerably because it is a mutual advantage to both the Government and the accused. Down in my part of the country court is held but twice a year and under the Federal law which prevails in that part of the country a man can be tried only within the vicinity where the court is being held. If he is apprehended in May, for instance, and the May grand jury fails to act he has to stay in jail until November at a per diem expense to the country.

This bail was given by these men as a friendly act. They received no premium for it. They brought their man back to justice; and under these circumstances I do not think they should be punished further than the expense to which they have already been put.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I would not say the accused acted as a friend.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. That is just the point. There is a principle involved. We have established the principle of making refunds in such cases and have passed other bills along this line.

We have already passed two bills growing out of the same situation. If the gentleman objects to this bill, the probability is that an injustice will be done to the one man of the three who probably needs the money more than any of the individuals. This man is a textile worker living on daily wages, and I contend that it is manifestly unfair not to pass this particular bill just because—and I say this without undertaking in any way to impugn the motive of the gentleman from Washington—just because a man may have a complex against a class of bills, to hold it up irrespective of the merits involved in the bill.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I rather resent the idea of a complex. The only reason the other two bills were passed is because I was not here to object. Had I been here, I would have objected to both. I am objecting to bills of this kind as a matter of principle. If this man was such a friend, why did he not appear at the time court was held?

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. That is the point. These three men acted as his bondsmen. When they found he had jumped his bail and the bond had been estreated, they went after him like men and finally even paid a reward of $100 to a man who traced him down and caught him in Lagrange, Ga., while he was asleep.

Mr. HASTINGS. Without expense to the Government.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Without expense to the Government.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

R. A. HUNSINGER

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 361, the bill (H.R. 1977), for the relief of R. A. Hunsinger, which is in the same class as the bills last considered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 1977) for the relief of R. A. Hunsinger.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to R. A. Hunsinger the sum of $300, being the amount paid by him into the estate of Frank J. Artz, deceased, late of Troop I, Third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, Civil War, by order of the probate court of Sandusky County, Ohio.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MRS. PLEASANT LAWRENCE PARR

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 332, the bill (H.R. 6890), for the relief of Mrs. Pleasant Lawrence Parr.

Mr. TRUAX. I object.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. TRUAX. I may say to the gentleman that we have a long calendar here and the majority leader is desirous of getting through it as speedily as possible. If we are met with request after request to return to bills that have already been considered we will not get through the calendar very quickly.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield.

Mr. TARVER. There are unusual circumstances surrounding this request. This is the bill of my colleague, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK]. At the time it was first reached he was unavoidably absent on account of a death in his family. At the time the bill was called there was simply a reservation of objection which I am sure could have been met satisfactorily by my colleague had he been here. For these unusual reasons it seems to me the request should be granted.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, at the time this bill was called previously I asked that the bill go over because I wanted to consult the author of the bill. I understand that an amendment which I intended to offer at that time is acceptable to the author, and it is my intention to offer the amendment if the gentleman will permit the bill to come up.

The bill would have come up yesterday had the gentleman been here and not called away on account of death in his family.

Mr. TRUAX. I made similar requests yesterday that bills be passed over because the authors were not present. Several of the gentlemen came to me this morning and wished to obtain my approval to go back to these bills. If we go back to one we will have to go back to all of them. I may say to the gentleman that I will withdraw my objection to reconsideration of this one bill, but I shall object to subsequent bills.

Mr. HOPE. I have no intention of calling up any other bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to accept the claim of Mrs. Pleasant Lawrence Parr, widow of Pleasant Lawrence Parr, a former employee of the Navy Department, who died as the result of injuries received while in the performance of his duties, as if she had filed claim within the time required by the Compensation Act of September 7, 1916, as amended.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOPE: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert "That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine the claim of Mrs. Pleasant Lawrence Parr, widow of Pleasant Lawrence Parr, a former employee of the Navy Department, in the same manner and to the same extent as if application for the benefits of the United States Employees' Compensation Act had been made within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof: Provided, That no benefit shall accrue prior to the approval of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PAUL I. MORRIS AND BEULAH FULLER MORRIS

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, at the time of consideration of Private Calendar 382, H.R. 2669, for the relief of Paul I. Morris and Beulah Morris, an agreement was made that this bill might be called on the next call of the calendar. I ask unanimous consent to take the bill up at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BLOOM). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill was rather fully discussed yesterday and I believe every Member understands the point involved, which is simply whether we want to establish a new precedent permitting the parents of boys killed, or dying as the result of disease contracted at Citizens' Military Training Camps, to receive compensation.

This bill would give a pension to the parents of a boy who contracted spinal meningitis at a training camp and subsequently died. It also reimburses the parents for all medical expenses to the extent of $764. This has never been done before, and personally I do not want to take the responsibility of permitting this new precedent to be established unless the gentlemen of the House think it ought to be established.

May I call attention to the fact that it was in the minds of the Members of Congress that there would be disease, there would be accidents, and there would be deaths when the law was enacted establishing the training camps. It provides that if a member of these camps shall suffer personal injury in line of duty while en route to or from and while at camps of instruction he shall be entitled to hospital treatment, including medical treatment, transportation to his home and further medical treatment after arrival at his home. It also contemplated death, because the law provides that in case of death the Government may allow funeral expenses up to a sum not exceeding $100.

The very question that is before us now evidently received the careful consideration of Congress when the general law was passed. If we pass this bill, it will, in effect, repeal that law in an individual case. Personally I do not feel that I ought to permit this to be done, but I will withdraw my objection to the present consideration of the bill and permit the gentlemen present, who understand the situation, to vote on the question. I am not willing to establish this precedent on my own responsibility.

If this bill is passed, there are many others that will be introduced. There have been a great many young men who have died as a result of disease or injury at these camps. I personally objected to one of these bills a year ago, and the gentleman from Texas tells me he has objected to four or five.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman permit me to say a word?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I intend to yield, but I just want to make this statement. If it is agreeable to the gentlemen, I will withdraw the objection and let the Members of the House vote on the question.

Mr. TARVER. May I say that this is not the creation of a precedent. In the discussion yesterday I called attention to the fact that Private Law 470, passed during the Seventieth Congress, provided relief for a member of the Reserve Officers' Training camp. The gentleman from New York was under the impression on yesterday that this relief amounted to only $150, but upon calling the Employees' Compensation Commission this morning I was advised that the trainee had been awarded under the provisions of that act compensation in the amount of $100 per month, which amount, after the passage of the Economy Act, was reduced to $85, and has now been raised under recent legislation to $90 per month. Therefore there is no precedent being established. The precedent has already been established, insofar as Reserve Officers' Training camp trainees are concerned. If compensation should be awarded in cases of that kind, then it would be fair to award it in cases of trainees in citizen's military training camps.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I may say to the gentleman that a little later on there is another bill of a similar nature. It does seem that Congress ought to settle once and for all the question of whether the compensation law shall be extended to this type of case, and I do not believe the matter should be brought up in individual bills.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered by the House, and that, after 10 minutes' debate on each side, it may be voted upon?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that a moment?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. There was a full discussion of this question yesterday.

Mr. TARVER. Yes; but there is another suggestion we have not talked about which I should like to have considered.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I shall withhold the demand for the regular order a moment.

Mr. TARVER. There is, in no event, any objection to the second section of the bill which is recommended by the Department, as to the payment of burial expenses and doctors' bills.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw my objection with respect to that part of the bill.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, in order to afford these people some kind of relief, and in order to secure the passage of the bill, I am willing to amend it so as to provide only for the payment of funeral expenses and doctors' bills, as provided in section 2, if that is necessary.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. If the gentleman will agree to an amendment striking out section 1, I shall not object.

Mr. TARVER. There will have to be some other changes in verbiage, but I have amendments prepared which will strike out section 1 and change the verbiage of section 2, so as to provide only for the $764.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. With the understanding that the first section of the bill will be stricken out, I withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to place upon its roll the names of Paul I. Morris and Beulah Fuller Morris and pay them compensation at the rate of $15 per month each on account of the death of their son, William Fuller Morris, on July 21, 1930, as the result of the disease contracted at the citizens' military training camp at Fort McClellan, Ala., said compensation to begin as of July 21, 1930, and to continue for 8 years or until prior death of said beneficiaries.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $764 to the said Paul I. Morris in full payment for hospital, physician, and nursing bills, and funeral expenses incurred by him in the last illness, death, and burial of the said William Fuller Morris.

SEC. 3. That the amounts herein appropriated shall be in full settlement of all claims of the said Paul I. Morris and Beulah Fuller Morris against the United States on account of the death of their said son.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the bill by striking out section 1 and numbering the succeeding sections accordingly.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TARVER: Page 1, beginning with line 3, strike out all of section 1, and on page 2 change the section numbers to sections 1 and 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking in line 6, on page 2, at the end of the line, the word "the"; and in line 7, on page 2, at the beginning of the line, the word "said."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TARVER: Page 2, line 6, at the end of the line, strike out the word "the"; and at the beginning of line 7, strike out the word "said."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking the period at the end of line 7, on page 2, and inserting "who died July 21, 1930, as the result of disease contracted at the citizens' military training camp, Fort McClellan, Ala."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TARVER: Page 2, line 7, after the word "Morris", strike out the period, insert a comma, and add: "who died July 21, 1930, as the result of disease contracted at the citizens' military training camp, Fort McClellan, Ala."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking the word "amounts", in line 8, on page 2, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "amount."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TARVER: Page 2, line 8, strike out the word "amounts" and insert in lieu thereof the word "amount."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking in line 10, on page 2, the words "and Beulah Fuller Morris."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TARVER: Page 2, line 10, strike out the words "and Beulah Fuller Morris."

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the amendment, striking out the words, in line 9, "claims of the said Paul I. Morris and Beulah Fuller Morris", so that the section will read:

That the amounts herein appropriated shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States on account of the death of William Fuller Morris.

Mr. TARVER. I think, if my friend will pardon me, the amendment to the amendment ought not to be adopted, because it may be possible that the Congress will decide in the future to begin paying claims of this character. Mrs. Beulah Fuller Morris is not now to be the recipient of anything under the terms of this bill, and only the claims of Paul I. Morris are to be settled by the passage of the bill. You should not require Mrs. Beulah Fuller Morris, who gets nothing under the bill as amended, to surrender any claims she may have against the United States and which might be entitled to future consideration.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. My understanding is that the $764 is being paid in full settlement of all claims against the United States.

Mr. TARVER. It is being paid to Paul I. Morris in full settlement of doctor's bills and funeral expenses. Mrs. Beulah Fuller Morris ought not to be required to settle any claims she may have by reason of the payment of the claim to another person for burial expenses and doctor's bills.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Are there any such claims? We ought to clean them up at once if there are.

Mr. TARVER. The other claim is the one we have been discussing here this morning, and which, I hope, may be presented in the future, provided the Congress decides to pay that sort of claim; otherwise not. I do not want her to be estopped if Congress, in the future, decides to allow compensation in these cases. I do not want her to be estopped by the passage of this bill from presenting her claim for compensation if such a policy should be entered upon.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. If such a bill is passed and made retroactive, does the gentleman think the language I have used would be a bar?

Mr. TARVER. I think it would be a bar to her, because it provides it is in settlement of all claims on account of the death of this young man. I think it is perfectly fair to require that the person receiving the appropriation shall receive it in full of all his claims, but I do not think it is fair to require that persons who are not parties to the bill and who do not receive anything under its terms should surrender any sort of claim they may have.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The Tarver amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 2, line 11, by striking out the word "their" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "his."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TARVER: Page 2, line 11, strike out the word "their" and insert the word "his."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: "A bill for the relief of Paul I. Morris."

WALTER E. SWITZER

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 3463) for the relief of Walter E. Switzer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the author of the bill a question. I note in the report that the evidence is very conflicting as to the proximate cause of the accident. Will the gentleman explain?

Mr. RICH. This man was a police officer in Williamsport, and was called out on a report that there had been a murder. While riding on a police motorcycle, he collided with a mail truck of the Williamsport post office. It was in the evening and it was raining. He had traveled about one half mile and came to a dead-end street. There was a postal truck coming around the corner and the truck ran into him.

Mr. TRUAX. Have they compensated the beneficiary as they usually do?

Mr. RICH. They sought to give him some work in the office, but it did not amount to much.

Mr. TRUAX. What was the actual amount?

Mr. RICH. He worked for a number of years; they employed him at nominal wages—I think $60 or $80 a month—trying to give him some compensation, but they could not keep him on the pay roll without rendering some service.

Mr. MEAD. Did the local postmaster make a report?

Mr. RICH. We had reports from the postmaster and from various witnesses. This claim has been here 6 or 7 years.

Mr. MEAD. Were the reports all favorable?

Mr. RICH. The people I interviewed were all favorable. I have checked this man's statement, and witnesses say that if there ever was a just claim, this is it, and that it ought to be paid.

Mr. TRUAX. The report states that the motorcycle was going at a high rate of speed.

Mr. RICH. They claim that he was going 50 or 60 miles an hour.

Mr. TRUAX. Sixty miles an hour.

Mr. RICH. If a policeman was asked to go out to clear up a murder, does the gentleman think he would proceed along at a rate of 15 or 20 miles an hour? I think this is a legitimate claim. It has been presented six or seven times, but has always been objected to. The last time it was objected to by Mr. Stafford, who told me on the floor of the House that he would meet me and discuss it with me. I went 8 or 10 times to see Mr. Stafford, and every time he said he had not the time. If you know Mr. Stafford, you know that you can never get an opportunity to discuss anything with him.

Mr. TRUAX. It seems to be a well-established practice here that any Member who introduces a bill for some one that has collided with a mail truck or an Army truck, or any property of the Government, that the Government must compensate them. This man has already been compensated to a certain extent. I want to ask the gentleman this question: The gentleman from Pennsylvania has been in the habit of objecting to all requests to extend remarks other than Members' own in the RECORD on the ground, as he states, of economy. In view of the gentleman's position on economy, does the gentleman feel that this is in the line of economy, to go back 8 or 9 years, in a case where the evidence is conflicting as to whether or not it was the fault of the Government, and pay this man the sum of $3,000 for an injury that he is alleged to have received?

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman would let me answer him in this respect, I am thoroughly in accord with Government economy. If this was not an honorable and honest claim and if I had not gone to some of the individuals who had witnessed this accident and made investigation myself, I certainly would not be presenting it to the Government, because I do not want anybody to get a penny out of the Government that he is not justly entitled to. If the gentleman had his leg taken off by a Government truck, I think he would consider that $3,000 is the minimum that anyone could be asked to take.

Mr. TRUAX. But if it had not been a mail truck, there would not have been any relief.

Mr. RICH. If it had not been a mail truck he would have had redress to sue the individual, and he would have received a great deal more than $3,000; and you know he cannot sue the Government.

Mr. TRUAX. But he was employed by the city as a police officer, and it was the responsibility of the city and not the responsibility of the Government.

Mr. RICH. Oh, the gentleman is wrong.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman himself is wrong. In view of the gentleman's tendencies to practice economy, would the gentleman not be willing to cut this bill in half, as he wants to save money on printing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and so forth?

Mr. RICH. I presented this claim myself twice, and I shall present it twice more, because it is honorable and just. If the gentleman thinks it ought to be cut down now to $1,500, I probably would have to acquiesce, but I dislike to do so.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman is not answering my question.

Mr. RICH. I think that $3,000 is a small amount for a man who had his leg taken off, and the evidence shows it was the fault of a Government mail truck.

Mr. TRUAX. Was it below or above the knee?

Mr. RICH. I think it was right below the knee.

Mr. TRUAX. I am inclined to agree with the last statement of the gentleman, that if a man lost his leg as the result of an accident in which a Government employee is responsible, he should be compensated. That probably $3,000 is small enough, but this situation exists: The gentleman and others here will not permit telegrams, letters, newspaper editorials, and other informative data to go into the RECORD. All that certain Members have to do is to proceed over to the other body and have them inserted promptly. The gentleman has repeatedly stated that the reason he objects to extensions here is because he is a member of the Committee on Printing, and he wants to save the Government money.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman will bear with me just a moment, I would like to read this resolution that I have presented to the Joint Committee on Printing. I expected to have an opportunity to discuss it with the minority leader this morning, but we were not permitted to do so.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I think it is a little out of order to go into this matter of printing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this time. I think this entire matter can be settled on the basis of $2,000, which is more than any State compensation commission would give for a leg cut off below the knee.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman wants to make it that, I will agree to that amount to settle the claim.

Mr. TRUAX. I have no objection.

Mr. RICH. I agree to an amendment striking out "$3,000" and making it "$2,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full settlement against the Government, to Walter E. Switzer the sum of $10,000 in compensation for injuries caused by a post-office truck, resulting in the amputation of his left leg.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 10, strike out "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,000."

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ZIONCHECK to the committee amendment: Strike out "$3,000" in line 7 and insert in lieu thereof "$2,000."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

At the end of the bill insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ESTATE OF WILLIAM BARDEL

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3502, for the relief of the estate of William Bardel.

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, I want to call the attention of the House to the statement of facts on this bill. This is to reimburse a man for home furnishings that he sold in France during the war. The claim is made for these articles at their original cost—one parlor set, $600; one piano, $600, and so on. There undoubtedly was a depreciation of 50 percent on these articles. Since we are practicing economy, I ask the author of the bill if he would be willing to cut the claim 50 percent?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Will the gentleman permit me to recite the circumstances surrounding the sale of this property?

Mr. TRUAX. Certainly.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. This man was an American consul at Reims, France, during the war. It was at the time when Reims was under seige. The town was in rather chaotic condition. It was impossible to buy or sell anything. There was no transportation there. He got orders from the American Government to move immediately. There was no transportation, and his insurance was wiped out, and he was forced to sell his furniture on the sidewalk. Of course, he could not get the proper compensation.

Mr. TRUAX. He received 4,115 francs.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. I mean proper in relation to its real value.

Mr. TRUAX. His value is $5,100. What is the difference between what he received and the amount he claims he should have received?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. I am not prepared to give the exact figures, but the committee was rather careful in considering the appraisal of that furniture.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman surely would agree to deducting the amount of money the claimant received when he sold his goods; the gentleman will not insist on the Government paying the original cost, I hope.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. If the gentleman offers an amendment to make the amount $3,000, I will accept it.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection to having the bill considered, and will offer an amendment approved by the gentleman from New York.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full settlement against the Government, to the estate of William Bardel the sum of $4,800 for property loss sustained by him as a result of the war while acting as American consul at Reims, France.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 9, add the customary attorney's fee amendment as follows: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TRUAX: Page 1, line 7, strike out "$4,800" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COTTON CONTROL BILL

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, certain legislation is pending before the House at this time which, in my opinion, carries with it greater danger to the independence of the American farmer than anything that has ever been presented to Congress; and I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks upon that subject at this point.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Certainly.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. What is the particular legislation to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. WOODRUFF. I have reference to certain provisions that are now in conference between the two Houses on the cotton control bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, on March 19 last the House passed a measure known as "the cotton control bill." Section 25 carried the following provision:

Agreements authorized by this subsection may include, among others, provisions requiring the producers who are parties to such agreements to reduce or limit acreage and/or production for market of agricultural commodities other than basic agricultural commodities, as well as of one or more basic agricultural commodities.

It will be noted that this is a provision which applies not alone to the cotton growers of the South but if enacted into law will complete the enslavement of every farmer in every section of this country who produces for sale, under agreement which gives him the benefits of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, one or more of the so-called "basic agricultural commodities." This, of course, includes practically every farmer in the United States.

Without question this proposal is the most destructive of freedom of action and personal liberty that has been submitted here for consideration during my years as a Member of this body.

During the period when the cotton control bill was under consideration in the House I was necessarily absent much of the time because of hearings being held by the subcommittee of which I am a member, and because of this fact I did not have an opportunity to give the attention that I otherwise would have given to the provisions of the bill. Since its passage in the House, however, I have scanned the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with a view of learning the reactions of the members of the Agricultural Committee and other Members of the House to its provisions, and I am amazed to find that no Member considered the one I refer to of sufficient importance to direct attention to it in general debate, or in debate under the 5-minute rule when the bill was being read for amendment. I have since talked with Members who stated they had known of the provision at the time the bill was under consideration, but had not objected to it because the purpose of it appeared to be only the restriction of cotton farmers, who reduced their cotton acreage, from planting any other crops which would come in competition with products raised elsewhere throughout the country. These Members apparently did not recognize the fact that this provision, should it become the law, completely restricts the independence of producers of every other basic agricultural commodity, as well as to the producers of cotton. Had they realized this, I am sure there would not have been the complaisance toward this provision that was shown by those who knew it was in the bill.

I voted against the cotton control bill, but it passed the House by an overwhelming majority. It was sent to the Senate, and that body, not being bound down by the restrictive rules of the House, gave to the bill the consideration it should have had. The result was that the Senate struck from the bill the provision referred to, and the bill is now in conference between the House and Senate.

After the Senate had stricken the provision from the bill, there came to the House from some member of the executive branch, presumably the sugar section of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, another sugar control bill, the one which recently passed this body. An examination of that bill disclosed the fact that once more the language in the cotton control bill, to which I object most strenuously, was presented to the House for its consideration. After this bill put in its appearance, the language I have referred to aroused a storm of protest among a few of us at least. The committee gave the bill hurried consideration without further hearings, and reported the bill to the House after having stricken this language from the bill, and on motion the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

Notwithstanding this action of the committee and the House, if the House conferees insist upon the retention of this language in the cotton-control bill and the Senate conferees yield on this point, this language will be written into permanent law, with the result that some bureaucrat in Washington will have powers of almost life and death over every American farmer raising basic agricultural commodities, those commodities being wheat, corn, hogs, tobacco, rice, milk, and cattle. Legislation now in Congress will add cotton and sugar to this list, and it will be seen that nearly every American farmer grows one or more of these products.

Mr. Speaker, it is rumored among the Members that if this provision does not become the law as a part of the cotton control bill, it will be submitted to the House as a separate measure. I hope and I expect the House conferees on the cotton control bill will yield to the Senate on this matter, and that if this provision is to be submitted again it will come to us in a way that will permit of ample debate and under the regular rules of the House, when amendments may be offered, debated, and voted upon.

It is apparent that if those responsible for this proposal are successful in their attempt it will not be long until other legislation will be proposed touching the affairs of every class of our people, which will have for its purpose the further regimentation and enslavement of our people.

Having regard for the fundamental right, hidden away but guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness for our citizens, whatever their occupation, I cannot leave undone anything in my power to direct the attention of the Members of this House to the iniquity of this proposal.

Mr. Speaker, because of my strong convictions on this question, I shall outline in my following remarks the conditions which will prevail if this language, together with the penal provisions incorporated in the cotton control bill and the sugar control bill, should become the law.

Mr. Speaker, I read again the provision referred to:

> Agreements authorized by this section may include, among others, provisions requiring the producers who are parties to such agreements to reduce or limit acreage and/or production for market of agricultural commodities, other than basic agricultural commodities, as well as of one or more basic agricultural commodities.

I read these lines in connection with lines 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, on page 10, of the sugar-control bill, which lines read as follows:

> Any person willfully violating any order or regulation of the Secretary of Agriculture issued under this section shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 6 months.

I charge this to be the attempted enslavement of the American farmer.

As I stop to ponder the fact that we considered this legislation under suspension of the rules of the House of Representatives, under which suspension it was not permitted any Member of this body to offer any amendments whatsoever, not so much as the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i" in the bill, I stand aghast at the direction in which we are rushing by such legislative procedure and such legislation as this, particularly as applied to farm commodities of which we do not produce enough to supply the demands of our own people.

The meaning of the words last quoted is simply that the Secretary of Agriculture, within his discretion, may issue any order or regulation that he sees fit, and any American farmer not following any of these regulations, regardless of how seriously they may infringe upon his rights, can be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or be sent to jail for 6 months.

Under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which this bill amends, agricultural products are separated into two classes, those named by law "basic agricultural commodities." All those not so named by law are "nonbasic agricultural commodities."

The meaning of the lines above referred to, which state that "agreements authorized by this section may include, among others, provisions requiring the producers who are parties to such agreements to reduce or limit acreage and/or production for market of agricultural commodities other than basic agricultural commodities", as well as one or more basic agricultural commodities, is unquestionably and unequivocally a declaration of feudalism in American agriculture. Those lines can mean nothing other than that the American farmer, if he would receive benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, will have to sell his agricultural soul to the Secretary of Agriculture and will have to pledge fealty to the feudal lord of the Department of Agriculture under pain of being fined $1,000 or being sent to jail for 6 months if he dares to market 1 single pound of any crop—any crop, Mr. Speaker, whatsoever—without permission of the Secretary of Agriculture.

It seems inconceivable that this Congress should seriously consider passing legislation which enslaves the American farmer and which puts over his head the threat of a thousand dollar fine, or 6 months in jail, if he dares to violate any rule or regulation which may be promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture, and that he must sign away to the Secretary of Agriculture his right to plant any kind of crop whatsoever, or any part of any kind of a crop whatsoever, without the permission of a bureaucrat in Washington, D.C., provided he grows for sale any of the basic agricultural commodities.

I wonder what the American farmers are going to say about this iniquitous provision when they really learn that it means they have entered economic slavery—that to till the farm in America, under this measure, will be a perilous business; that the farmer surrenders the last vestige of his own judgment or discretion in running his farm; that he must be guided wholly, solely, and completely by what some bureaucrat in Washington is pleased to tell him he must do; that he cannot plant a crop of potatoes, nor five hills of radishes for sale without the approval, written or implied, of the Secretary of Agriculture under the provisions of this bill. And yet that is exactly what these lines mean.

When I think of the farmers of Revolutionary times; when I think of those sturdy sons of the soil who dropped the traces from the plows in the fields and mounted their farm horses to ride away to help free their country from just this sort of arrogant autocracy on the part of England, I wonder what has happened to the fibre of the American farmer if he submits to this sort of thing? I cannot believe that the American farmer realizes that he is going to have to sign away in toto his right and discretion to plant any single thing upon his acres without the permission of the Secretary of Agriculture, and that in return for a paltry check in connection with the reduction of sugar-beet culture, or the production of other basic commodities, he will have to submit to the complete and absolute and autocratic control of every bit of his farm production by a bureaucrat in Washington, or face languishing behind bars for 6 months or being fined $1,000, or both.

I would that I could make every farmer in the broad stretches of America today realize what these words mean. They will be found in lines 2 and 3 on page 10 of the sugar bill. "The decision and any determination of the Secretary (meaning the Secretary of Agriculture) shall be final." Why, Mr. Speaker, if some farmer, while raising one or more basic commodities on the prairies of Illinois, the plains of Indiana, the rolling hills of California, or the broad, fertile farm lands of Michigan, wants to plant a garden to raise vegetables for his own consumption and to sell in the nearest marketing place, he will have to agree under the terms of this bill that if for any reason, inscrutable as such reason may seem to him, the Secretary of Agriculture decrees that he cannot plant a garden, cannot raise such products, the decision of the Secretary shall be final; and if one of those farmers raised a bushel of potatoes or a half dozen bunches of radishes for sale, he could be sent to jail for 6 months or fined a thousand dollars.

Another thing which the proponents of this legislation have either lost sight of, or are closing their eyes to, is the power herein bestowed upon the Secretary of Agriculture to transplant, at his pleasure, any given agricultural activity from one part of this great country to another. For instance, in the splendid agricultural district which I have the honor to represent, we raise the finest navy beans grown anywhere in the world. The success attending the raising of this crop depends in some measure upon the amount of rainfall during the growing and harvesting seasons. During growing seasons of severe drought, the yield is light; when during the harvesting season continuous rains prevent, for a considerable period, the harvesting, the bean becomes discolored and loses much of its market value.

In these days, when the Secretary is insisting upon efficiency in agriculture, and as he has already, so far as he can, pronounced the doom of the great beet- and cane-sugar industry of continental United States, upon the mistaken theory that it is inefficient, it is reasonable to fear that in his pursuit of a more efficient agriculture, he may find it both convenient and desirable to transfer bean growing from Michigan to the irrigated sections of the West, where sunshine is always present and where water may be turned on and off as the welfare of the crop may seem to demand. Or he may decree that because the Japanese can raise beans at a lower cost than the American farmer, bean raising in this country shall disappear entirely.

He may, if it seems desirable to him, decree that the potato growers of Michigan shall cease growing that most valuable crop and that it be turned over to the farmers of Idaho and Maine, upon the theory that the farmers of those States are more efficient than are those of Michigan.

Another thing that should not be lost sight of, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that under the provisions I am now discussing, the Secretary of Agriculture, who so far as he personally is able, under power heretofore granted him, has pronounced the doom of the domestic beet-sugar industry, may decree that beet-sugar production in Michigan, Ohio, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, and other nonirrigation States be transferred from those States to the irrigated sections of the West. He will have the power to prohibit entirely all beet- and cane-sugar production in continental United States.

All this and more can be done by the efficiency expert in the Agricultural Department if this provision becomes a law.

Whither have we drifted? What are we considering in this House of Representatives? By what stretch of the imagination can anybody justify any such philosophy of government as this?

Some few American farmers may have been too busy at honest toil to read history sufficiently to know what feudalism meant in a former time and in other countries. The lord in his castle decreed what should be planted, decreed what meager portion of it should be returned to the serfs on his land, and his mere whim was law to those serf farmers.

This legislation by one strike hurls the whole of American agriculture back through history from the place American farmers won with muskets during the Revolutionary War, from the place they have won by a continuous and heartbreaking political fight ever since the Revolutionary War, back into the ages of feudalism; and in this case, this bill sets up as lord of the manor, the autocrat of the acres, the baron of the hall on the hill, the Secretary of Agriculture, who may, with all the force of law, moved by any whim, issue an order or regulation and by the stroke of his pen create some new peril for the American farmer to face, a peril which means $1,000 fine or 6 months in jail.

I want to warn this House of Representatives that if these provisions are passed, the American farmer, when he finds out how he has been betrayed, will rise up in his wrath and make every Member of this body feel the force of his condemnation.

Why, Mr. Speaker, this takes the pursuit of farming out of the category of honest toil and classifies it with those potentially criminal. I wonder if the American farmer realizes that if this bill passes, when he goes forth with a song on his lips on some fair May morning in the spring and hitches his horses to the plow—I wonder if he realizes that he may be plowing his way into jail? I wonder if he realizes that not only will he be turning up the sod on his own honest acres but that he may also be sending his plowshare through some regulation or order unknown to him, issued by the Secretary of Agriculture from his baronial castle in Washington, and that that honest farmer may find himself gazing out through prison bars?

So long have we regarded the tilling of the soil as one of man's most honorable pursuits that it seems impossible that he could suddenly have shifted into a calling fraught with danger because of some regulations or orders issued by an autocrat hundreds of miles away from where the plowshare turns the sod.

I wonder what the American farmer really is going to say and do when he realizes that tilling the soil is no longer the simple, honest, though arduous pursuit, which has been the backbone of the prosperity of the American people ever since the guns of the American Revolution ceased reverberating among the hills, and is by this act being made a complicated, regulation-ridden business in which the most honest farmer may find himself in the toils of the law without being able to understand how calamity came upon him?

That is what these provisions mean, if they mean anything. It may be all good and well for someone to say that this is an extreme picture. It may all sound fine for the proponents to say that such orders and regulations would never be issued. If such orders and regulations are never to be issued, there is not a shadow of excuse for these provisions being in any bill. And if such orders and regulations may be issued, there is every reason under God's blue skies why they should not be provided for in any bill, unless we are ready in this House of Representatives to subjugate the American farmer, to take away his freedom or imperil his calling by the threat of fines and imprisonment, and make him seek the protection of the Secretary of Agriculture before he dares to do his own planting.

Why, Mr. Speaker, if this bill passes in its present form, no farmer in America will be safe unless he has a high-powered lawyer to first go through the mass of rules and regulations in order to determine whether or not the planting of radish seed constitutes a felony within the meaning of this act.

You may get away with this now. By the lure of a Government check you may fool all of the people part of the time, and it may be possible to fool part of the people all of the time; but that wise and great and good man knew whereof he spoke when he said you cannot fool all of the people all of the time. And I warn you that you cannot fool all of the farmers all of the time, and that when they waken to the sinister and vicious possibilities under these provisions which I have attacked here today, they will rise in their wrath and hurl from place in public affairs every man who voted for this measure.

Mr. Speaker, in all seriousness, and without meaning any caustic criticism of any person, when these different proposals are put together they present a plan or a picture so utterly vicious that the most charitable conclusion to be reached is that they are made by a man or a group of men gone temporarily mad by greed for power—and for more power.

H.R. 8735

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, I am before you today advocating the approval of my bill H.R. 8735, as an aid to an industry that is rapidly being driven out of business, and unless the Congress does enact some legislation that will correct some of the inequalities, the hand-made cigar industry is going to disappear, particularly as it relates to the manufacture of the cheaper grades of cigars, for which my own particular district has been famous for a generation.

The growers of leaf tobacco in America, the cigar types, are dependent entirely upon the use of their crops in the manufacture of cigars. Our farmers have unsold crops on their hands and are willing to dispose of these crops at ridiculously low prices, much below the cost of production. To assist the farmers we now place a processing tax on the cigars we produce to reimburse the farmer for cutting his acreage, whereas the sensible thing to do is enable the cigar manufacturers of the Nation to produce cigars that will enable the farmers to have an active market for their tobacco. In 1918 we produced about 8,000,000,000 cigars in the United States. Back in 1907, almost 34 years ago, we produced more than 7,000,000,000 cigars, while today we produce only a little more than 4,000,000,000 cigars, and yet today we grow about the same quantity of tobaccos that we produced in 1918. It is perfectly obvious that with decreased cigar consumption there is no relief for the farmer, other than a continuation of the assessment of processing taxes to reimburse him partly for the acres he keeps out of cultivation. If you will read the advertisements of the nationally advertised brands of cigars, you will learn from their own statements that they are more interested in creating a market for tobaccos grown in other countries than those grown in our own, for they say, both over the radio and in their advertisements, that their cigars are manufactured of imported wrappers and fillers, trying to make the American public believe that tobaccos grown in American soil are inferior.

I have some little knowledge of the cigar-manufacturing business, for practically all of my adult life has been given to that business. When I first went into the cigar business we had no machines making cigars; we had about 23,000 factories licensed to produce cigars. Today we have about 5,000 manufacturers and each year will continue to show less of our people going into the business. There were many thousands of men and women employed making cigars by hand, blending tobaccos, and producing a pleasing smoke; but the coming of the automatic cigar machine has thrown many thousands of these out of the industry and forced them to seek other means of support. Those who use automatic power-driven machinery to make cigars need no skilled experienced labor; they want young, active girls, whom they can drive to feed the machines at the maximum speed.

Since the coming of N.R.A. these machine operators have speeded up their machines so as to produce as many cigars on these same machines in 8 hours as they produced in 10 or 12 hours; and I say to you here and now that these machines are not labor-saving, but they are nerve-racking labor-supplanting machines that displace human hands in industry, and have contributed much to our unemployment problems in this country. In addition to this, these machines have driven men from smoking cigars because good cigars cannot be produced on machines. While I agree that these machines show nice, finished product, yet the blending of tobaccos and the human touch so necessary in producing a quality cigar is missing, for most of these machines do not blend tobaccos as can the human hand, and it is absolutely necessary in the manufacture of a good palatable smoke to blend the different types of tobaccos. The use of one type of fillers in a cigar drives one to other brands, for one tires of that one type of filler, whereas in the blending of tobaccos one can produce a satisfying cigar that smokers do not tire of so easily.

Today, as a result of machines, we have many unemployed cigarmakers, and it is rare indeed to find young people learning this trade. Each community represented by Members of Congress in the past had its small cigar plants, operated by fine people, taxpayers and good citizens, who helped to build up our communities in the Nation. Today it is rare to find anyone with courage enough to manufacture cigars by hand in competition with those made by machines. Unfortunately, only those with a lot of money can afford to install these machines, for they are expensive, not sold to anyone, but placed in one's plant upon a royalty basis, with a down payment, yearly rental, and a maximum production required. I am not familiar with these figures at this time, but in the past these payments were prohibitive to the small cigar manufacturer who did not have an annual production large enough to make the installation of these machines profitable.

I want this committee to understand that I am not opposed to improved labor-saving machinery in industry, for I know that much such machinery in industry is indispensable; neither do I want to go back to the old spinning-wheel days; but I do contend that the cigar-making machine is not labor saving, neither has it contributed anything to increase the popularity of cigars, but on the contrary has driven men away from cigars to other forms of smoking. Out of the 5,000 cigar manufacturers left in the Nation, about 1 out of every 100 uses these machines, but these are the larger corporations who are gradually driving the hand-made-cigar makers to other professions and will eventually completely dominate the field.

When men want the fine cigars to smoke, however, they will always buy hand-made cigars; but, unfortunately, men are smoking printer's ink and propaganda over the air these days and not cigars. In my bill I ask the Congress for some little relief in the manufacture of the cigars that do not retail at more than 3 cents each, and what is known as the "two-for-5-cent cigars." Machines have this advantage, and I am asking for a tax of $1 per thousand on hand-made cigars instead of $2 per thousand that is now paid on all cigars that retail up to and including 5 cents. There is a potential market for these cheaper cigars that will use much of the surplus of tobaccos on the farmers' hands. About 30 percent of each crop of tobacco grown in this country is of the grade that those who produce higher-priced cigars do not want to use, the top leaves, the leaves nearest the earth, the torn leaves, and so forth. The farmer wants a market for this lower-grade tobacco for it reflects itself in his sale of the better grades. Without the sale of this portion of his crop he loses just that much money, for it cannot be used for other purposes. The hope of the cigar business lies in the sale of the cheaper cigars, for it is well known that we secure our cigar smokers from the ranks of those who buy the two-for-5-cent cigars. When we made 8,000,000,000 cigars annually we had a large sale of the two-for-5-cent cigars, and to get that old volume back again we must make it possible to produce these popular-priced cigars.

Sixty percent of the cigar manufacturers in the United States signed the President's recovery agreement. This means that this group are paying wages in keeping with the agreement. The other 40 percent are still paying shameful wages and are making it almost impossible for the patriotic men of the Nation to compete with them. Practically every cigar manufacturer in my own congressional district signed that agreement and have lived up to their promises as well as any other group in America without a code, for we do not have a code in our industry as yet that has been approved. The Agricultural Department understands our problems and, I am quite confident, are in complete sympathy with my request for a lower rate of revenue on these cheap cigars, for they realize full well that something must be done to increase cigar consumption if we are to have the farmers continue to grow the cigar-leaf types of tobacco. We now pay a processing tax of about $1 per thousand on cigars, paying the same amount of processing tax on these cheap cigars as we pay on the highest grade produced. This is unfair, but it is most difficult to administer if we differentiate. It will not be so with the rate of revenue on hand-made cigars, for a new stamp can be printed designating "hand-made" and manufacturers by regulation directed to have this imprinted on their packages. The machine operators do not need a lower tax. It has never been fair to collect the same tax on two-for-5-cent cigars as on 5-cent cigars, and we have done this for years.

My bill will also correct another abuse in the making of cigars—that of selling cigars produced to retail two for 5 cents and that cut-rate stores sell at six or seven for a quarter; indeed, many of these cheaper cigars are produced and retailed at 5 cents, and it is very easy to do this, for the same revenue stamp is now affixed to the box of cigars on two-for-5-cent cigars as is affixed to the legitimate 5-cent cigar. Give the hand-made group a differential of $1 per thousand in their product on these cheap cigars and they can then arrange to continue to make these cigars under the code that will likely be approved before very long and permit the payment of a better wage. I am deeply concerned that the cigar makers be paid a better wage, and it is my thought that the money saved in this revenue will be paid—at least most of it—to labor. Under the N.R.A. code we will likely get, it is doubtful if the average cigar maker can make the minimum wage, and only those who are fast workers can be employed, throwing thousands of slow workers out of the industry.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to throwing any individual out of a job. I do not believe that any of us here in Congress voted to throw people out of work; and yet, in these codes that are being approved, those who are employed on the piecework basis and fail to earn the minimum wage because perhaps of age or the fact that they are not as fast workers as others, are being denied work and are dependent upon charity. I am deeply opposed to this and I have so stated at code hearings.

There is a limit to the price that the cigar manufacturer can obtain for his product retailing at two for 5 cents. It was testified before you by Mr. Brooks of the York County Cigar Manufacturers' Association, that it costs almost $15 per thousand to produce a two-for-5-cent cigar under the terms of the P.R.A., and that to this cost must be added selling costs of salesmen, freight, advertising, factory overhead, and incidental expenses, not counting interest on investment and money borrowed from banks, the cost of producing that cigar and getting it to the jobber is practically $17.25 per thousand cigars. The prevailing price to the jobber for these cigars is $19.50 to $20 per thousand, less a trade discount which varies from 10 to 12 percent. Jobbers should not work under 12 percent. This leaves the hand-made-cigar manufacturers about 25 cents per thousand cigars. In other words, he invests more than $17 on 1,000 cigars to make a profit of 25 cents. I do not think this is an exaggerated statement. Now, I ask you, Mr. Speaker, how are small cigar manufacturers who produce 5,000 to 25,000 cigars per day going to stay in business? Surely, no one wants these small manufactures to stop? The very foundation structure of the Nation rests upon our small business man, and we are going to be most unfortunate, indeed, when he can no longer operate his business. This is not only true of cigar manufacturers but also of every small business in this country. Not satisfied with monopolizing the 5- and 10-cent cigar business, these machines are now turning to the manufacture of two-for-5-cent cigars, for, they will admit, they can sell these without any selling expense, charging the selling expense to their higher-priced cigars, on which they can save so much money through the use of the machines. These few large corporations, who make, perhaps, 65 percent of the cigars, also control the jobbers of the Nation; that is, the large jobbers, who frankly say to you, when you try to sell them your line of goods, that they are tied up and must dispose of the two-for-5-cent cigars made by the manufacturer of the highly advertised line, and whose franchise they must have. The plight, therefore, of the small manufacturer is a terrible one, in the face of such a situation, and, Mr. Speaker, it is not an overdrawn one, for I speak with first-hand knowledge both as a small cigar manufacturer and also as one who has called on jobbers for almost a quarter of a century soliciting their business.

Now to suggest that those who manufacture the two-for-5-cent cigars turn to the field of higher-priced cigars, is a most difficult one, for I assure you that very few, if any, manufacturers of hand-made cigars retailing at and below 3 cents, can go into that highly competitive field and succeed. A few might, but if the people in my district cannot produce these cheap cigars, it means that 10 or 12 thousand cigarmakers are unemployed. I have a number of towns in my district that are entirely dependent upon the cigar-making business and their plight right now is worse than at any time in the history of these communities. Something simply must be done for these communities. I am not here advocating the sale of cheap cigars. Personally, I am as much opposed to them as anyone can be; neither do the cigar manufacturers prefer making them, but it is what they can sell, it is what there is a market for, it is the cigar that will keep human hands employed, and I am appealing to you, Mr. Speaker, today, for these people, expecting a grateful Government to do its very best to care for its people, by making it possible for its people to operate their business. I know the wages that can be paid in the manufacture of these cigars are not in keeping with what I should like to see paid, but I know with equal certainity that it gives employment to all members of the family, and that my people, as well as the people in every other State in this Nation, can make these cigars and a livelihood; and as conditions improve and people in other industries obtain higher wages, they go to higher-priced cigars, and then this offers an opportunity to cigar manufacturers to get some of that business. We have a real menace in the Philippine cigars that are coming into this country.

Mr. Speaker, a table was prepared for me by Mr. L. Earl Grove, of the Federal Cigar Co., constituents of mine, and which table I had inserted in the hearings held before the Ways and Means Committee of the House, and which table I should like to have the Membership of this House study, that shows almost a 53 percent increase in the importation of cigars from the Philippines, while in my own district, where we make cigars that retail at the same price as these Philippine cigars, it shows a decrease of about 13 percent. The reasons for this are perfectly obvious. The period covered is that since the N.R.A. is in operation. The islands are not subject to the P.R.A. or N.R.A., but my people are. I have no fault to find with N.R.A.—please do not misunderstand me—but I do say to you that it has hurt my people more than it has done them good, so far as production of cigars is concerned. However, I want to say to you that it has also helped very considerably in increasing wages, which were a disgrace to our community, and for which we have all been ashamed. We were simply driven to it in an effort to keep our cigars in the market; we have had to pay low wages trying to compete with the Philippines, but, thank God, my people—the cigar manufacturers I represent—do not want ever to go back to those low wages, but all we are asking for is an opportunity to make cigars than can be produced profitably and still retail at 3 cents, or two for 5 cents.

If we can produce these cigars, we are not afraid of the Philippines; for smokers only buy those cigars because of the price. When they can buy cigars made by hand in the United States they will not want the Philippine cigars in any quantity.

My bill does not give the Philippines the benefit of the $1 per thousand revenue, and they do not need it. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, if you know it or not, but we do not get 1 penny of tax from cigars shipped into the United States from the Philippines; the tax being paid in the Philippines is put into their own treasury; these cigars come here and are sold at from $12 to $15 per thousand, which is much below the price that we can produce them for in this country. Now I do not want to deny to the Philippines any opportunity to do business in the United States. We may have some people who want their product, but they do not need the benefits of this lower rate of tax, because they already have such a great advantage over the hand-made cigars in this country. I am quite certain that the Treasury Department will not object to this lower tax on hand-made cigars, for I am quite confident that they agree that something must be done to encourage the use of this surplus tobacco on our farmers' hands; and that they are also in agreement that if encouraged, we can increase this cigar production, which would bring into the Treasury of the United States increased revenue to make up the loss by reason of the enactment of my bill.

Mr. Speaker, I stand here before you today in defense of a dying industry. I urge upon the Ways and Means Committee immediate serious consideration of my bill. I aim to injure no one. I am sure machine operators cannot object, for they already have a great advantage over human hands. Those who defend the Philippines cannot object, for they do not use our American grown tobaccos, and we grow the finest tobacco for cigars produced in the world. Our cigar manufacturers should spend the same money and effort to cultivate the taste of American smokers in American-grown tobaccos, as they do in foreign-grown tobaccos. We produce the finest types of wrappers in Connecticut, Florida, Alabama, and Georgia; finest types of binder tobaccos in Connecticut, Massachusetts, New York, and Wisconsin, with other good tobaccos for binder purposes in other States, however, in smaller quantities, and no finer filler tobaccos are grown anywhere than those produced in Pennsylvania and Ohio.

Read the average advertisement and you will discover that our cigar manufacturers seem bent upon telling the American people of the imported tobaccos, when they should be propagating the popularity and use of American-grown tobaccos—and the smokers would be just as well pleased. There would be no need for us to bring tobaccos from other countries to make our cigars if we were more interested in educating our American smokers of the taste and fine quality of our tobaccos. We are now importing about 18,000,000 pounds of tobaccos from the Philippines and almost an equal amount from Puerto Rico. We import about 13,000,000 pounds of tobacco from Cuba, all of which competes with tobaccos grown by the American farmers. We bring almost 2,000,000 pounds of wrapper tobaccos from the Netherland possessions, while our own wrapper tobaccos in Connecticut, Florida, and Georgia remain unsold, and when sold, bring a price very often much below the price of production, and had it not been for the aid given to these wrapper-growing communities by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation these growers would have been most unfortunate, indeed. My bill will not solve all of these ills, Mr. Speaker, but it will give the little aid that the hand-made cigar industry needs at this time, and I trust the Membership of this House will give sympathetic consideration and assist me in having my bill enacted into law.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

JOSE O. ENSLEW

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3504, for the relief of Jose O. Enslew.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection, and tell me the reason of his objection, that I may answer it if possible?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the objection. This bill is to provide compensation for an accident which happened when a mail truck ran over a pedestrian on one of the streets of New York. We have tried to follow the rule of allowing compensation only when it appears that if the case were presented in court there would be recovery were the defendant a private individual or corporation.

In this case there is no evidence whatsoever of any negligence on the part of the driver of the truck who was proceeding, as witnesses state, at about 8 miles an hour.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. He was operating the truck at 15 miles an hour.

Mr. HOLLISTER. The report says 8 at one place and possibly 15 at another, but I do not believe that even 15 miles an hour would be a negligent rate of speed.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. The circumstances surrounding this case make it meritorious. Another case almost identical in nature was compensated this morning to the extent of $2,000 for the loss of a leg. Surely, it is not asking too much to ask $5,000 as compensation for the loss of a daughter. The deceased was not a child running the streets, but was a grown woman, very well educated, holding a very responsible position. Pine Street is an extremely narrow street. If the driver of any mail truck has ever driven his vehicle through the streets of New York at 15 miles an hour he has been indulging in a practice I have never witnessed in that city. I doubt whether any witness would be capable of judging a speed of 15 miles an hour.

The report of the postmaster appears to conflict with the report of the Assistant Postmaster General and the circumstances seem to make this a border-line case. I beseech the gentleman only to consider the facts very carefully before he insists on his objection.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Could the gentleman show me it was a border-line case, I believe I could go along with the gentleman. I may say to the gentleman that while undoubtedly it is a sad case I cannot feel that the facts of this case have any particular connection with the facts of the other case to which the gentleman referred.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Both cases grew out of almost similar accidents.

Mr. HOLLISTER. These personal-injury cases are most difficult to handle. This is not a border-line case, for I am frank to say I cannot see where there has been established any negligence on the part of the Government. Any allowance would be merely a voluntary grant on the part of the Government. In view of all the circumstances in the case, I am afraid I shall be constrained to object.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. I realize, of course, that the gentleman is following a matter of policy in this, and if it is his opinion that this is not a border-line case I fear it is utterly impossible for me to convince him that it is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

HENRY A. RICHMOND

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3851, for the relief of Henry A. Richmond.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treabury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Henry A. Richmond the sum of $500 in compensation for bond forfeited for John A. Golding, now within the jurisdiction of the Federal authorities.

With the following committee amendment:

At the end of the bill insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, have we not skipped a bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No. Calendar 396 was not called. It was laid on the table because a similar bill was passed.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, may I have the RECORD show that in the event I had been cognizant that H.R. 3851, a bill for the relief of Henry A. Richmond, had been called at this time I would have objected. I presume the objection comes too late now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objection comes too late.

Mr. TRUAX. Do I understand that Private Calendar No. 396 will not be called today?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will not be called. It was laid upon the table because a similar Senate bill was passed and Calendar 396 was laid on the table.

MARGARET DIEDERICH

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3911, for the relief of Margaret Diederich.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ROLAND ZOLESKY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3912, for the relief of Roland Zolesky.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I reserve the objection.

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman state the reasons for his objection?

Mr. HOLLISTER. For the same reason that has been stated a number of times this morning. I do not see any evidence of negligence on behalf of the Government.

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. The gentleman is aware of the fact that the Supreme Court of the State of Wisconsin has held in a decision that the Government inspectors were to blame for this boy's injury?

Mr. HOLLISTER. The supreme court could not hold that, because that was not the issue before the Supreme Court of Wisconsin. The issue before the Supreme Court of Wisconsin was whether or not the private corporation was responsible. It is true that the judge in his decision states that in his opinion the Government inspectors were responsible for not having taken away the dangerous article, but that is not a decision of the case.

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. It was through the negligence of the Government inspectors that the injury to this boy resulted.

Mr. HOLLISTER. The obligation on the part of the Government inspectors had nothing to do with third parties and with respect to the public. As far as I can understand from the case, the duty of the Government inspector was to pick up the grenades that had not exploded, not for the purpose of protecting anyone, but to find out from the point of view of the Government why the explosion had not taken place, because they were making tests to find out whether the grenades were good or bad. Each grenade had to be accounted for either by exploding or a verification of the reason for failure to explode. Whether or not that casts any obligation on the Government is a highly doubtful matter.

The second point is that the private company itself was using this same proving ground for the testing of its grenades and there seems no way of establishing whether these were some of the grenades that had been fired under separate tests from those that the Government conducted or grenades fired under Government control. It should also be pointed out that this was a grenade carried off by one boy and traded to another boy, who was injured. It seems, therefore, that the injury is rather remote from any negligence on the part of the Government and it is hard to see why there should be a recovery in a case of this kind.

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. The gentleman understands that the parents of this boy commenced an action against the Briggs Loading Co. The action was appealed to the Supreme Court of the State of Wisconsin. The Supreme Court of Wisconsin, notwithstanding the fact that a jury in the lower court awarded damages to the parents of this boy, held in their decision that it was not the duty of the Briggs Loading Co., the defendant in the action, to pick up the unexploded duds, but that it was the duty of the inspectors of the United States Government to see to it that these unexploded duds were picked up out of the public park in Milwaukee County.

Mr. HOLLISTER. The Government was not a party to this case. The Government had no witnesses there. The only matter at issue was whether or not the jury was correct in awarding a verdict in the lower court. The Government was not concerned in that case.

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. When the gentleman says that the Government was not a party to this action and had no witnesses there, may I disagree with the gentleman, because I tried the case and I know every Government witness that was available and within the jurisdiction of the court was present and testified in the case. The supreme court in its decision held this:

It was undisputed that it was the duty of the Government inspectors and a part of the work of inspection and testing to collect the unexploded grenades, or "duds", as they were called. The defendant company had nothing to do with the selection of the grenades for testing purposes, with the insertion of the detonators, or with the firing of the grenades into the bombproof on the east side of the river, except that occasionally officers of the company were present, witnessed these tests, and occasionally fired the rifle as a matter of curiosity or experience. There is no proof in the record to sustain the finding of the jury, in answer to the third question, that the defendant company had actual knowledge of the unexploded grenades which were left in the bombproof on the east side of the river through the negligence of the governmental inspectors.

Further on in the decision it is stated:

To that extent and for that purpose such grenades, so selected, ceased to be the property of the defendant. Certainly from that moment they ceased to be under the control of the defendant, and, if thereafter they were negligently left in an exposed position, it was not through the negligence of the defendant but through the negligence of the inspectors.

I cannot conceive of any language that could be stronger in putting the blame upon the Government officials than this language put upon the Government inspectors by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin. Certainly somebody was to blame for this boy's injuries. A jury had stated that the Briggs Loading Co. was to blame, and on appeal to the supreme court that court handed down a decision stating that if the negligence should be put upon the shoulders of anybody it should be put upon the shoulders of the Government inspectors.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Which, of course, the court had no right to say.

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. I do not care whether the court had any right to say it or not.

Mr. HOLLISTER. But I do.

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. I may say to the gentleman that if there is no merit to this case there is no merit to any bill that has been presented in this House, and I am going to object to every bill from now on.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

NICK VASILZEVIC

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3913, for the relief of the legal guardian of Nick Vasilzevic.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

GEORGE C. MANSFIELD CO. AND GEORGE D. MANSFIELD

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3914, for the relief of the George C. Mansfield Co. and George D. Mansfield.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

WALTER THOMAS FOREMAN

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4035, for the relief of Walter Thomas Foreman.

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I wish the gentleman would withhold his objection a moment. This bill is sponsored by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] and a similar Senate bill has already been passed by that body and the gentleman from North Carolina wants to substitute the Senate bill for this measure. In my judgment and in the judgment of my coworkers on the calendar, the bill is meritorious and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I shall take the gentleman's judgment in the matter and withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill (S. 1075), as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 17 and 20 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, are hereby waived in favor of Walter Thomas Foreman, former employee of the United States Shipping Board, who now resides at Albemarle, N.C.: Provided, That compensation, if any, shall commence from and after the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

MAYOR AND ALDERMEN OF JERSEY CITY, N.J.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4067, for the relief of the mayor and aldermen of Jersey City, Hudson County, N.J., a municipal corporation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WOODRUM). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill would appropriate the sum of $62,340.65 from the Treasury and pay it to certain officials of Jersey City. It is a measure I have objected to for quite a number of years. I have talked with officials in the Department who had something to do with this matter, in my investigation, and the Department has recommended against it, and there is an adverse report filed by the Solicitor and Assistant Director General.

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. On account of our friendship for our distinguished colleague from New Jersey I wish it were so I did not have to object, but impelled by my duty I am forced to do so.

I yield if the gentlewoman from New Jersey wants to be heard on the bill.

Mrs. NORTON. I am very anxious to know who the people are who have objected. I myself have not been able to find any.

Mr. BLANTON. My friend is so influential I am afraid she would cause them some trouble if I were to tell her. But here is what General Solicitor Sidney F. Andrews says:

I so stated to the representatives of Jersey City, and told them that having such an opinion, I was not willing to approve the payment of this bill. There was nothing to have prevented the attorneys for Jersey City in having the matter presented to a court in order to ascertain whether or not my——

Mrs. NORTON. Does not the gentleman think that is the only fair way of determining the truth of the matter? I would be glad to argue this claim with these officials if I knew where to find them. I would like to know the name of the department and the solicitor he refers to.

Mr. BLANTON. I regret I must object. Whenever we allow a bill carrying this amount of money, $62,340.65, to be called up in this way, the Speaker says, "Without objection, the bill will be considered to have been engrossed, read a third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table", and this passes it in about one tenth of a minute, although the bill carries $62,340.65. Whenever you allow such a measure to pass by unanimous consent, it places the burden and responsibility upon the shoulders of every Member of the House, and I would not be able to sleep at nights, I would not be able to go back home and look my constituents in the face, if I allowed that to be done.

Mrs. NORTON. May I say to the gentleman that, because I know how very seriously he takes all of these bills, I have been hoping and praying all day that some good friend of his would keep him out of the Chamber so that I would be allowed to present this bill on its merits. That is all I ask—fair consideration.

Mr. BLANTON. I am here when bad bills come up. I am sorry to have to object to the gentlewoman's bill.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice until the new rule is put into application.

Mr. BLANTON. I regret that I cannot agree to that. I want to keep this $62,340.65 in the Treasury.

I object, Mr. Speaker.

WILLIAM H. AMES

The Clerk called the bill (H.R.4078) for the relief of William H. Ames.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Reserving the right to object, the main question here is in reference to the amount. Does the gentleman from Ohio have any information in regard to the bill?

Mr. HOLLISTER. The question in my mind is the statute of limitations.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Does the gentleman feel that this is a just claim?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I have not gone into the matter beyond the point of the statute of limitations. We have bill after bill coming here waiving the statute of limitations.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The gentleman is going to object to it on the ground of the statute of limitations?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Yes. I object.

JOHN J. CORCORAN

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 4082) for the relief of John J. Corcoran.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

With the following committee amendment:

Add at the end of the bill the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EDWARD J. DEVINE

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 4269) for the relief of Edward J. Devine.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is authorized and directed to pay, out of the appropriation "Medical and hospital services", to Edward J. Devine the sum of $65.50. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for undertaking services performed by Edward J. Devine in connection with the burial of Patrick J. Murtagh.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHARLES A. BROWN

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 4274) for the relief of Charles A. Brown.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Charles A. Brown the sum of $5,000, as compensation for injuries sustained on June 22, 1926, at New York City, when an automobile in which he was riding was struck by a truck operated by the post-office service.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the sum of "$5,000" and insert "$3,000."

At the end of the bill insert "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

R. W. DICKERSON

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 4390) to extend the benefits of the United States Employees' Compensation Act to R. W. Dickerson.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BLOOM). Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Reserving the right to object, the Navy Department makes an adverse report on this bill.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. You cannot find a case where the Navy Department has made a favorable report on a bill of this character. This man suffered the loss of his right hand in January before the passage of the United States Employees' Compensation Act. When I introduced this bill there was no policy in this House of objecting to bills of this character. But some gentlemen have taken it on themselves to object to a few of these bills. There are several bills of this character that have been passed by the Senate, and some have passed this body, where they have extended the benefits of the Employees' Compensation Act to former employees of the Government who were injured prior to the passage of the act. Of course, you know the act was not retroactive so there is no other course left but to appeal to Congress for relief.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. This man was injured 6 months before the enactment of the Employees' Compensation Act.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. We have passed bills giving compensation to persons injured several years before the passage of the act. That was before the gentleman's time. I know of the policy you have adopted but I feel if the case warrants relief we should extend it. That is the reason I introduced this bill. The bill passed the House at one time but was not reached in the Senate. Just a few minutes ago you awarded a man two thousand for the loss of a leg. Surely the gentleman would not say that this Government employee is not entitled to some relief? He has never been recognized in any way by the Government.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I admit some relief should be granted.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman permit me to strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute language that will pay this man $3,000 for the loss of his right hand?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I will do that.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to extend to R. W. Dickerson, a former employee of the United States Navy Academy dairy farm, who was injured on the 5th day of January 1916, while in the performance of his duties at the Naval Academy dairy farm, the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", compensation hereunder to commence from date of enactment of this act.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert "That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $3,000 to R. W. Dickerson as settlement in full for the loss of his right hand in a machine at the Naval Academy dairy farm January 5, 1916."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be instructed to change the title to conform with the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the title will be changed.

There was no objection.

RUSSELL & TUCKER

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I asked unanimous consent that Calendar No. 373, H.R. 2340, be called as no. 4 on the next Private Calendar call. This request was made before the Private Calendar was set for today. I now ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 373 and consider the same. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] objected to the bill and he has since agreed to withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG]?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I am not going to object, I stated a while ago that I would object to any further requests to go back and call up bills that have been passed over, but since the gentleman did obtain consent on yesterday, I have no objection.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Russell & Tucker, a copartnership composed of Lee L. Russell and S. C. Tucker; Floyd & Co., a copartnership composed of C. W. Floyd and S. C. Tucker; Borroum, Tucker & O'Connor, a copartnership composed of J. L. Borroum, S. C. Tucker, and Martin O'Connor; Rutledge, Browne & Nichols, a copartnership composed of W. J. Rutledge, N. H. Browne, and J. W. Nichols; Russell & Wilson, a copartnership composed of R. R. Russell and W. E. Wilson; Rocky Reagan, Alfred A. Drummond, J. M. Dobie, and Dick Colson, their heirs, legal representatives, executors, administrators, and assigns, any statutes of limitations being waived, are hereby authorized to enter suit in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas for the amount alleged to be due to said claimants from the United States by reason of the alleged neglect and alleged wrongdoing of the officials and inspectors of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry in the dipping of tick-infested cattle in Texas and Oklahoma, some of said cattle being dipped in an arsenical solution so strong as to kill said cattle and some of them being dipped in an arsenical solution so weak as not to kill the ticks and some of them being dipped in a solution, to wit: Crude oil, a solution not being one that would kill the fevered ticks, and in erroneously certifying by the inspectors of the Bureau of Animal Industry as being free of ticks.

SEC. 2. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas to hear and determine all such claims. The action in said court may be presented by a single petition making the United States party defendant, and shall set forth all the facts on which the claimants base their claims, and the petition may be verified by the agent or attorney of said claimants, official letters, reports, and public records, or certified copies thereof may be used as evidence, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine said suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found due from the United States to the said claimants by reason of the alleged negligence and erroneous certification, upon the same principles and under the same measure of liability as in like cases between private parties, and the Government hereby waives its immunity from suit. And said claimants and the United States of America shall have all rights of appeal or writ of error or other remedy as in similar cases between private persons or corporations: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of said court, and upon such notice it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: And provided further, That such suit shall be begun within 12 months of the date of the approval of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, after line 10, strike out lines 11 to 17, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof "which said cattle were shipped from Texas to Osage County, Okla., in the years 1918 and 1922."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 22, after the word "claims", insert "without intervention of a jury."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following further committee amendment:

Page 3, line 21, strike out the word "twelve" and insert the word "six."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES BANK OF ST. LOUIS, MO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4393, for the relief of the United States Bank of St. Louis, Mo.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman withhold his objection and state why he objects?

Mr. TRUAX. I have objected to all bills that seek to refund income taxes paid 10 or 15 years ago. This bill provides for the payment of $10,000, or a little over, to the United States Bank of St. Louis. I have objected to similar bills on the same ground, and shall continue to object to all such bills.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. In the first place, the gentleman shows he has not read the bill carefully when he says it provides for a refund of $10,000.

Mr. TRUAX. It is $7,700 plus interest.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Now, this is the situation, as the gentleman will see by the report.

Mr. TRUAX. I have read the report.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The Treasury Department admit that this is an overpayment.

Mr. TRUAX. Does the Treasury Department recommend the enactment of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I say the Treasury Department admits that this is an overpayment. That shows the Government has money it is not entitled to.

Mr. TRUAX. I will take the gentleman's word for that.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Now, this is the situation with reference to this bill, and why we come to the Congress. There is no other place to go.

Mr. TRUAX. There ought not be any place to go to get back money that was paid in income taxes for 1920.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I should like to see somebody take money from the gentleman from Ohio wrongfully and see him keep still about it. The gentleman would never stop yelling.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman from Missouri is doing all the yelling. I wonder why? They never took any overpayment from me because I could not make enough as a farmer to overpay them.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That is the gentleman's hard luck. This bank paid its income tax. Two years afterward the Government sent an auditor to check up and see whether the return had been properly made. The auditor found that they took a deduction in 1 year that should have been taken in another year. They assessed an additional amount. The bank said "All right; just deduct the $7,000 plus, and we will pay the balance." The Government said, "No; we do not do business that way. You must pay this full amount of the additional assessment, and then we will refund the money to you." That is what the auditor told the bank.

Now, the bank followed the auditor's instructions and paid the full amount of the additional assessment and, as the auditor had told them, thought the Government would refund this $7,000, but the Government did not refund the $7,000. Then the bank came to the Government and wanted to know why, and the Government said, "Because you did not file an application." The bank said, "The auditor told us you would send us a check." The Government said, "You did not file an application and therefore we cannot pay you, because the statute of limitations has intervened."

Mr. TRUAX. I would remind the gentleman from Missouri, as I have stated to other gentlemen who have had similar bills, that if Andrew Mellon, that great refunder of all times, refused it should not be refunded here.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Oh, let us leave Andrew Mellon out of it. This is not Andrew Mellon. Mellon has nothing to do with this case.

Mr. TRUAX. It occurred under Mr. Mellon's regime.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Oh, it was during the Harding administration. Regardless as to who was Secretary of the Treasury, that has nothing to do with the merits of the bill. The report shows this applies to the years 1920 and 1921.

Mr. TRUAX. Does the gentleman mean the tax was paid then?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. I object to every bill that seeks to go back to the administration of Woodrow Wilson and refund income taxes that were largely made out of war profits.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. This was in 1920 and 1921, after the war was over. Let the gentleman consider the bill on its merits, and not resort to such arguments. There is no excess profits involved in this case; the question involved is, Are you going to refund money to a taxpayer that he is entitled to?

Mr. TRUAX. I care not when it was. I object to raids on the Treasury by banks or otherwise. Mr. Speaker, I object.

M. J. HARBINSON

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4425, providing compensation to H. J. Harbinson for injuries sustained while in the Government service at and on the Belknap Reservation, Mont., engaged as a moundsman.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JAMES FLOYD TERRELL

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4444, for the relief of Lt. James Floyd Terrell, Medical Corps, United States Navy.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will not the gentleman withhold his objection and state his reasons for objecting?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The reason I object to this bill is that the Government cannot be the insurer of all property damaged on a Government reservation by flood or fire.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is very true.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. If the gentleman can point out where this case is different from thousands of similar cases, I shall be glad to withdraw my objection.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In the first place, this property was in a foreign country.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. It was at Coco Solo. That is American territory.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not know whether it was or not. In the second place, this officer made every effort to secure insurance in that country, but was unable to do so.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Washington yield?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. For a number of years I have been watching the bills introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE]. I have never seen the gentleman introduce a bill that he did not think was meritorious. This bill is for not a large amount. If we can do so conscientiously, let us pass it.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. But the gentleman from Texas has been objecting to bills of this nature right along.

Mr. BLANTON. No; this has a distinction, and is not in the class with the others.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The gentleman from Texas the other day objected to a $200 horse bill.

Mr. BLANTON. But finally I let it pass; and that is the reason I ask the gentleman now to withdraw his objection to this bill. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] has done a lot of wonderfully fine work in the House, and he deserves great credit for it.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Upon the statement of the gentleman from Virginia that this officer actually tried to secure insurance on this property but was unable to do so I shall withdraw my objection.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Permit me to say for the further satisfaction of the gentleman that the time the fire occurred this officer was ordered to duty at the scene of the fire and was thereby prevented from rescuing his own property.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Does the gentleman say this man was ordered away at the time?

Mr. MONTAGUE. No; he was ordered by his superior officer to go over to the hospital to take care of the injured. He was required to neglect his own property; he could not save it.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Could he have saved it had he not been ordered away at the time?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes; it is my judgment that he could have.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Lt. James Floyd Terrell, Medical Corps, United States Navy, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,250 in full payment for the value of personal property destroyed by fire January 9, 1922, while situated in building no. 36 at the submarine base, Coco Solo, Canal Zone.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 1, insert the customary attorney's fee proviso, as follows: "Provided, That no part of amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOHN WORTHINGTON

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4445, for the relief of John Worthington.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will not the gentleman withhold his objection and state his reasons for objecting?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I reserve the objection, Mr. Speaker. I regret very much to object to the gentleman's bill, but the claimant asks compensation for an injury occurring in 1903. The evidence indicates that it was due, at least partially, to the negligence of the claimant himself. Regardless of the merits of the case, I do not think we should go back that far.

Mr. MONTAGUE. This claim has been considered two or three times, I may say to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I very reluctantly object.

Mr. MONTAGUE. May I say to the gentleman that the Secretary of War approved this bill.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I think we have to draw the line some place. This claim arises out of an accident over 30 years ago.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think not.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The accident happened in 1903. The man was very painfully injured.

Mr. MONTAGUE. He lost an eye.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I had a similar case where a man lost an eye while working on the Panama Canal in 1908. The committee did not pay me the same regard that they paid the gentleman from Virginia. My bill was reported unfavorably, or, rather, it was not reported at all. They took the position that we should not go so far into the past, and I quite agree with them. There must be an end to these claims some time.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the gentleman wishes to oppose a bar of limitation against a just claim, that is his privilege.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I do it with great reluctance. Mr. Speaker, I object.

VERTNER TATE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4447, for the relief of Vertner Tate.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill is for $2,000, in full settlement of a claim because of a discharge on account of a previous case of intoxication?

Mr. MONTAGUE. No.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. What was the man arrested for?

Mr. MONTAGUE. This man was arrested for stealing money. He was a postal employee. He was indicted.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. And then discharged.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes; he was discharged. He was then restored by President Harding, but he was too old and was separated from the office again. This is his only child. Mr. Taylor, a more honest man I never knew, was charged with this offense. The bill simply asks for the pay he would have gotten as compensation during the time he was off. If you will permit me to say so, the charge of stealing money from the Government killed him.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. This is to compensate the daughter?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. For the support that she would have had?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Was she living with him at the time he was discharged?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes. I do not know her income now, but I am sure it is very slender.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. MONTAGUE. This bill was passed by the Senate once and carried $5,000.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Vertner Tate, daughter and heir of George E. Taylor, deceased, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000, said sum to be in full and final settlement of all claims for salary he would have received had he not been unjustly arrested and dismissed from the Postal Service on May 11, 1911, to the date of his reinstatement on November 16, 1921, by Executive order: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

D. W. TANNER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4533, for the relief of D. W. Tanner.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it was tentatively understood yesterday that we would not call this calendar longer than this hour. That is the reason it was agreed that we adjourn over, to give us a chance to catch up with our office work. I hope that we may adjourn within a short time.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I merely want to point out that the person for the benefit of whom this bill has been introduced has since died. I understand the proponent of the bill will accept an amendment changing the relief to the widow, the payment to be made to her, and with that understanding there is no objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That D. W. Tanner, of Brighton, Mass., retired after 30 years' military service, including service during Indian wars and the World War, be reimbursed in the amount of $125, covering payment for an artificial limb supplied by the Hammer Limb Co., of Boston, Mass.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HOLLISTER: In line 3, after the word "that", insert "the widow of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title of the bill was amended to read: "For the relief of the widow of D. W. Tanner."

FLOOD CONTROL AS A NATIONAL POLICY

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, gentlewomen, and gentlemen of the House, in his message to the joint session of the Congress on January 3, 1934, the President said:

I continue in my conviction that industrial progress and prosperity can only be attained by bringing the purchasing power of that portion of our population which in one form or another is dependent upon agriculture up to a level which will restore a proper balance between every section of the country and every form of work.

In this field, through carefully planned flood control, power development, and land-use policies, in the Tennessee Valley and in other great watersheds, we are seeking the elimination of waste, the removal of poor lands from agriculture, and the encouragement of small local industries, thus furthering this principle of a better-balanced national life.

Later, under the direction of the Public Works Administration a committee was appointed and designated as the "Mississippi Valley committee" to examine and make cost estimates for flood control, improvement for navigation, conservation of national resources, irrigation and reclamation and elimination of marginal lands for improvement to agriculture, power development, and related uses thereof, covering all the streams comprising the entire Mississippi River system and the watersheds affecting the main channel and all tributaries thereto.

Subcommittees were also appointed to assist in collecting data and formulating plans for a comprehensive national policy for the purposes stated above.

Following this, resolutions were passed by the Senate and House of Representatives, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to send to the House of Representatives (and the Senate) a comprehensive plan for the improvement and development of the rivers of the United States, with a view of giving to Congress information for its guidance in legislation which will provide for the maximum amount of flood control, navigation, irrigation, and development of hydroelectric power.

The purpose of this action by the Congress was to extend the comprehensive plan and national policy to all streams in every State in the Union.

After this request of the Congress, the President appointed a committee, consisting of the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Labor, to assist in the completion of the plans to be submitted to the Congress.

This committee, composed of members of the Cabinet, selected regional committees, six in number, which are as follows: Atlantic Coast, Gulf Coast, Great Lakes, West Coast, east Mississippi, and west Mississippi.

This committee from the executive departments and the regional committees have coordinated their work with the Mississippi Valley Committee and its subcommittees.

To assist each committee in forming a basis for procedure in this, the greatest undertaking contemplated by the Congress, members of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army have been assigned.

Under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Army Engineers, by authority granted them under section 10 of the Flood Control Act of May 15, 1928, and House Document No. 308 of the Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, surveys have been made, data collected, and information compiled that may insure speedy undertaking for execution of a major portion of the worthy projects embraced within this national policy. The same Government agency can supply the Congress with the additional information that may be required.

There are now pending before the Committee on Flood Control a number of bills providing for the establishment of certain authorities covering streams tributary to the Mississippi River and affecting the entire watersheds that contribute to floods in the alluvial valley of the Mississippi River. Other measures of like character cover streams and watersheds in practically every section of the United States.

The purpose of these bills, in line with the general policy as previously stated, indicates a Nation-wide call and necessity for well-planned and definite action for the protection of life and property and for the conservation and use of our natural resources.

It is interesting to recall at this time that when the Committee on Flood Control was created in 1916 the plans, methods, and policies now proposed were then advocated. Surveys and investigations were authorized by an act of Congress after the adoption of the resolution creating the Flood Control Committee for the following purposes: Source stream control, the construction of reservoirs for storage of water for irrigation, for improvement to navigation, or for power development.

Since these bills have been referred to the Committee on Flood Control, I wish to call the attention of the Membership of the House to the provisions of section 3 of the first flood control act, that of March 1, 1917:

That all the provisions of existing law relating to examinations and surveys and to works of improvement to rivers and harbors shall apply, so far as applicable, to examinations and surveys and to works of improvement relating to flood control. And all expenditures of funds hereafter appropriated for works and projects relating to flood control shall be made in accordance with and subject to the law governing the disbursement and expenditure of funds appropriated for the improvement of rivers and harbors.

All examinations and surveys of projects relating to flood control shall include a comprehensive study of the watershed or watersheds, and the report thereon, in addition to any other matter upon which a report is required, shall give such data as it may be practicable to secure in regard to (a) the extent and character of the area to be affected by the proposed improvement; (b) the probable effect upon any navigable water or waterway; (c) the possible economical development and utilization of water power; and (d) such other uses as may be properly related to or coordinated with the project.

These provisions in the first flood-control act, passed 18 years ago, indicate in an impressive way the vision and foresight of its sponsors.

Among the leaders responsible for this achievement I may mention the then Speaker of the House of Representatives, Hon. Champ Clark, of Missouri, and the present Speaker, Hon. Henry T. Rainey, of Illinois. Hon. Benjamin G. Humphreys, of Mississippi, was the first chairman of the committee. He was succeeded by Hon. William A. Rodenberg, of Illinois.

The provisions of section 3 of the act referred to give complete authority for the procedure required as a basis for approval of all projects that may come within the scope of the proposed national policy.

It is also gratifying to know that for the major portion of the projects proposed, surveys have been made and the work may proceed as soon as the Congress gives its approval.

I further call attention to the fact that all examinations and surveys relating to flood control are made under the same authority and the expenditures therefor are made in the same manner as applies to river-and-harbor improvements. Many examinations and surveys have been made as authorized by the passage of bills reported by the Committee on Flood Control. There is no conflict between the work of the Committee on Flood Control and the Rivers and Harbors Committee.

By the Flood Control Act of May 15, 1928, the project for flood control in the alluvial valley of the Mississippi River from Cape Girardeau, Mo., to the Gulf of Mexico was adopted and its execution ordered without further local contributions, except rights-of-way for levees and levee foundations on the main stem of the Mississippi River. The State and local interests have complied with this exception.

Amendments to this act are necessary to carry out the intent of Congress in respect to compensation for lands taken and used by the Government for the passage of flood waters in the main channel of the Mississippi River by new locations, set-backs, and changes in levee lines under the flood-control plan, lands or flowage rights over same embraced within spillways and floodways, and also areas adjacent to the main channel of the Mississippi River, the protection of which by levee construction is not deemed practical, when and wherever such lands are used or designed for use in the passage or storage of flood waters in the execution of the adopted project.

The alluvial valley of the Mississippi River, comprising 30,000 square miles, is now used for the passage and storage of the drainage and excess flood waters from 31 States, more than four fifths of the entire area of the United States. The work now in progress will coordinate with whatever may be essential in the comprehensive plan. The work undertaken in the alluvial valley is an emergency project and should proceed as such.

We now have the opportunity to go forward in a field of public works, national in scope, and in which the capitalized benefits to the American people will exceed the costs.

3856. Also, petition of the Brooklyn Catholic Action Council, urging support of the amendment to section 301 of Senate bill 2910; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

3857. By Mr. BAKEWELL: Resolution of employees of the various brokerage firms of Bridgeport, Conn., opposing the passage of the proposed National Securities Exchange Act of 1934; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

3858. By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of the Polish Army Veterans' Association of America, Post No. 102, Brooklyn, N.Y., urging support of the Cannon bill (H.R. 6912); to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

3859. Also, petition of Rev. Christopher T. Molly, pastor of St. Columbkille's Roman Catholic Church, Brooklyn, N.Y., urging support of the amendment to section 301 of Senate bill 2910; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

3860. Also, petition of the Holy Name Society of Holy Family Parish, Brooklyn, N.Y., urging support of the proposed amendment to section 301 of Senate bill 2910; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

3861. Also, petition of Raymond B. Stringham, attorney, New York City, concerning air-mail contracts; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

SENATE

SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1934

(Legislative day of Wednesday, Mar. 28, 1934)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock noon, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On motion of Mr. HARRISON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal for the calendar day Friday, April 13, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is detained from the Senate because of serious illness in his immediate family.

I regret to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is detained from the Senate by illness.

I wish further to announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], and the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1091) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, consider, and render judgment on the claims of Edward F. Goltra against the United States rising out of the taking of certain vessels and unloading apparatus, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 1977. An act for the relief of R. A. Hunsinger;

H.R. 2340. An act for the relief of Russell & Tucker and certain other citizens of the States of Texas, Oklahoma, and Kansas;

H.R. 2669. An act for the relief of Paul I. Morris;

H.R. 3463. An act for the relief of Walter E. Switzer;

H.R. 3502. An act for the relief of the estate of William Bardel;

H.R. 3851. An act for the relief of Henry A. Richmond;

H.R. 4082. An act for the relief of John J. Corcoran;

H.R. 4269. An act for the relief of Edward J. Devine;

H.R. 4274. An act for the relief of Charles A. Brown;

H.R. 4390. An act for the relief of R. W. Dickerson;

H.R. 4444. An act for the relief of Lt. James Floyd Terrell, Medical Corps, United States Navy;

H.R. 4447. An act for the relief of Vertner Tate;

H.R. 4533. An act for the relief of the widow of D. W. Tarner;

H.R. 4541. An act for the relief of George Dacas;

H.R. 4611. An act for the relief of Barney Rieke;

H.R. 4690. An act for the relief of Eula K. Lee;

H.R. 4927. An act for the relief of C. J. Holliday;

H.R. 4929. An act for the relief of J. B. Trotter; and

H.R. 6890. An act for the relief of Mrs. Pleasant Lawrence Parr.

CLAIMS OF EDWARD F. GOLTRA

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1091) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, consider, and render judgment on the claims of Edward F. Goltra against the United States rising out of the taking of certain vessels and unloading apparatus, which was, on page 2, line 6, after the word "apparatus", to insert a comma and the words "but no suit shall be brought after the expiration of 1 year from the effective date of this act."

Mr. STEPHENS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from Walter Beachler, Sr., and Walter Beachler, Jr., of Frontier, Wyo., praying for the passage of the bill (S. 2926) to equalize the bargaining power of employers and employees, to encourage the amicable settlement of disputes between employers and employees, to create a national labor board, and for other purposes, and also other legislation in the interest of labor, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. METCALF presented the memorial of 120 citizens, being employees of the Linwood Lace Works, of Washington, R.I., remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H.R. 8687) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAPPER presented letters in the nature of petitions from officers of Topeka Local Union, No. 96, Brotherhood of Painters and Decorators, of Topeka; Local Union, No. 918, Brotherhod of Carpenters and Joiners of America, of Manhattan; and Local Union, No. 343, Typographical Union, of Fort Scott, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of the so-called "Wagner-Lewis bill", being the bill (S. 2616) to raise revenue by levying an excise tax upon employers, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution adopted at a recent meeting of the Plymouth County (Mass.) League of Sportsmen's Clubs, comprising approximately 2,500 members, protesting against the passage of legislation affecting the use and sale of repeating firearms for sporting purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REGULATION OF STOCK EXCHANGES

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present and ask that there be printed in full in the RECORD and appropriately referred a resolution adopted by the Associated Industries of Massachusetts in opposition to the proposed National Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ASSOCIATED INDUSTRIES OF MASSACHUSETTS,
Boston, April 10, 1934.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: At the regular meeting of the executive committee of the Associated Industries of Massachusetts, held at Boston, April 6, 1934, the following resolution was unanimously adopted, which is respectfully referred to your consideration:

Resolution

Whereas there is now pending before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the United States House of Representatives the proposed National Securities Exchange Act of 1934; and

Whereas in the opinion of the Associated Industries of Massachusetts, an organization of manufacturers with more than 1,200 members employing approximately 300,000 persons, this proposed bill would give to the Federal Government bureaucratic power over private industry and finance far beyond that reasonably necessary for effective regulation or control of stock-exchange activities and practices: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Associated Industries of Massachusetts is emphatically opposed to the passage of the proposed legislation for the reasons that it gives direct control to the Federal Trade Commission over the business of corporations whose securities are listed upon the stock exchange and, through rules and regulations which might be adopted by the Commission, over the business of all corporations whether their securities are listed or not, that the provisions relating to proxies would result in great expense and inconvenience, that the value of unlisted securities would be seriously impaired by the provisions of the bill limiting their use as collateral for loans and for the further reason that the bill as a whole goes a long way toward vesting in the Federal Government the power to regulate and control the sources and uses of all credit and capital in business and industry;

Further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives and to each Senator and Representative from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Very truly yours,

O. L. STONE, General Manager.

WAGNER LABOR BOARD BILL

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present and ask that there be printed in full in the RECORD and appropriately referred a resolution adopted by the Massachusetts Press Association, Inc., in opposition to the passage of the labor disputes bill.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MASSACHUSETTS PRESS ASSOCIATION, INC.,
March 28, 1934.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: At a meeting of the Massachusetts Press Association held in Boston on March 26 the Wagner bill was fully discussed and the following resolution adopted:

"Resolved, That the Massachusetts Press Association go on record as opposed to the provisions of the Wagner bill on which hearings are being held before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor and that the Massachusetts Senators and Representatives be informed of this action on the part of the newspaper publishers of Massachusetts."

Yours very truly,

W. F. TWOMBLY, Secretary.

ADMINISTRATION OF C.W.A. FUNDS AT FORT DEVENS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present and ask that there be printed in full in the RECORD and appropriately referred a resolution adopted by the Lieutenant Laurence S. Ayer Post, No. 794, American Legion, of Fitchburg, Mass.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LIEUTENANT LAURENCE S. AYER POST, No. 794,
Fitchburg, Mass., April 8, 1934.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In response to a feeling of indignation that has been developing throughout this section for some time, and with a hope that the outrageously unfair method of conducting the operations at Fort Devens may be corrected, and that the hundreds of our citizens who are ruthlessly thrown out of work to satisfy owners of labor-saving devices, we, members of the Lieutenant Laurence S. Ayer Post, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States of America, in meeting assembled this 8th day of April, after due and careful deliberation and in possession of ample information, have gone on record as favoring the following resolution:

"Resolved, That our representatives in the Congress of the United States be notified of the injustice that is being practiced upon the people of this vicinity by the administrator of the C.W.A. funds at Fort Devens through the importation of all forms of labor-saving devices, such as steam shovels, heavy-duty trucks, graders, bulldozers, etc., a practice which has been directly responsible for the reduction of man power on one single project from 500 laborers to less than 50 laborers. That the continuance of the policy established by the administrator at Fort Devens will mean a large increase in the public-welfare lists, and that great suffering is already apparent in a great many instances in the group that have been so unfairly discharged; and be it further

"Resolved, That our representatives in Congress be asked to correct this condition immediately, so that our citizens may in some small measure be benefited by the great humanitarian act of our President in allocating this money to this section for the relief of our needy citizens; and be it further

"Resolved, That we request our Senators to have this resolution made a part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and brought to the attention of all Senators in Congress."

Sincerely yours,

JAMES M. SHARP, Commander.
DANIEL A. NOONAN, Adjutant.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WAGNER, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (H.R. 7425) for the inclusion of certain lands in the national forests in the State of Idaho, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 727) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1358) to provide for the improvement of the approach to the Confederate Cemetery, Fayetteville, Ark., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 728) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 2204. An act for the relief of James Johnson (Rept. No. 729); and

S. 2883. An act for the relief of Mike L. Sweeney (Rept. No. 730).

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma (by request):

A bill (S. 3382) to cover the handling of Osage Indian alcoholics and narcotics; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. METCALF:

A bill (S. 3383) for the relief of Rocky Brook Mills Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BROWN:

A bill (S. 3384) granting a pension to Eliza Manzer; and

A bill (S. 3385) granting a pension to Connell Perkins; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 3386) for the relief of Capt. Samuel C. Samuels; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3387) for the relief of Hensley D. Benton; and

A bill (S. 3388) for the relief of Leslie V. Patterson; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

H.R. 1977. An act for the relief of R. A. Hunsinger;

H.R. 2340. An act for the relief of Russell & Tucker and certain other citizens of the States of Texas, Oklahoma, and Kansas;

H.R. 4533. An act for the relief of the widow of D. W. Tanner;

H.R. 4541. An act for the relief of George Dacas;

H.R. 4611. An act for the relief of Barney Rieke;

H.R. 4690. An act for the relief of Eula K. Lee;

H.R. 4927. An act for the relief of C. J. Holliday;

H.R. 4929. An act for the relief of J. B. Trotter; and

H.R. 6890. An act for the relief of Mrs. Pleasant Lawrence Parr.

EDUCATION AND CRIME—ADDRESS BY SENATOR COPELAND

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] recently delivered in Ohio two notable addresses on the subject of Education and Crime. These are part of an active campaign to combat juvenile delinquency and to stimulate educational institutions to give greater emphasis to character and behavior rather than to classroom achievement.

The first of these addresses was delivered before the National Education Association at Cleveland on March 8 and has been printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, commencing at page 3963.

I now ask unanimous consent that the address by the Senator from New York delivered before the Citizens' Conference on the Crisis in Education, in cooperation with Ohio State University, at Memorial Hall, Columbus, Ohio, on April 6, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EDUCATION AND CRIME

Ladies and gentlemen, good morning, this meeting is significant, coming as it does at the time of a great crisis in education. And it is timely because the Nation is now in the midst of many investigations and studies. We are striving, for example, to find the causes for crime and seeking the remedies for its cure. I deeply appreciate the opportunity of being with you today, because it is my desire to give you some of our experiences and to ask for your advice. We believe that the citizens of the United States can help and will cooperate with our educational institutions in the great responsibility we are placing upon them.

Juvenile delinquency is a million times more dangerous to our Nation than the combined effort of all the roving criminals sought after by the police. In fact, criminology teaches that the career of a hardened criminal of today may be traced back to acts in a youth that was misdirected or had no direction at all.

How can we prevent the early development of these antisocial tendencies? This is the first question I want to put before you.

Bear in mind that every time a "Dillinger" is captured or killed, it has cost society thousands of dollars and days of fear. While we are striving to deal with one gangster, a thousand criminals are in the making. We pluck leaves from the tree of crime when we should put the axe to the root. As I see it, one of the most vital means of combating this growing evil is through the organized effort of the public schools and the united cooperation of the citizens of our Nation by giving our educational agencies their whole-hearted support. Teachers have it in their hands, not only to deepen the culture of our people, but also to elevate the standard of national righteousness.

Is this a reason for giving them our support? Is it worth while? Can we do it? How can we do it? I shall leave that for you to answer.

CRIME AND ANTISOCIAL PRACTICES

Last year a Senate subcommittee, of which I have the honor to be chairman, began an investigation of so-called "rackets." It soon became evident that the whole problem of crime was involved in one investigation. That led the committee at once into a field whose boundaries are shifting and indistinct.

In the legal sense, crime is an offense against the law, but the law lags behind the control of practices that are not in harmony with the best interests of society. What we know as crime is really the recognition of the symptoms of social malpractices that are deeply rooted in wide-spread antisocial attitudes. A study of symptoms is an essential first step, and a treatment of those symptoms which may give temporary relief. But in the last analysis, a permanent cure for crime can be effected only by treating and removing its underlying causes.

In the course of our investigations, we called in outstanding men of long experience in dealing with crime and criminals to testify at a series of hearings. Many suggestions were offered looking toward improvement in law-enforcement procedures and in the treatment of offenders against the law. The gist of these suggestions is incorporated in some 20-odd bills now pending in Congress. By this legislation we hope to curb the activities of gangsters and racketeers, and to give the public more adequate protection against their depredations.

MONEY COST OF CRIME

It is probable that few of us realize the extent of those depredations. In terms of money, conservative estimates indicate that crime costs this country about $13,000,000,000 a year. That is 25 cents out of every dollar of our national income—$400 a second, day and night. One year of crime would pay the salary of the President of the United States for 17,000 years; one year of crime would pay the total expenses of our National Government, the cost of public education throughout the country, and leave more than enough to cover the war debts owing to the United States—debts that have threatened the economic stability of the world.

A cut of 6 percent in our annual tribute to crime would equal the amount required to give every teacher in this country an increase in salary of $1,000 a year. Since one third of our teachers, as pointed out in your resolutions, receive less than the sum specified in N.R.A. codes for unskilled labor, an increase of $1,000 would go far toward giving teachers that feeling of economic security which is so essential to effective service in any walk of life.

An additional cut of 4 percent would be equal to the amount required to add 20 percent to our present annual budget for public schools. That 20-percent increase would more than restore the cuts in school budgets suffered during the depression—cuts which have so reduced the resources of the schools that three and one half million children have been deprived of the opportunity to go to school.

It is said that 90 percent of crime can be traced to 10 percent of our area. A reduction of another 10 percent in our crime bill would enable communities to replace crime-breeding tenements and shacks with 300,000 five-room houses yearly.

Cut crime 20 percent and teachers can be paid decent salaries, 3,500,000 children can go back to school, and 300,000 families can move out of depressing hovels into sanitary, sun-lit homes. Need I ask you if that is worth while?

CURRENT MALADJUSTMENTS

The money cost of crime is a terrific burden which affects the well-being of every home in the country. But that cost, staggering as it is, fades into insignificance in comparison with the social cost of antisocial practices that permeate our whole social fabric—costs in human suffering, in wasted lives, in sordid ideals, and in vain pursuits. Many of those practices cannot be reached by legislation.

Having in mind that nothing short of a Nation-wide campaign could clear the moral atmosphere, a digest of the hearings was prepared and is being distributed widely. It would give you fresh courage, as it has given me renewed inspiration to carry on, if you could read the high-minded and broad-visioned contributions we have received in response to our request for suggestions and help. Leaders in business, government, education, and social-welfare activities have taken time out of their busy days to write long letters which are a rich mine of pertinent facts, of sane policies, and of specifications for practical procedures. The underlying harmony of spirit displayed in these letters shows unmistakably that our people are sane and sound in heart. I wish I could bring to you the spirit, as well as the content, of the testimony offered at the hearings and of the letters we have received relative to those hearings. The best I can do, however, is to give you a brief statement of certain significant trends of thought which our investigations have revealed.

INDIVIDUALISTIC CODES AND SOCIAL MACHINERY

Not so very long ago Horace Greeley said, "Go West, young man." There our people found ample release for their energies, and there they built their homes. As the frontier lands disappeared we displayed a marked degree of ingenuity and vision in building up a material equipment that gave employment to our ever-increasing millions. In our work life we abandoned the individualistic self-sufficiency of the pioneer and committed our fortunes and our lives to a complex fabric of interdependent relations. But with all our forehandedness in devising social machinery to supplant pioneer methods, we made the fatal blunder of failing to develop social codes of conduct to supplant the individualistic codes of the frontier.

Our social machinery, based upon division of labor and exchange of the products of specialized skill and knowledge, can function effectively only in an atmosphere of mutual confidence and cooperation. On the other hand, our individualistic codes of conduct, survivals from pioneer days when men engaged in a hand-to-hand conflict with nature in their struggles to conquer a continent, place the stamp of approval upon each one employing all his cunning and influence to get as much for himself as he can. In a word, our social machinery demands that we all pull together; our individualistic codes approve of each citizen feathering his own nest. The two won't mix.

This maladjustment between our individualistic codes and our social machinery lies at the grass roots of our difficulties today. There must be a readjustment that will bring our codes of conduct into harmony with the social machinery by means of which our people make a living and live a life.

MECHANICAL READJUSTMENTS

When a difficult situation arises, we, as a people, true to the mechanical spirit of the age, look first for mechanical readjustments. In the economic field labor unions and employers' associations busy themselves with setting up rules to regulate their relations. In the political field we search for ways to alter the machinery of government, in the hope that thereby we may so regulate affairs that we can go about our business without concerning ourselves further about them. We proceed with great diligence to pass laws to meet situations as they arise, piling up statutes upon statutes, overlapping, conflicting, and contradictory, until even the most astute of lawyers are nonplussed in their attempts to wend their way through the intricate mazes of legal enactments and judicial decisions.

All these mechanical arrangements—economic, political, and legal—by means of agreements, rules, regulations, laws, constitutional amendments, codifications, and simplifications of law-enforcement procedures—all these are useful and indeed necessary to meet critical situations, but they are totally inadequate to effect a permanent change in the minds and hearts of men. Permanent improvement will be delayed until men, abandoning the code of the jungle, accept in their hearts a common social code of fair dealing and mutual helpfulness. This change is to be secured only through a long-range program of education that functions in the day-by-day life of the individual and of the community.

EDUCATIONAL READJUSTMENTS

A readjustment through education involves a thorough resurvey of our educational aims and practices. Schools and colleges we have had with us these many years. No people in the world have been so thoroughly and persistently beschooled as have the people of these United States. With all our efforts to develop an enlightened citizenry, however, we find ourselves today facing a situation of insecurity and unrest such as our fathers were never called upon to face. We point with pride to our large-scale enterprises in production, transportation, commerce, and finance, and are prone to attribute our achievements in large measure to our system of free public schools.

I may say to you that there is evidence, in the testimony at the hearings of my committee and in our correspondence, a strong disposition to place a large share of responsibility upon the schools for having failed to develop the right kind of social attitudes among our people. We are told that this failure has resulted in a horde of antisocial practices which bid fair, if unchecked, to wreck the social machinery we have built up with such care and of which we are so justly proud.

INDIVIDUAL DIFFERENCES IN APTITUDES

One of the obvious facts of life today is the wide range of differences between individuals. These differences have been accentuated through the extensive development of division of labor, and, at the same time, division of labor has itself been further promoted by an ever-increasing array of individual differences. In the industrial world, these differences are accepted as a matter of course, and men are graded and placed largely in accord with their individual aptitudes and skill.

To a layman, the schools seem to present an entirely different picture. A recent bulletin of the Bureau of Education reports that library shelves are loaded with books on individual differences, and on the need for taking these differences into consideration in the organization of curricula and in the conduct of instruction. Educators have been reading and talking about individual differences for 20 years or more, but it seems that the schools have done next to nothing about it. From all reports they still grind pupils through prescriptive curricula, more or less regardless of individual interests, aptitudes, or abilities. Chief Justice Holmes once said that the greatest inequality is to give equal treatment to unequals. It appears that schools measure success or failure in terms of achievement in various prescribed subjects of instruction—subjects prescribed with little or no reference to the needs and capacities of individual children. With all this equal treatment of unequals so far as aptitudes are concerned—the one area in which equal treatment is inappropriate and in which individualization should be the paramount consideration—they leave largely to chance experience and contacts. I refer to the matter of developing codes of conduct in harmony with the problems and responsibilities of the day.

SOCIAL CODES

It is trite to say that people differ in aptitudes, and that both the individual and society are best served when each individual finds opportunity, in school and out of school, to do the socially useful things that he can do best. This is quite another matter, however, from saying that each one should be left free to conduct himself as he pleases regardless of others.

Charles Lamb said that he "prayed night and morning for some all-absorbing purpose to blaze in his sky like a midnight sun." That is the outstanding need of our people today. But it is not enough that the purpose be all-absorbing. It must be a common purpose that unifies the thought and action of all the people and a purpose that makes for national survival. Develop individual aptitudes, by all means, but it is equally important to develop a common code of conduct which insures that all will benefit from the special aptitudes of each. Can the schools do that?

Medical schools are an outstanding example of reasonable success in impressing a common code of ethics in medical practice. It may not be the best code possible, but the medical profession demonstrates that codes of conduct are not only desirable, but that they can be established and reasonably well followed.

Unfortunately the curricula of medical schools do not seem to give adequate consideration to individual aptitudes. The student who lacks the ability or the means to qualify as an M.D., but who is attracted to the medical field, finds no definite provisions made for him to qualify for some intermediate position. He must go the full route or fail. This is a waste of human resources which could be avoided if every school undertook to make something of everyone admitted, and exercise due vigilance in admitting only those for whom they could make provision.

Training for the law, for business, for engineering, for agriculture, for the trades, and for all other human occupations, should involve adequate consideration for individual aptitudes on the one hand, and for common codes of conduct on the other.

This means, of course, there must be socialized individual instruction. The individual side has to do primarily with occupational preferences and aptitudes. The socialized side has to do with standards of conduct in human relations regardless of preferences or aptitudes.

This brings us back to the problem of correcting, through education, the lack of harmony between our social machinery and our codes of conduct. We must have a regeneration of education before we can have a readjustment through education.

SCHOOL CURRICULA

School curricula must be revised. Probably some of the courses should be eliminated, and the number of students in other courses limited to those who show special interest in them, or need for them. It may be found desirable to extend materially opportunities for work in occupational and related subjects in order to minister to the interests and needs of boys and girls who are now suffering the ignominy of failure in school, or who are out of school because of the irksomeness of school work.

Also, there is a gap between the time of leaving the public schools and the time when profitable employment can be secured. This gap is not to be filled by simply extending required school attendance to 18 or 19 years of age. It can be filled effectively only by offering opportunities for training that meet the interests and needs of those it is hoped to reach. Not more education in matters that we grown-ups think may be useful sometime, but better education in matters that boys and girls recognize as being useful to them here and now is the kind of education that will hold them in school and set them definitely on the road toward good citizenship. There is much to be said in favor of the policy of the old pioneer schoolmaster who said his way was "to begin with 'em where th're at and take 'em where they aint."

MOTIVATION AND GUIDANCE

This is not to be taken to mean that the blind and undirected preferences of children are to be accepted as indicating what is most useful to them here and now. They should not be left to themselves to choose what they shall do in school, no more than they should be left to themselves to choose what they shall eat. Hectoring or punishment in either case, however, is likely to be futile and harmful. No small part of the responsibility of parent or teacher is to mold and direct preferences, so that children accept them as their own. This is a matter of motivation and guidance in which no two children should be treated alike. It is as much a part of instruction to stimulate and guide the likings of children as it is to develop their skill and knowledge.

Morrison, I think it was, doubtless had this in mind when he said that teachers must learn their children before they can presume to teach them. The need for guidance has been preached by school men for, lo, these many years. They say teachers should devote half their time to a study of their pupils. I ask you, should they? and do they?

RECORDS OF ACHIEVEMENT AND OF BEHAVIOR

Motivation and guidance imply individual treatment. I believe you will agree with me that casual impressions and clever inferences afford a very inadequate basis for the treatment of individual cases. No competent physician would rely upon such fragile data in treating his patients.

When I was a boy grades were recorded and added up with a diligence worthy of a better cause, and a fraction of a percent might make the difference between passing or failing. A change for the better in grading practices is taking place, I am told. Dr. Ben Wood, of Columbia, has urged that grades based upon opinion be supplanted by grades based upon objective tests, the results of which are as plain to the pupil as they are to the teacher. Judging from the number and variety of tests published, they must be used extensively. As I understand Doctor Wood, however, the use of tests and records for purposes of detecting success or failure is the least significant feature about them. He proposes cumulative records of achievement, based on objective tests, which are to be used by the teacher continuously throughout the school career of the child as a means for determining the direction of his aptitudes and abilities. This is a meager statement of the utility of achievement records as a first aid in motivation and guidance, but, as a physician, it appeals to me as a matter of prime importance.

In the economy of life attitudes are as significant as aptitudes, and cumulative behavior records should be maintained with the same care that teachers now give to achievement records. When a student who is unreliable or overaggressive or opinionated is confronted with a series of recurrent incidents, extending over a period of time incident to revealing such traits, he can scarcely question the cumulative evidence. Each instance in itself may be trivial, and the teacher who placed emphasis upon an isolated instance would appear petty and carping. When seen together, however, the instances recorded carry a cumulative weight of evidence that is convincing, even to the individual who is himself involved. Cumulative behavior records also serve as a medium for recording desirable traits, and thus give a line both to teacher and pupil on strong points to be cultivated, as well as on our weaknesses to be curbed.

TEACHER TRAINING

These suggested changes in curricula content and in teaching practices indicate a profound shift in attention from the subject matter of instruction to aptitudes and attitudes—from book learning to personal efficiency and social conduct. To provide for such a desirable shift in attention the materials of instruction must be revised, provision for motivation and guidance must be made, and plans and specifications for achievement and behavior records must be formulated. This is a gigantic task which will require the cooperation and coordination of all the expert talent available for research, experimentation, demonstration, and publicity.

All this will be futile, however, no matter how well done, if teachers in the front line of attack cannot or will not apply it effectively. A teacher-training program, in complete harmony with the aims and methods of the proposed "new deal" in education, must be set up and maintained with all the insight and skill that we can muster. It took us several decades to make the transition from pioneer self-sufficiency to present-day interdependence in our economic, political, and social life. We cannot expect to revamp our schools overnight, nor should we attempt to do so. What we must look for is growth, not violent transformation. We must have an orderly change of front all along the line, and the general public must understand the importance of that change and approve it, because the schools are helpless to do what needs to be done without their moral and financial support.

PUBLIC SUPPORT

Instruction directed toward individual aptitudes will involve material increases in school-operating budgets. You need no reminder that this additional support will necessitate a marked change in the attitude of the public toward the schools. Adequate financial support is vital, but it is no more vital than intelligent cooperation and moral support. At present the schools are largely stopped from discussing current social problems that cut across the grain of current social practices. Questions relating to the police and politics, to the spoils system in politics, or to the "rigging" of the market are taboo. Any attempts to build up social codes among pupils that will function in active life and that will enable them to meet their civic duties with intelligence as well as with good intents, are doomed to attain meager results so long as pupils are permitted to discuss in their classes only those topics that make no vital differences to anybody.

On the other hand, the public is entirely justified in questioning the competence of teachers to guide such instruction. The answer seems to be found in so training teachers that they will be recognized as competent, in placing in their hands instruction materials derived from such responsible sources that their validity cannot be challenged by any fair-minded standards, and in conducting a Nation-wide program of adult education that will bring the people at large to a realization of the need for supplanting our individualistic codes of conduct with social codes that make for harmony in our human relations. I realize that this is a large order, but the main point is not the size of the order. The real questions are these: Is it worth while? can we do it? and how?

Probably the most effective way to attack the problems of curricula revisions, teacher training, and adult education is to set up and conduct demonstrations of what can be done by intelligent and cooperative efforts. We might as well try to sweep back the ocean with a toothbrush as to attempt a Nation-wide campaign along the whole educational and community fronts. Even if we knew what were best to do and how best to do it, such a task would be beyond the capacity of the talent now available. On the other hand, a series of demonstrations, planned and conducted by groups of experts, and published with discretion, would seem to be the type of procedure that would be effective in modifying school practice and in enlisting the support of the public.

The Rochester Athenaeum and Mechanics Institute, under the leadership of President Randall and the expert guidance of Drs. Charters and Tyler of this great university, has been engaged for several years in developing programs and methods of instruction based squarely upon individual aptitudes and social attitudes. In a very real sense it is a community institution, its services functioning in the day-by-day life of the people of Rochester. Many other institutions are making great advances over current practice in education. I cite the Rochester Athenaeum here because it has attracted Nation-wide attention, because I have first-hand knowledge of what they are doing, and because I have derived from those connected with that institution substantial justification for the viewpoint I have revealed to you today.

We have set up in Washington, in connection with our crime investigation committee, an education and law conference. The services of various groups of experts will be requested from time to time to work out for the conference various problems and projects as they arise. It is not the intent of the conference to build up a large permanent organization but to maintain a mobile organization whose personnel shifts continuously as the problems and projects in hand change.

We are now engaged in developing in the schools of Washington a demonstration which we hope will have a Nation-wide significance as an exemplification of what can be done by coordinate, cooperative efforts. Drs. Charters and Tyler, with other well-known educators, are participating actively in the leadership of this demonstration along lines similar to their activities at the Rochester Athenaeum.

There is immediate need for a State-wide demonstration to show what can be done in the way of vitalizing and harmonizing educational activities in a large administrative unit. In view of the fact that Ohio State University has on its staff a group of men who have already demonstrated their competence in educational research and in the reorganization of teaching practices, it would seem to me peculiarly appropriate for this institution to undertake the development of a program for the State-wide revitalization of the schools of Ohio. I am fully aware of the fact that many other institutions in this country are fully competent to render a similar service. I hope that they, too, will take seriously to heart the betterment of our educational practices. More power to them if they do. But today I am laying this opportunity on the doorstep of Ohio State University because I think you ought to do it, because I believe you can do it, and because I know that President Rightmire and his associates want to do it.

The education and law conference will cooperate with you as fully as possible. In return we ask your active participation in the work of the conference. Let us go forward together to end juvenile delinquency by supporting the schools.

GOLD AND SILVER

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask unanimous consent to have placed in the RECORD an article entitled "Gold and Silver" appearing in a Colorado newspaper.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Holy Cross Trail, Red Cliff, Colo., Mar. 23, 1934]

GOLD AND SILVER

By O. W. Daggett

When Hoover was making his campaign speeches for reelection, he stressed the honest dollar and the gold standard. We heard his Des Moines talk over the radio. It was so convincing that President Roosevelt not only followed his logic, but has gone not only one point but a dozen points better, and if Congress and the Senate gives him rope enough he will hang himself.

By his edict he has raised the price of the world's gold from $20 to $35 per ounce, or a 75-percent raise. We will wager that England, Russia, and other gold-producing nations are laughing up their sleeve the way they have put it over on Franklin and Eleanor.

England's possessions produce three fourths of the world's production of gold. South Africa alone produced last year at the old price of $20.67 an ounce $200,000,000 of the precious yellow metal, more than one half of the world's supply. At the new price this same gold is worth $350,000,000. Mining in South Africa is very much the same as in the Black Hills. At the Homestake Mine the price of their stock advanced steadily during the depression and is still steadily advancing, although they are mining at a depth of nearly 5,000 feet. At the Homestake Mine they pay their labor good wages.

The gold output of the United States, including Alaska, was around $60,000,000 last year. In South Africa there are employed in the gold mines 170,000 cheap native laborers. This is as many laborers as is employed in the United States in all kinds of mining, not including coal. In the Transvaal they are mining and milling ores of $10 value and over, leaving millions and millions of tons of what was low-grade ore on the dumps and in their workings.

President Roosevelt's boosting the world's price of gold will enable the South African mine owners to mill a greater tonnage at a lesser cost per ton and a profitable price on their low-grade ore. Under such a stimulation it is only natural that their output in gold ounces will be doubled or trebled. Their low-grade ores are unlimited. Then with a doubling of price the gold output of South Africa should reach over a billion of dollars of gold. South Africa alone will produce more ounces of gold per year than we produce ounces of silver per year in Colorado, which last year was under 2,000,000 ounces.

We have no large bodies of silver ore in America. Ordinarily for centuries the production of gold and silver has been about 15 to 1 in ounces. With the present turn of affairs, in a few years the ratio will be reversed. We have no strictly silver mines in the United States. At one time we had a silver mine at Aspen, one or two in Leadville, a wonder silver mine in California, a silver chimney of ore in the upper end of the San Luis Valley. But our silver mines with depth all turned to complex ores in combination with copper, zinc, and lead. Silver now is nothing more than a byproduct, with its output limited by the demand for copper, zinc, and lead, the markets for which at present are depressed.

Leadville, the greatest silver-mining camp of history, in the past 55 years has produced about $550,000,000 of gold and silver, one third of which has been gold; about $350,000,000 silver, most of the production being at the rate of $1.29 per ounce in an early date when the production was the heaviest. And at the present gold prices miners will turn their attention to gold mining instead of silver mining, and we are playing the goat advancing the price of foreign gold and taking all that is offered.

Suppose, instead of doubling the price of gold for the benefit of the nations of Europe, where they have a surplus of many things, and can supply themselves—suppose that Franklin D. had doubled the price of the world's silver. We could have taken a billion dollars or two of silver from the Orient and given them in exchange many articles that we manufacture that they need, and cannot produce.

Franklin D.'s "brain trust" has just put him in the same predicament on the gold and silver situation as his Army and Navy advisors put him in on our air-mail flying, only his money s[illegible] will be a Nation-wide disaster.

CARRY ON!

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in full in the RECORD a letter written by the late James Kerney, editor and publisher of the Trenton (N.J.) Times, to his three sons.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Trenton (N.J.) Times, Monday, Apr. 9, 1934]

CARRY ON!

(The following letter was written by Judge Kerney to his three sons:)

MY DEAR SONS: I am naturally much interested in the kind of things you write about. And yet I wonder if any of you realize the magnitude of the undertaking of preparing yourselves for the job of newspaper running. It is the most fascinating game of them all, and it is also the most exacting. It requires not only enormous patience, but great human understanding and endless industry if it is to be done right.

First, there is the making of the paper itself; the news and editorial departments. They require courage at the right time and charity at all times. You are always dealing with frail human nature, and your work is spread before the critical eye of the public every day. There is no place to hide. You are always on parade. There is entirely too much disregard in most newspaper offices for the poor and uninfluential. They are the folks who most need generous consideration, and at the same time the duty of the paper must ever be kept in mind.

That duty, first of all, is to give the public the actual news of what is happening, impartially and without bias. No other calling, not even the church, has a greater obligation—or, if it has, meets it with such courage. Back of the news should be the reputation of someone for outstanding honesty and courage to do the right, but to do it fairly and with a due regard for human weakness. There is no human perfection, and newspaper judgment is not always right. But it is the clear duty of the newspaper man to make an honest endeavor to do the right as God gives him to see the right.

The editorial end is the second line, and there not only fearlessness but a decent regard for others is essential. What is the square thing and what is the best thing for the community should ever be uppermost in the mind of the editorial director.

And when you have made a good newspaper, and have kept in mind all that is owing to the community, in the way of leadership and generous giving to things that make for a better place, comes the problem of mechanical production. That can only be acquired by patient study and close attention to details.

When you have the product ready, the next step is to get it distributed—circulation. That, too, needs the closest attention, in order that every possible reader may be garnered. Of what use is it to produce a newspaper, with lots of character behind it, if you are not going to have the widest distribution?

Lastly comes the gathering of the advertising, which, too, must be done with a decent regard for the merchants and others with whom you are dealing. They are apt to think only in terms of dollars, which is natural, as they have to pay the freight. Always remember that they are entitled to consideration, and try to put yourselves in their shoes. They struggled hard to make financial headway and they have a right to feel that everything should be done to see that they get their money's worth. My policy with them has always been that, unless they find advertising with us profitable, we do not want their business; we are not benefice monks. Where they can be properly favored I am for doing it; in that way I have always gotten along well with them. They know I am anxious for them to succeed, because, unless we can help make a fine city, where labor is well paid and people are comfortable and happy, we have failed in our job.

Always keep in mind that in our business, which covers every line of human endeavor, everything is grist to the old mill. If you get a chance to spend a night on a yacht, grab it; but don't get the yacht habit, which is useless. The experience of being on a yacht will some day come in good stead. The best experience I ever had was working as a boy in a grocery store. We not only had to know all about everything from soda crackers to mackerel but we also had to learn to be patient and polite to the buyer, no matter how humble or how finicky. Then I worked in a shipping office, where we had to be just as polite to a steerage prospect as to the purchaser of the suite de luxe. We needed them all to fill the ships. We need them all to fill the newspapers.

Always keep simple; never get "high-hat"; a pleasant word costs nothing and good manners cannot be put on for state occasions. If you are not polite to the waitress, you will sometimes fail to be polite to the hostess. And, as Kipling remarked, they are all alike under the skin. Industry and good manners are the best of all virtues.

Keep a sense of humor and be kind to everybody. Don't develop superior traits, even if you feel you are superior. The smartest folks I have known have been the simplest; those who understood that we were living in a dumb world, but made the best of it. Be affable to "damphools" who think they are important; you never can tell where and when they can do you a good turn. Nobody is really of much importance, because the whole life of the greatest man is brief. Always keep in mind that life is too short for you to be small.

Our office has sometimes been impatient with me because I happened in the newsroom when some poor, hard-driven soul was pleading to keep a line out of the paper about her boy—never a bad boy, mind you—but it would embarrass her in the neighborhood if the paper printed the fact that Johnny was drunk and had been given 10 days on the farm or fined $3. What difference does it make if poor Johnny, working as a truckman, did get tight and was picked up by a cop? They are the kind of poor devils who should have a little charity shown to them. The more kind things you do, the happier you will be. The real business of a newspaper is protecting the public from outrages, from politicians, and rich high-binders, who live as smug leaders of the community while they lift your watch.

Let me reiterate: Every contact you make in life will some day come in handy in a profession that deals with every phase of life. Sometimes a policeman will give you one of your best beats; other times it may come from a judge; if you are always polite, you will find yourselves cashing in along lines you little dreamed of. I recall one election night in the old True American office. They had all the returns complete save only Union County. Savory, who was a great news editor, was tearing his hair as the press hour approached. I had been working like a beaver all night on local tables and he finally appealed to me to know if there wasn't some way I could get the finals from Union County. I went to the telephone and called a number in Elizabeth, and, after a few pleasant words, asked the other end to dig up the missing districts. "All right, Jimmy", said the voice and in 20 minutes he called back with everything complete. When Savory heard me say, "Good night, Governor, I'll give you a pleasant mention in the paper some day for this", he almost dropped dead. Then he came to and asked, "Who got these for you?" And I told him my friend, Governor Voorhees. He almost wept with joy. Then I informed him that I had a working understanding with the Governor, by which I went to the statehouse early every morning and opened all his personal mail, so that I might get a few early wire stories for the Newark News to buy bread for my babies. He was flabbergasted. So make every contact you can, high or low; life is the great thing after all.

Affectionately,

FATHER.

It is our aim to follow the principles set forth in the above letter.

RELIEF OF DEBTORS IN BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that House bill 5884 may be made the unfinished business of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that House bill 5884 be made the unfinished business of the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Let the bill be reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H.R. 5884) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire how long will it take to dispose of that bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the bill is not to be considered at the moment, but that the desire is to make it the unfinished business. Then the Chair expects to recognize the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] to take up the conference report, if that shall be agreeable to the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I inquire who offered the bill and what is the nature of the request?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the request is to make the unfinished business the so-called "bankruptcy bill", which has been reported unanimously from the Committee on the Judiciary, and is in charge of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS].

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator from Oregon will yield for a moment——

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. REED. I have examined the bill; I do not believe it is going to take very long to pass it, and I hope that the motion of the Senator from Indiana will be agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, as I understand, the Senator from Indiana intends only to have the bill made the unfinished business, then to let the conference report come up, following which it is desired to have the bankruptcy bill go over until the next meeting of the Senate.

Mr. REED. That, I think, is the understanding.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not prepared to give my consent until I have a further understanding regarding the program which I thought we had agreed upon yesterday, namely, that today the Senate would meet, take up the conference report on the Bankhead bill make the air mail bill the unfinished business, and recess until Tuesday. If there is any change in the program, I should like to know about it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that it is not proposed to insist upon the consideration of the bankruptcy bill but merely to make it the unfinished business; that then the conference report on the Bankhead bill shall come up, and then, when the consideration of the conference report shall have been concluded, to recess over until Tuesday.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

Mr. HARRISON. Granting the request of the Senator from Indiana will not interfere, I am quite sure, with the aviation bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, while the leaders are discussing as to what is going to happen, and what bill is coming up next, I want to call their attention to the joint resolution proposing to amend the Constitution, which is now on the calendar, a resolution proposing to do away with the Electoral College. I have talked several times with the leader of the majority, who is detained on account of illness in his family, about securing consideration for that joint resolution. I do not want to interfere with any program that may have been agreed upon by the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Oregon; but I should like to say that, while it is my desire to cooperate to the fullest extent, the joint resolution ought to be taken up—and I have such an understanding—at some time and considered. It ought not to be done just on the eve of final adjournment because, of course, it has to be passed by the House.

Mr. HARRISON. I am sure the Senator will have ample time to call up the joint resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not want to agree in advance on what we are going to take up from day to day because I think the joint resolution, which was reported a long time ago by the Judiciary Committee, is entitled to consideration somewhere in the program.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Senator is right. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] does not intend to proceed with his measure today, but merely to have it made the unfinished business.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that, but I also had the impression that there is an understanding that after the bill which the Senator from Indiana has in charge shall have been disposed of another measure is going to be interjected and made the unfinished business of the Senate. I do not want to agree to any such understanding as that.

Mr. HARRISON. There is no unanimous-consent request relating to that.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I understand if the bill in charge of the Senator from Indiana shall be made the unfinished business it will not come before the Senate until 2 o'clock, so we will have the morning hour to devote to the other questions which may properly come before the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. I should not object to taking up my joint resolution in the morning hour if we had one, but we are not having a morning hour very often. I should dislike to depend on the morning hour for consideration of the joint resolution because there may be a great deal of discussion of it, and it could not be disposed of that easily.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask Senators on either side of the Chamber who have to do with arranging the program if we cannot have a calendar day without the limitation of unanimous consent?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, would it not be satisfactory to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], when we get through with our business today, to adjourn over until another day and then have a morning hour?

Mr. BORAH. We can have a morning hour in that way, but there are some bills on the calendar which cannot be passed in the morning hour. Why may we not have a calendar day so as to get through with the bills on the calendar? If many of the bills are to become laws, they must be passed through the Senate pretty soon, because they have to pass the House before they can become laws. Is it not possible to have a day for the consideration of the calendar?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the days on which we have considered bills on the calendar have been devoted to bills to which no objection was interposed. I thought the Senator wanted a morning hour so he could move to take up some bill on the calendar which would, of course, have to give way to the unfinished business when the hour of 2 o'clock arrived. Now, I understand the Senator from Idaho wants an entire day to be devoted to a call of the calendar. If the Senator has a bill he desires considered, I suggest that at some appropriate time he move to consider it and make it the unfinished business.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; and I know just how far I would get with such a motion. If we make the bill of the Senator from Indiana the unfinished business and I should move to take up another bill, and the motion were agreed to and the bill was under discussion at 2 o'clock, that would not give it precedence over the bill of the Senator from Indiana, would it?

Mr. McNARY. No.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think we will take very long with the bill of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BORAH. Then we can have a morning hour on Tuesday?

Mr. HARRISON. When we conclude our business today it is my intention to ask for an adjournment until Tuesday, and that will give us a morning hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 5884) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with amendments.

REGULATION OF THE COTTON INDUSTRY—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the bill (H.R. 8402) to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President laid before the Senate the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8402) to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8402) to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 5, 7, 8, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 6, 9, 10, and 19, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert a comma and the following: "but if the President finds that the economic emergency in cotton production and marketing will continue or is likely to continue to exist so that the application of this act with respect to the crop year 1935–36 is imperative in order to carry out the policy declared in section 1, he shall so proclaim, and this act shall be effective with respect to the crop year 1935–36. If at any time prior to the end of the crop year 1935–36, the President finds that the economic emergency in cotton production and marketing has ceased to exist, he shall so proclaim, and no tax under this act shall be levied with respect to cotton harvested after the effective date of such proclamation"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert a comma and the following: "for the crop year 1935–36, if the provisions of this act are effective for such crop year, that two thirds of the persons who have the legal or equitable right as owner, tenant, share cropper, or otherwise to produce cotton on any cotton farm, or part thereof, in the United States for such crop year"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "$1,000, or by imprisonment for not exceeding 6 months, or both"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert:

"SEC. 24. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to develop new and extended uses for cotton, and for such purpose there is authorized to be made available to the Secretary not to exceed $500,000 out of the funds available to him under section 12 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, when this bill was before the Senate I received numerous telegrams calling attention to the fact that if the bill passed with a 5-year limitation, so far as the average is concerned, it would place my State sixth in the production of cotton, and if a 10-year average was relied upon my State could be third or fourth in the production of cotton.

When the bill came before the Senate an amendment was submitted striking out the 5-year average and providing for a 10-year average, and the Senate adopted the amendment. The conferees have stricken out the Senate amendment and referred the bill back to the 5-year average. I desire to take the time of the Senate to make clear the record upon which I supported the 10-year average.

I am opposed to striking out the 10-year average and going back to the 5-year average. What applies to Oklahoma applies likewise to all the newer cotton States—California, Arizona, New Mexico, and some of the other States which have begun producing cotton in the last few years.

I read to the Senate a telegram received on March 27 from Clarence Roberts, editor of a farm journal in my State:

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., March 27, 1934.

Senator J. ELMER THOMAS,
Senate Office Building:

Sending you air-mail figures showing rank discrimination against Oklahoma in pending Bankhead bill. Five-year, instead of 10-year, average reduces amount of cotton we can produce tax free by 20 percent. To prevent discrimination bill should be amended to include 10-year-average base.

CLARENCE ROBERTS.

The average was changed in the Senate to a 10-year average basis. Following the receipt of that telegram I received a letter from Mr. Roberts giving facts and figures in detail. I send his letter to the desk and ask that it may be read by the clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before the letter is read let me ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question. Am I to understand that the Senator is objecting to the conference report?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I have to object to the conference report because it proposes to change the 10-year average, as approved by the Senate, back to the 5-year average.

Mr. BORAH. The only way we can reach the matter is to send the bill back to conference.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I realize it; but I must make my statement in justification for voting to send the bill back to conference.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Oklahoma will allow me, I am thoroughly familiar with the contention he is making. My State of South Carolina, and other States, including Georgia, North Carolina, and Alabama, in the 5-year period have reduced their production to where the 5-year average basis has worked a far greater hardship on those States than it has on any other States, if there is a hardship on any State and if the objective of the bill is to be considered. Taking it over the 10-year average, South Carolina would possibly run up to about 1,000,000 bales. Taking the 5-year average, it would hardly be in excess of 800,000 bales. That would hold true also of North Carolina and Georgia.

In the meantime, the newer States have increased during the 10-year period, notably Texas, Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico and certain parts of California, which have come into cotton production entirely within that period. So that though there may be a diminution on the part of the State of Oklahoma, to which the Senator refers, in the 5-year period, as compared with the 10-year period, that State certainly is given a greater amount in the quota than South Carolina, Georgia, North Carolina, or Alabama would have. So that what we lose is greater in comparison than what Oklahoma would lose; and the average certainly is in favor of Oklahoma State and the other Western States.

These figures can be substantiated by reference to the bulletin which has been gotten out, dealing with the supply and distribution of cotton, which gives a statement of the matter by years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LOGAN in the chair). Without objection, the clerk will read the letter submitted by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

THE OKLAHOMA FARMER-STOCKMAN,
Oklahoma City, Okla., March 27, 1934.

Senator J. ELMER THOMAS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR THOMAS: Following my wire dated today may I present the figures which of themselves prove the rank injustice about to be done our State by the passage of the Bankhead bill.

This bill, as you know, is based upon a 5-year period "prior to the signing of the act" by the President. I assumed that period would cover the crop produced in 1933 and the 4 preceding years. However, I am informed by the office of the Secretary of Agriculture that the crop produced in 1933 would be excluded, and, hence, the base period on which quotas are to be computed would be the crops produced in the calendar years 1928 to 1932, inclusive.

May I call your attention to the significance of the exclusion of the year 1933?

When it came to working out a base on which the voluntary compaign just ended was based the crop of 1933 was excluded.

When I was in Washington in September I called this to the attention of officials, pointing out that it would be easier to determine the production of cotton in the 5-year period 1929–33 than for the period 1928–32. I was told frankly and without hesitation that 1933 would not be included for the reason that we planted too much cotton, having increased our acreage 30 percent.

I countered with the fact that during 1930, 1931, and 1932 we had decreased our acreage in Oklahoma, voluntarily, by approximately 30 percent. That fact, however, was quickly swept aside and I was given to understand that the question was not even debatable.

I consider that definite injustice was done Oklahoma in thus jumping a year to establish a base on which production in voluntary contracts is founded. Cotton was taken away from us and given to other States.

But if the A.A.A. has rendered the State an injustice in the matter, certainly no precedent has been established whereby a greater injustice should be done by the Congress.

Figures have just been released (which will bear the closest scrutiny) showing that on a base of 1928 to 1932, inclusive, Oklahoma has a 5-year average production of 1,071,706 bales, which would give us an estimated tax-free allotment of 761,706 bales. Such an allotment amounts to 7.61 percent of the national production. Such an allotment places Oklahoma sixth among the cotton-producing States.

I contend that a base figured on the 5-year average, 1928 to 1932, is highly discriminatory against Oklahoma. It is the particular 5 years of the past 11 years which give us the lowest possible quota and, in proportion, gives other States the highest possible quotas.

I likewise submit that a 10-year average is a much more reasonable, fair, and equitable basis on which to figure the different State quotas.

If we take the production of cotton by States for the past 10 years, 1924 to 1933, inclusive, we arrive at an average production for Oklahoma of 1,275,350 bales. This is an increase, as you notice, of more than 200,000 bales in our average annual production.

On the basis of a 10,000,000-bale production, this would result in an increase in our quota of cotton which could be grown tax free of more than 140,000 bales, or nearly 20 percent.

The thought may be unworthy, but it seems to me that this Bankhead bill, emanating as it does from the southeast part of the United States, was deliberately drawn up to give that section the largest possible advantage and at the same time to discriminate against us out West.

Consider for a moment just what the opportunity to grow 140,000 additional bales of tax-free cotton means to Oklahoma.

The tax is to be 50 percent of the value of the cotton. Let us say cotton is 12 cents. The tax thus becomes $30 per bale. Thus the tax on 140,000 bales becomes $4,200,000. In other words, the direct loss to farmers in Oklahoma from a measure based upon the 5 years 1928 to 1932 amounts to at least $35 for every cotton-growing farmer in the State.

This is not a theoretical loss. It will be an actual loss unless the bill is amended, as it properly should be. It should be based on a 10-year average rather than on the years 1928 to 1932, which, as I have pointed out, results in the lowest possible quota which can be assigned to Oklahoma.

I know that every cotton farmer in the State as well as all business interests will expect you to use your utmost efforts to prevent this rank injustice being done the State.

Sincerely yours,

CLARENCE ROBERTS, Editor.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I am opposed to the adoption of the conference committee report. If we can have an agreement that the yeas and nays may be ordered upon the question of agreeing to the report, I promise to detain the Senate but a few moments. I now ask that the yeas and nays be ordered upon that question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this conference report discriminates against my State to the extent of 140,000 bales of cotton. If cotton should sell for 12 cents per pound each bale would bring $60. One hundred and forty thousand bales of cotton each year, worth $60 per bale, means an income to my State of $8,400,000 per annum. If the bill is enacted into law the farmers of my State will be deprived of this income.

My State is the third largest cotton-producting State in the country. If we do produce the 140,000 bales to bring the number up to the 10-year average, then the farmers of my State will be taxed 50 percent of that $8,400,000. So a tax falls upon the cotton growers of Oklahoma to the extent of $4,200,000 per year.

Mr. President, I cannot stand upon the Senate floor and consent to this injustice being done to the farmers of Oklahoma. Upon roll call I find myself forced to vote "nay" against the adoption of the report.

Mr. President, in support of what I am saying I desire to read two or three telegrams to complete the record. I read a telegram from Carnegie, Okla., dated March 28, 1934 as follows:

Hon. ELMER THOMAS,
Oklahoma Senator, Senate Chamber, Washington, D.C.:
The Nonpartisan Tax Association in session Carnegie, Okla., 114 present, requests Oklahoma be represented on conference committee Bankhead bill, and 10-year-average amendment by Senate be retained by all means instead of 5 years as originally written in the House.

I. E. NUTTER,
L. L. WEST,
DR. MALLORY,
Committee.

I read to the Senate a second telegram from Oklahoma City, of date March 28, 1934, as follows:

Senator ELMER THOMAS,
Senate Building, Washington, D.C.:
Believe Bankhead bill unworkable and will cause considerably more hardship among farm labor than possible gain, but in any event Oklahoma been trying cooperate with wishes National Government past several years, and if allotment based on 5-year period means Oklahoma will be penalized 100,000 bales as against 10-year average urge you to work for amendment to 10-year average for benefit Oklahoma producers and industries.

A. E. KING.

I will read another telegram from Chickasha, Okla., as follows:

CHICKASHA, OKLA., March 28, 1934.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS,
Care Senate, Washington, D.C.:
It is advantageous to Oklahoma have the Bankhead bill base on a 10-year average instead of 5. Please try get bill amended to such extent.

R. K. WOOTTEN.

I will read another telegram from Oklahoma City, as follows:

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., March 28, 1934.

Senator ELMER THOMAS: In fairness to Oklahoma cotton farmers Bankhead bill should provide State quotas based on 10-year average instead of 5. Oklahoma farmers made drastic cuts 3 of 5 basic years.

H. J. DENTON,
President Oklahoma Agricultural Cooperative Council and Editor Oklahoma Cotton Grower.

Mr. President, I might state that under the former administration the farmers of the South were requested and urged to plow up every third row of cotton; they were urged to curtail the production of cotton; and the farmers of my State undertook to comply with those requests. As a result of that campaign the farmers of my State voluntarily reduced their cotton acreage and reduced their cotton production, and now this bill, over the protest of the Senate, seeks to reinstate that injustice and to penalize the farmers of those States that complied with the request made by the former administration.

Mr. President, I read another telegram from Oklahoma City. It is from the Oklahoma Farmers' Union, is signed by Tom W. Cheek, president, and reads as follows:

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., March 28, 1934.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS,
United States Senator, Washington, D.C.:
Bankhead bill should be amended to a 10-year basis; this would give Oklahoma 861,000 bales, and on 5-year basis would give us 761,000 bales; very unfair to Oklahoma. Make this amendment fight for us.

TOM W. CHEEK,
President Oklahoma Farmers' Union.

Mr. President, after having placed these telegrams in the RECORD from the leaders of the cotton growers of my State, and having made this statement so far as it affects Oklahoma, I can do no more than to cast my vote "nay" upon the question of the adoption of this conference report.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I am under the necessity of leaving the city within a few minutes, having some weeks ago made an engagement to make a speech on the subject of Thomas Jefferson at Reading, Pa., tonight. For that reason I cannot, very much to my regret, be here during the remainder of the consideration of the conference report.

I think this matter ought to be fully discussed. I discussed it myself at rather considerable length when the bill was before the Senate a few days ago. I should like to discuss it further.

The bill is one of the utmost importance, whether considered from the point of view of alteration of the character of our Government or from the point of view of economics.

Under other circumstances, I might feel justified in requesting that the report go over until Tuesday; but I realize that the farmers are entitled to know, at any rate, at the earliest possible moment what the Congress proposes to do about their cotton crop and what sort of taxes are to be imposed upon them in the matter of ginning and marketing their cotton. I realize, also, that there is more or less speculation going on as to the effect of the passage of the bill. I have no sympathy with the speculative aspects of the matter and should like to put an end to that phase of the situation.

I wish to offer for the RECORD, and as a part of my remarks, a statement prepared by the Department of Agriculture and placed in my hands showing the effect of the 5-year provision in the bill as the base for production as compared with the 10-year base.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

Mr. BAILEY. I shall refer only to my own State; but Senators who are interested may see this tabular statement, and ascertain the facts as to their States.

The North Carolina production under the 5-year average for the period ending 1932 was 751,000 bales. Under the 10-year average the production was 876,000 bales. Therefore the base for North Carolina would be 125,000 bales less under the 5-year provision now in the bill than it would be under the 10-year provision adopted by the Senate in the amendment proposed by me.

Mr. President, that is a great injustice to the Commonwealth of North Carolina and to its farmers. Our people have gone about the matter of crop reduction in the case of cotton. Other States have not. The Senator from South Carolina inadvertently stated that Alabama would lose under the 5-year base, but that is incorrect. The production in Alabama for the 5 years ending 1932 was 1,254,000 bales. In the 10 years ending 1932 the production was 1,188,000 bales. Alabama gains 125,000 bales as a base for the calculation of crop reduction, as the State quota, while North Carolina loses 125,000 bales. I submit that that is a manifest injustice, and with that in view I hope the Senate will send the bill back to the House and insist upon the 10-year base amendment as adopted by the Senate.

Mr. President, further I wish to say that I do not think the Bankhead bill will result in materially reducing the production of cotton, considered the world over. We may, under the prohibitive tax imposed by the bill, limit the ginning of cotton in our Cotton Belt to 10,000,000 bales, as contemplated, but if we do and we thereby succeed in keeping 4,000,000 bales of American cotton off the market, there is nothing to prevent the Argentine, India, Egypt, Russia, China, and Brazil from increasing their production by 4,000,000 bales, in which event we will come to the harvest of the present year with the same supply of cotton we would have had had this tax not been imposed.

I wish to refer to another feature of this proposal, one which strikes at the very heart of it. In the reduction of the production of cotton the quotas proposed to be allotted to the farmers are horizontal, with the exception, as I understand, of a million bales, which will be prorated in one way or another.

It is my judgment that that scheme in the application of the bill will work irreparable injury to the small farmers of the Cotton Belt. A man producing 500 bales on his farm may stand for a reduction, but a man producing 6 or 7 or 8 or 10 bales cannot stand it, and if he is cut down to 2 or 3 or 4 bales he is practically put out of the business of producing cotton. If that is the purpose of the bill, I wish to say that I have no sympathy whatever with that sort of thing.

It was about 2 years ago that a voice was raised in our land in behalf of what was then denominated "the forgotten man"; in the intervening months we have now and then heard of the same forgotten man, but I think that we begin to hear less and less of him, and that is not contrary to the observations of long experience.

I stand here at this moment on the economic aspects of this bill, motivated very largely by thoughts of what will become of the smaller farmers of the Cotton Belt under the application of the bill. It will not require as many workers to make 10,000,000 bales of cotton as to make fourteen or fifteen million bales. What will become of them? They will be ground to powder, as the humble man has so often and so consistently been ground, between the upper and the nether millstones of the Congress on the one hand and the producers of great crops on the other.

I do not wish such an injustice to be done, and these remarks are pointed to the amendment which I offered here providing that no man's cotton up to the first eight bales should be taxed. That amendment was amended by my colleague from North Carolina to read six bales. On the 6-bale basis the amendment was agreed to and sent to conference.

Now, the bill comes back with the 6-bale amendment rejected, and there is nothing whatever in the bill to take care of, I should say, a million five hundred thousand of the small farmers of the Cotton Belt, the total number being 1,950,000, and I can safely say that 1,500,000 of them are small farmers.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that if ever we are to strike a blow in behalf of the humble man, if we are ever to assert the right of the little man to live—and that is a great slogan in political campaigns, and sometimes heard here—if we are ever to assert the right of the little man to live, here is the best opportunity the Senate of the United States will have at the present session.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator's position, the bill is rather in the interest of a limited number of the larger cotton producers, to the disadvantage of the small producers?

Mr. BAILEY. I made the statement that the producer of 500 bales or a hundred bales on his farm could stand the reduction, whereas the little fellow could not; and that is manifest. I received a letter yesterday from an humble farmer in North Carolina saying that he understood that his production would be cut down this year to three bales, and he said:

> I want your help. I want you to tell me what I can do.

He added a sentence of considerable pathos to me—

> How can I keep my dear boy in school when I am not allowed to produce more than three bales of cotton in a year?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have had some 15 or 20 letters of the same kind. And let me say while I am on the floor, in reference to the questionnaire which was sent out, a farmer writes me from Arkansas that he does not know of a single cotton producer in his whole territory to whom that questionnaire was ever sent.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I think, on that point, there is a general impression in the South that this bill would lift the price of cotton and relieve a manifestly bad situation, but I think that impression is based upon misinformation. It is my candid opinion that once this bill is put into operation the resistance to it in the South will amount to a political revolution. On that point I shall conclude, because I have taken more time already than I could afford to take.

My main objection to the bill is not on economic grounds. My principal objection to the bill is that it is a usurpation of power by the Federal Government. Insofar as there could be that power in the States, it usurps the power from the States. That is not so serious, after all, as we consider the trend in these modern days; but insofar as the right of personal property and the right of personal liberty are concerned, it destroys the rights of human beings and of free men.

Mr. President, I have not parted with my attachment to human liberty, and I do not intend to part with it. The more I see of Russia, the more I hear from Italy, and the more I hear from Germany, the more I thank God for one country left dedicated to the rights of men, to individual liberty.

If there has been in the 40 years of activity of my life one picture of personal liberty, it has been the picture of the farmer on his farm. Notwithstanding the pressure of economic conditions, there in his little home, there with his acres about him, there with his capacity to make bread to eat, there with his right to produce his crops, there with his courage to contend with the forces of nature, there with his capacity to plow, to plant, to cultivate, and to reap, he has always been the fountain of liberty in America; and you cannot now destroy the fountain.

Who fought the Revolution? They were the farmers who "fired the shot heard round the world." Emerson, standing by the Concord bridge "where the embattl'd farmers stood", said they "fired the shot heard round the world."

Who were the protagonists and the pioneers of liberty in our mother country? They were the farmers. And in the United States of America, a land dedicated to human liberty and founded upon the Declaration of Independence, proclaiming the inalienable rights of men—a land in which the Declaration has not been erased, in which the Constitution, the Congress notwithstanding, still stands—who are we to set on its way a process whereby agents of the Federal Government, representatives of the Department of Agriculture, shall proceed throughout 13 States composing the Cotton Belt, see farmer after farmer and notify him, "If you produce one bale more of cotton than we say you shall produce, the Federal Government will impose a tax upon it which will destroy its value", to wit, 50 percent. Who are we that we should be doing things like that?

There may come a time when that can be done by the Federal Government; but if it ever comes, Mr. President, it ought to come by way of an amendment of the Constitution; and if I should propose in this moment an amendment to the Constitution reading, "From and after the ratification of this amendment the Federal Government shall have power to impose prohibitive taxes upon the production of sugar, and of wheat, and of cattle, and of cotton, and of fruit", I do not believe it would get the vote even of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] who introduced the cotton bill. I believe I would be discredited in the Senate as a man who had no conception of the character of the American Government and no respect for the institutions under which it has flourished as no nation ever flourished in a period of 150 years.

Mr. President, it has been spread abroad in my section of the country that this bill is supported by the President. I want the statement to go forth to the people of North Carolina that the President of the United States has sent no message to the Congress concerning this bill. It is no part of his recovery program. He wrote one letter to Mr. JONES, Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture in the House, in which he said that he would approve the bill in principle. That is not a message to the Congress. That is a message to an individual.

And further, the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States has disapproved this bill. In public statement he has said that he prefers the voluntary principle of crop control. And this bill, Senators, embodies the involuntary principle. The Secretary of Agriculture has also said, and I wish to pay him tribute for it, that he looks with suspicion upon propositions to regiment agriculture in America.

If I had time, Mr. President, I would say many things that are in my heart to say. I know that politically and selfishly it would be a fine thing for me for this bill to pass. I have made my record. I am exonerated of responsibility.

Sometimes we have to go to hell in order to learn the value of religion. Sometimes we have to fall sick in order to know the value of health. We have to learn and we have to teach, I think always, and all men by way of experience.

I could have sat here quietly this morning and said, "Very well, you have made your record; let the bill pass; offer no opposition, and in 18 months the farmers of the South and the farmers of North Carolina will be calling upon you and calling upon the Senate to redeem them and deliver them from the impositions of this legislation." But I have chosen otherwise.

I spoke against the bill. I am opposed to the bill. I hope the bill will be defeated in the economic interest of the farmers, and even more than that, in behalf of safeguarding the character of the American Republic, I hope it will be stricken down by every man who loves sweet human freedom.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I rise merely to express my hearty approval of what my colleague [Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma] has said in opposition to the pending conference report. We have heard a great deal during the course of this discussion in regard to the pending measure having the support of the cotton farmers.

It has been stated here on the floor that 85 percent of the cotton farmers favor the proposed legislation. I do not know; that may be true; but I do know these facts: There are approximately 2,000,000 cotton farmers in the South. Letters were sent out by the Department here not to 2,000,000 cotton farmers but to 41,000 cotton farmers; 30,000 of those were cotton reporters employed by the Department of Agriculture to prepare and submit cotton reports from time to time. Ten thousand of the number went to what are known as county chairmen. I do not know how that designation applies, because there are only about a thousand counties in the cotton growing section of the country, and 1,000 additional letters went out to the county agents in the thousand counties of the Cotton Belt. Of those 41,000 letters sent out some 24,000 evoked answers, 24,000 responded—about 56 percent—and some 95 percent of those who answered did favor the pending bill, but it should be understood that they are in a sense either the employees or the partisans of the Department of Agriculture or of the Government. These men were required to take the sense of the farmers, generally speaking, the rank and file. They did report, as I understand, that some 85 percent of the farmers favored the pending legislation. That may be so and it may not be so. I felt that this much ought to be placed in the RECORD, and I ask permission to print in the RECORD a letter received from one of my constituents, a leading citizen of Oklahoma, a friend of the farmer, in opposition to this measure.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE OKLAHOMA FARMER-STOCKMAN,
Oklahoma City, Okla., March 27, 1934.

Senator T. P. GORE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR GORE: Following my wire dated today, may I present the figures which of themselves prove the rank injustice about to be done our State by the passage of the Bankhead bill?

This bill, as you know, is based upon a 5-year period "prior to the signing of the act" by the President. I assume that period would cover the crop produced in 1933 and the 4 preceding years. However, I am informed by the office of the Secretary of Agriculture that the crop produced in 1933 would be excluded and, hence, the base period on which quotas are to be computed would be the crops produced in the calendar years 1928 to 1932, inclusive.

May I call your attention to the significance of the exclusion of the year 1933?

When it came to working out a base on which the voluntary campaign just ended was based the crop of 1933 was excluded.

When I was in Washington in September I called this to the attention of officials, pointing out that it would be easier to determine the production of cotton in the 5-year period, 1929–33 than for the period 1928–32. I was told frankly and without hesitation that 1933 would not be included for the reason that we planted too much cotton, having increased our acreage 30 percent.

I countered with the fact that during 1930, 1931, and 1932 we had decreased our acreage in Oklahoma, voluntarily, by approximately 30 percent. That fact, however, was quickly swept aside and I was given to understand that the question was not even debatable.

I consider that definite injustice was done Oklahoma in thus jumping a year to establish a base on which production in voluntary contracts is founded. Cotton was taken away from us and given to other States.

But if the A.A.A. has rendered the State an injustice in the matter, certainly no precedent has been established whereby a greater injustice should be done by the Congress.

Figures have just been released (which will bear the closest scrutiny) showing that on a base of 1928 to 1932, inclusive, Oklahoma has a 5-year average production of 1,071,706 bales, which would give us an estimated tax-free allotment of 761,706 bales. Such an allotment amounts to 7.61 percent of the national production. Such an allotment places Oklahoma sixth among the cotton-producing States.

I contend that a base figured on the 5-year average, 1928 to 1932, is highly discriminatory against Oklahoma. It is the particular 5 years of the past 11 years which give us the lowest possible quota and in proportion gives other States the highest possible quotas.

I likewise submit that a 10-year average is a much more reasonable, fair, and equitable basis on which to figure the different State quotas.

If we take the production of cotton by States for the past 10 years, 1924 to 1933, inclusive, we arrive at an average production for Oklahoma of 1,275,350 bales. This is an increase, as you notice, of more than 200,000 bales in our average annual production.

On the basis of a 10,000,000-bale production, this would result in an increase in our quota of cotton which could be grown tax-free of more than 100,000 bales, or nearly 15 percent.

The thought may be unworthy, but it seems to me that this Bankhead bill, emanating as it does from the southeast part of the United States, was deliberately drawn up to give that section the largest possible advantage and, at the same time, to discriminate against us out West.

Consider for a moment just what the opportunity to grow 100,000 additional bales of tax-free cotton means to Oklahoma.

The tax is to be 50 percent of the value of the cotton. Let us say cotton is 12 cents. The tax thus becomes $30 per bale. Thus the tax on 140,000 bales becomes $4,200,000. In other words, the direct loss to farmers in Oklahoma from a measure based upon the 5 years 1928 to 1932 amounts to at least $35 for every cotton-growing farmer in the State.

This is not a theoretical loss. It will be an actual loss unless the bill is amended, as it properly should be. It should be based on a 10-year average, rather than on the years 1928 to 1932 which, as I have pointed out, results in the lowest possible quota which can be assigned to Oklahoma.

I know that every cotton farmer in the State, as well as all business interests, will expect you to use your utmost efforts to prevent this rank injustice being done the State.

Sincerely yours,

CLARENCE ROBERTS, Editor.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, in line with what the Senator from Oklahoma has just stated, I have a communication which came to my desk yesterday that deals with exactly the same item the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] was discussing just before he concluded his remarks. The writer says:

I operate a large cotton farm in the South, and have about 50 families who are dependent upon this farm pay roll for a livelihood. If the Bankhead bill becomes a law, I imagine these families are going to find themselves looking to charity for help, because I will not need them.

This letter is from a friend of the author of the bill, for he says:

I know that my good friend, JOHN H. BANKHEAD, has done a real service for his State—

And so on, referring to his election and the defeat of a certain candidate. Then he says:

There is no question in my mind but there is something wrong in connection with some of the propaganda in behalf of cotton.

First, the Department of Agriculture claims that the voluntary crop-reduction sign-up was a success, which would control this year's production. If this is true, why do we need the compulsory control?

Second, I think I have seen in the press where it was alleged by the Department of Agriculture that about 90 to 95 percent of the representative cotton farmers, in answer to questionnaires sent out by the Department, were in favor of the compulsory control bill.

I wish I were in a position to challenge this statement publicly, but frankly—

For the reason he mentions in his letter I do not feel free to give the name of the writer.

I have made several inquiries among farmers in the South and have been unable to find one who received such questionnaire from the Department of Agriculture, or who knew anything about it. I would like to see someone call on the Department of Agriculture to furnish the Associated Press with a list of the names and addresses of the representative farmers to whom these questionnaires were sent and from whom replies were received. I would like to see three lists made, one showing those who answered favorably, another showing those who answered unfavorably, and still another showing those who did not reply. I think if such an analysis were given the newspapers, especially those of the Cotton Belt, the result would be surprising to almost everyone.

It is a known fact that already the Argentine and Brazilian Governments are urging their farmers to increase cotton production in order to take advantage of the curtailment of our crops under the compulsory bill.

Farmers in my home-town community sold cotton at 4 cents a pound during the Spanish-American War; again at ridiculously low prices in 1907 and 1914, as well as in 1932 and 1933, but it so happens that up to this time we have not had to bury any of them because of starvation.

I believe that if the Senate as a whole knew the cotton farmer, cotton production, and general conditions among these farmers, or could visualize the ill results which this legislation will bring about, that this bill would be defeated by an overwhelming majority.

Mr. President, I have no interest whatever in anyone who is in the cotton business, and I myself have no interest in cotton except that as a citizen of the country I am, of course, concerned about the welfare of any great industry such as is the cotton industry.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I wish to make reference, if the Senator will permit me, to the sentence in the letter which the Senator has just read that Brazil and Argentina are now encouraging their farmers to increase their cotton acreage in order to absorb the world's market which by the proposed legislation is being surrendered by the cotton farmers of the South.

I wanted to say that that is the most significant and I may add the most ominous thing in this entire situation and in the proposed legislation. In the South, with cheap land and cheap labor, we can raise cotton more cheaply than it can be produced any other place on the globe.

Cotton constitutes our balance of trade; we export more than 55 percent of our annual output. It has constituted our balance of trade for generations, and we are asked to surrender that advantage and turn it over to foreigners; and when the foreigner captures this market it will be difficult, if not impossible, for the farmers of the South to recapture that surrendered market. For my part, I want to express my appreciation of the Senator's action in reading into the RECORD the letter he has read.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I appreciate the statement of the Senator from Oklahoma, who knows the cotton industry at first hand, as I do not. The Senator has referred to the surrendering of our cotton market. Let me say that the farmers in the wheat areas have already suffered that disaster. All of us will recall that when the days were very dark during the World War the call came from the Allies that it would be necessary for us to increase the acreage of wheat because there was no other kind of raw materials from which there could be made a supply of bread sufficient for the large group of men enlisted in their armies.

That call was responded to by the farmers of our country and they increased the wheat acreage an enormous percentage. But that was not the bad feature. Countries in the old world that could produce wheat, countries which had not been producing except in very small quantities, began to raise wheat. The most surprising thing of all was when they found out they could do it that they not only raised wheat needed for the army, but when the war was over they continued to raise wheat.

We all remember that at Geneva 2 years ago there gathered a great conference representing the wheat-growing countries of the world. There were 11 countries represented in that conference, each of which was producing a surplus of wheat. Theretofore many of them had not produced any wheat to speak of, but having started its production they found it profitable. We realize now that the foreign market for American wheat has been absorbed by that production.

Three of those 11 countries—the United States, Canada, and Russia—could produce all the wheat the world could consume; but in addition to those 3 there are 8 others producing a surplus, and the representatives of those 11 countries met in convention to determine how they could manage the surplus problem of the future. That means that our foreign market for wheat has been absorbed, and if we limit unduly our cotton production I imagine the same result will follow as to that commodity.

As the Senator from Oklahoma said, 55 percent of our cotton goes to the foreign markets. It is only simple common sense that if we stimulate the foreign market to the point where foreign countries can grow cotton to take care of that market we will suffer just in the degree they will be stimulated. I am afraid that, instead of this measure being of value to the American cotton farmer, it will prove to be a tremendous obstacle to him.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. GORE. The Senator said we export more than 50 percent of our cotton. We used to export 25 percent of our wheat. The foreign market for American wheat has practically vanished. Anyone who will read the trade letters will mark that day after day, week after week, and month after month the letters now say "no clearances today." That goes on for weeks and months. I have taken occasion to check the reports. Our foreign market for wheat is gone, and if we enact legislation of this sort, the foreign market for our cotton will follow the foreign market for our wheat into oblivion.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I am greatly impressed with the force of that statement. I believe it is only common, ordinary sense that if we make it profitable for the foreign cotton grower to produce cotton, then what took place in the wheat market will take place in the cotton market.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Hebert	Pope
Ashurst	Couzens	Johnson	Reed
Austin	Cutting	Kean	Reynolds
Bachman	Dickinson	King	Robinson, Ind.
Bankhead	Duffy	La Follette	Schall
Barbour	Erickson	Lewis	Sheppard
Barkley	Fess	Logan	Shipstead
Black	Fletcher	Lonergan	Smith
Bone	Frazier	Long	Steiwer
Borah	George	McGill	Stephens
Brown	Gibson	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	Gore	McNary	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Hale	Metcalf	Thompson
Byrnes	Harrison	Murphy	Townsend
Capper	Hastings	Norris	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hatch	Overton	Van Nuys
Clark	Hatfield	Patterson	Walsh
Connally	Hayden	Pittman

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the conference report. On that question the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CUTTING (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who is unavoidably absent from the Chamber. I am advised that were he present he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. KEAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]. Not being informed as to how that Senator would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. METCALF (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote, and that he has been specially paired on this question. I vote "nay."

Mr. FRAZIER (when Mr. NYE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. NYE] is unavoidably absent. He is paired on this bill with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. If my colleague were present he would vote "yea", and I understand that if the Senator from Maryland was present he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. REED (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to state that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is necessarily absent because of serious illness in his family.

Mr. PATTERSON (after having voted in the negative). I note the absence of my general pair, the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. I am informed, however, that if he were present he would vote as I have already voted; and I therefore will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. LOGAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who does not appear to have voted. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. DIETERICH], caused by important matters in his State. I am not informed how he would vote if present.

The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is necessarily absent. He has been unable to secure a pair. If present, he would vote "nay."

I announce the following special pairs on this question:

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]; and

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY].

If present, the Senator from Wyoming and the Senator from Montana would vote "yea" on this question, and the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from North Carolina would vote "nay."

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

I regret to announce the absence because of illness of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] with the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] with the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO]; and

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY].

If present, I understand that Senators GOLDSBOROUGH, HALE, WALCOTT, and KEYES would vote "nay" on this question, and Senators RUSSELL, DILL, MCADOO, and NEELY would vote "yea."

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT], the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] are absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 28, as follows:

YEAS—39

So the conference report was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message from the President of the United States was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

RELIEF OF DEBTORS IN BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5884) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

THE POTASH INDUSTRY

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, notwithstanding the fact that I dislike to take the time of the Senate just now, nevertheless, I think some information which I happen to possess concerning an important industry in my State should be made available to Senators and the country at large. I refer to the development of the potash industry.

About the year 1925 Dr. V. H. McNutt, now of San Antonio, Tex., a geologist of note and reputation, discovered potash in an oil well being drilled at Carlsbad, N.Mex. With the aid of Snowden & McSweeney, who furnished the financial assistance, core tests were made in the vicinity of the oil well. It would take too long to relate all the circumstances surrounding the discovery of potash in this region. Suffice it to say that potash in commercial quantities was found. It should be said that these people invested capital and labor in the development of this project, which was at that time a most forlorn hope. I mention the part played by these men in the project because they displayed great courage and that pioneering spirit which has been responsible for the development of the industries and vast resources of America. Had men of less courage been associated in the enterprise, probably the existence of potash in the Carlsbad region would not be known to this day.

The United States has such vast expanses of territory, such far-flung industrial and agricultural enterprises, and such widely distributed population that even with our splendid transportation system, unparalleled communication facilities, and efficient Government and private agencies for gathering and disseminating information a new industry can be developed, bringing us independence from foreign domination over the supply of an essential commodity, yet our people may not have heard of the establishment of this new industry, and might go on for years relying on old notions that this essential commodity could not be produced in America, or at least not economically or in sufficient quantities to meet the American demand.

Today, as a result of the efforts of Dr. McNutt and the Snowden & McSweeney group, the United States can supply the requirements of the American market for potash, except as to certain special grades, and even these can and will be supplied by domestic producers within a reasonable time.

Until this discovery in Eddy County, N.Mex., the United States—and, for that matter, the rest of the world—was dependent on Germany for its potash, with the exception of the period covered by the World War. When the war began, shipments of potash were interrupted, and at first, and early in 1915, were stopped through an embargo imposed by the German Government. During the war over $50,000,000 of private and public funds were expended in attempts to develop an adequate domestic supply of potash. In time 128 plants were established and placed in operation, but costs of production were high, and the price of potash soared to $600 per ton, more than 10 times the price of the German product before the war. As soon as the war was over the German potash reentered the American market, and the American plants built and operated at such enormous expense had to be abandoned, all save a very few, and of these only one of considerable output survived. It was natural to be dependent again on German potash, and it was generally taken for granted that this dependence was inevitable and must always exist, except as war intervened, with its temporary potash scarcity and high prices for expensively produced local output.

This condition continued until the discovery of potash in Eddy County, N.Mex. The ore body in the Eddy County mine is better and richer than the ore bodies of Germany. The potash is taken from the ground, refined, and shipped in bulk or in bags exactly as the foreign product is manufactured and marketed. There are two mines in operation now in the New Mexico field, which can fully supply the requirements of the American market for the raw-unrefined potash salts, and as to the refined muriate of potash, or potassium chloride, to use the technical name of the product; the New Mexico refinery of one of these companies can nearly meet the domestic demand for this high-grade commodity, while a muriate plant in California, which survived the invasion of German potash after the war, now has capacity sufficient to meet the requirements of the American market for the refined muriate. Thus, in the course of a few years, mines in New Mexico and a chemical plant in California have developed capacity for production of the grades of potash most needed in this country that exceeds by approximately 100 percent the requirements of the country. Despite this fact, large quantities of potash are still imported from Germany, France, and Spain, and even Russia and Poland.

Potash is now overproduced. Our people need have no more apprehensions. In time of war we will have sufficient potash for fertilization of agricultural lands, for munitions manufacture, and for the many other fields in which this important chemical is used.

Government officials respond to the inquiry, "Is potash produced in the United States?" by quoting statistical data which clearly show that more than enough chloride of potash is produced in the United States to supply the present American market twice over and that other grades of potash can and will be available, thus making this country absolutely independent of all foreign sources of this commodity. Nevertheless, the story of our absolute dependence on German potash persists, and even some departments of the Federal Government are not familiar with the activities of the Departments of the Interior and Commerce in exploring for potash deposits and the results of their work as published in their own reports.

A very short time ago the newspapers published articles describing the new foreign-trade program, with the plans for encouragement of importation of foreign commodities which are not available here or which cannot be produced here as economically as abroad, and at the head of a list of commodities that might be imported from the Soviet Union was potash. Here is the list as reported in the New York Times for February 13, 1934:

> Potash, manganese ore, mica, precious stones, platinum, and gold; furs and waste silk; castor-oil beans, sausage casings, and caviar.

The list must have been handed to Washington correspondents by some official of a Federal department not well informed on American potash development.

Another list was referred to in debate in the House of Representatives on March 29, when the pending tariff measure was under consideration. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS], a former member of the United States Tariff Commission, asked and obtained leave to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD various schedules of raw materials and manufactured commodities—imported articles not produced regularly in commercial quantities in the United States. In "Schedule 1, chemicals, oils, and paints", on page 5616 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD potassium (potash) appears.

This list comes from a Government establishment which apparently did not know that we now have a well-established potash industry operating efficiently with American labor under the terms of the basic code for the chemical manufacturing industry, and possessing the plant and equipment to produce twice as much potash salts as the American market requires.

Why take time to prepare this statement about the American potash industry and why consume more time in presenting it if this industry is firmly established in the United States?

First, because new mines in Spain and the Soviet Union threaten the industry with competition of potash produced by cheap labor and favored by low transportation costs, and it may become necessary to enforce stabilization of the domestic potash market either through a tariff or by action authorized in section 3 (e) of the National Recovery Act. Potash is now on the free list.

Second, because it is possible that, due to lack of general information regarding this new potash industry on the part of Government officers who may be concerned with the negotiation of reciprocal trade agreements with foreign countries under the tariff bill now pending, potash importations on a larger scale may be encouraged, and a discussion here at this time may be helpful to such negotiators in considering proposals from foreign producers.

Potash is now produced in Germany, France, Spain, the Soviet Union, Poland, Palestine, and the United States. It is an essential ingredient of high-grade fertilizers, but is also an important and valuable chemical required in the manufacture of glass, munitions, matches, and other chemicals and pharmaceuticals. More than 90 percent of the potash used in the United States goes into the preparation of plant food by manufacturers of fertilizers.

For nearly 70 years Germany had a virtual monopoly of the potash trade of the world. As already stated, the supply of potash was completely cut off during the World War, and in the United States both agriculture and industry suffered severely. An adequate supply of the commodity never was developed here during the period of the war because of the high cost of production and the very limited sources of potash-bearing materials.

The reentry of German potash into the American market has been sketched. Only a few of the 128 war-nurtured plants in the United States survived, and of these, only one, the American Potash & Chemical Co., operating in California, engaged principally in potash production. The others remaining in the field produced potash as a byproduct of distillery waste and cement manufacture.

The Federal Government, under special authority of Congress, and with appropriations specifically made to explore for natural deposits of water-soluble potash continued its activities through the Bureau of Mines and the United States Geological Survey. The deposits in New Mexico, which I have mentioned, were found in the Pecos River Valley, in what is known among geologists as the Permian Basin, an ancient sea bed which underlies an enormous area in New Mexico and Texas. The potash-bearing stratum found to contain salts of commercial value is similar to the beds in Germany and France. The ore in this stratum is known as sylvinite. It lies approximately 1,000 feet below the surface of the earth.

Up to the present time only two sylvinite bodies have been found that are rich enough to justify the expenditure of the very large sums of money necessary to develop and equip a mine and the refinery essential to the production of the high-grade product known as muriate or chloride of potash. Both of these sylvinite bodies are being developed. One mine was placed in operation in 1931, after the completion of a shaft 1,000 feet deep. A second shaft was completed in June 1933, this being a further development of the first mine, and lying 2,200 feet south of the first shaft. In January 1934 a shaft on the second property controlled by another company and lying 8 miles north of the first development, was completed, and salts are now being shipped from this new mine. In September 1932 the company operating the first mine to be opened completed a refinery which is connected with the mine by a 16-mile tramroad. This refinery was equipped to manufacture nearly 150 tons of muriate per day. In 1933 this plant was enlarged to a capacity of 200 tons per day, and at the present time is being further enlarged to a capacity of 400 tons per day, or about 140,000 tons per year.

The mining and refining of potash in eastern New Mexico has had a profound effect on the welfare of that section of my State. The industry was developed during the depression and has helped to absorb much of the unemployed labor in that region. I am informed nearly 600 men are now employed in that activity. Most of them are married and have children dependent on them, and they want to become permanent residents of the community nearest the mines and refinery. The pay roll of this industry, of course, benefits a much larger number of people. It is important that the industry be stable and permanent.

The potash producers of New Mexico have gladly cooperated with the Government in assuming their share of the recovery program. They are operating under the Code for the Chemical Manufacturing Industry. The increased costs of N.R.A. they have had to absorb, as there has been no increase in the price of potash. Wages are high, probably the highest in New Mexico. Miners are paid $5.85 per shift of 8 hours. This is to be compared with about $2 in Germany, $1.33 in France, $1.05 in Spain, and nominal sums in addition to food and shelter and clothes in the Soviet Union. Despite this wide spread between the American wage scale and those in effect abroad, and despite high freight rates for movement of potash from New Mexico to eastern and southern purchasers of this commodity, these American producers can and do compete with foreign producers at present prices. Here again it must be emphasized that potash is on the free list.

Starting on these premises: First, that here is an American industry, young, it is true, but a lusty infant that has been very active since 1931 in a market formerly monopolized almost completely by foreign producers; second, that it is so successful in its enterprise that about half the domestic demand is now supplied by these American potash miners and refiners, including, of course, the California producer; and, third, that it has no tariff protection—how can it be said that potash is not produced regularly in commercial quantities in the United States, and therefore belongs in lists of commodities the importation of which should be encouraged in reciprocal trade agreements with foreign countries?

On the contrary, the potash industry deserves consideration at the hands of the Federal Government, and of the States as well. Potash is an essential chemical that must be produced in the United States in sufficient quantities to meet the needs of the Nation in time of war, when foreign supplies may be cut off. We cannot, we must not, be dependent on any foreign source for this highly important commodity. We must not be dependent on distant lands across the oceans for our potash. We are now independent to the extent of production capacity at home about twice as great as the home market demands. Of course, consumption of potash is still far below that of pre-depression years, and can be expected to increase as recovery advances, but when consumption returns to normal, American producers of potash can still fully supply the domestic demand.

It has been pointed out that Germany, for nearly 70 years, supplied the United States and the other countries of the world with potash. The Treaty of Versailles returned Alsace to France, and thus the potash deposits of that province came under Government ownership and control. The French Government has operated the Alsatian potash mines since the ratification of the treaty. For years, the final policy as to future operation was in doubt. After a period of Government operation, it was to be decided whether this would be continued, or whether the mines would be leased or sold to private producers. Recently it was decided that the Government operation would be continued as a permanent policy.

The ink was not dry on the Versailles Treaty, however, before the German potash syndicate and the French Government agreed to join in a marketing arrangement in order that competition might be limited and the potash market kept stable. Accordingly, today German and French potash is sold by the N. V. Potash Export, My., a corporation organized and incorporated in Holland. This corporation still supplies half the American market with potash, including sulphates of potash which American concerns have not produced as yet. N. V. Potash Export, My., has offices in all of the countries of the world where potash is used, except the Soviet Union.

The real menace to the new American potash industry arises from other countries than France and Germany; it is the development of immense bodies of potash in Spain and the Soviet Union. Spanish and Soviet potash is just entering the American market and threatens to demoralize the market by trade practices that would never be permitted under a code of fair competition. Reliable information is to the effect that Spanish potash was sold in the United States in 1933 at the market price, less regular discounts and less further substantial discounts labeled "propaganda" or "advertisement allowances."

Likewise, I am informed, in 1933, 57,159 short tons of Spanish potash were imported into the United States and sold by brokers or other selling agents as compared with 18,640 tons in 1932. In 1934, in the months of January and February, 38,317 tons entered the United States from Spain. There are three mines in Spain. Minas de Potasas de Suria is owned by German interests, and its product is marketed by N. V. Potash Export, My., the German-French selling syndicate. Potasas Ibéricas, S.A., which has a mine with unusually rich ore, is developing a big producing property, and in July 1934 will complete its refinery. It is controlled by French capital. Unión Española de Explosivos, also developed and operated by French interests, is the third enterprise in the Spanish potash fields. All of these companies produce potash with cheap labor, and their transportation costs to Barcelona are very small. At Barcelona shipments to the United States are made by boat at low rates. In fact, German, French, and Spanish potash can be transported from the mines and refineries to Atlantic and Gulf ports of the United States at about the same cost as rail transportation of New Mexico potash to the nearest Gulf port, whence it can be moved by boat to other Gulf ports and Atlantic seaboard harbors. In other words, rail costs alone for the short haul from Carlsbad to Texas Gulf shipping points equal or exceed total transportation costs of foreign potash in competition with the New Mexico product.

Potash from the Soviet Union reached the United States for the first time late in 1933. Only a small quantity arrived at New York via vessels from Vladivostok. This was sold at a price well below the market quotations of potash. It is now reported that about 25,000 tons of Soviet potash will be in the American market in 1934, and that this will be sold at least $6 per ton below any other prices effective in this country. It is probable that secret discounts and rebates will also be offered. The object of the Soviet Government is to establish credits in this country with which to purchase American-manufactured commodities which are not available at home. Evidently the policy is to sell potash at any figure below American market prices that will assure disposition of the tonnage available. By 1935 Soviet production will approach 3,000,000 tons annually.

It is understood that additional shipments of Soviet potash will come from Black Sea ports. The mines are near the base of the Ural Mountains at Solikamsk and Berensniki. This means that transportation of their products must be by boat or barge 2,000 miles down the Volga to the canal connecting this river with the Black Sea, thence through the canal to transoceanic boats at Black Sea ports. Labor costs are almost negligible, and hence neither mining, refining, nor transportation costs can be compared with American costs. Soviet competition in the potash industry is therefore, first, a menace to market stabilization, and, next, it is a dangerous threat to employment and investment in American potash enterprises. If it is contemplated that in reciprocal trade agreements under the new tariff act that Soviet potash shall be imported in part consideration for purchases of American-manufactured commodities and agricultural products, representatives of American industry should be accorded opportunities for hearings on the proposed undertaking. It is to be hoped that with all the facts regarding American production of potash before them, representatives of the United States will not consider importations of Soviet and Spanish potash in the negotiation of reciprocal trade agreements but will take the position that the American market should be reserved for American producers. The world market requires about 1,330,000 tons of potash annually, and of this our country requires about one sixth. This amount the domestic producers can supply and still fall short of utilizing the capacity of their plants.

There is another phase of this problem that deserves consideration. The New Mexico potash deposits are in territory owned by the United States and the State. The potash mines are operated under leases from the Federal Government and from the State of New Mexico. Royalties on the value of the raw and refined products are paid by the operators. Mining and related activities are carried on under the general supervision of the Department of the Interior officials. A large initial investment was made in exploration and research work and mine development and equipment on the requirements of the Government under its leases. This investment must receive reasonable protection. Good faith and contract obligations require consideration of the New Mexico operators and their interests when potash is proposed as a commodity that may be imported into the United States under reciprocal trade agreements.

Investment in the potash industry in New Mexico now exceeds $4,000,000, while the American Potash & Chemical Corporation, owner of the plant at Trona, Calif., is reported to have expended nearly $15,000,000 in plant and equipment and other property. The industry as a whole—that is, including the properties in New Mexico and California—employ considerably in excess of 1,200 men.

At my request the Department of the Interior, through the General Land Office and the Geological Survey, furnished the following data, which I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks:

First. Three and a Quarter Centuries of the Potash Industry in America, by H. I. Smith, Chief Mining Division of the United States Geological Survey, being a reprint from the Engineering and Mining Journal of December 1933 (not necessary to reprint diagrams or pictures).

Second. Potash as an International Commodity in 1932, by J. W. Turrentine, fertilizer and fixed-nitrogen investigations, Bureau of Chemistry and Soils, United States Department of Agriculture, being a reprint from the American Fertilizer of November 4, 1933.

Third. Potash in International Barter, from Oil, Paint, and Drug Reporter of March 26, 1934.

Fourth. Article in Russian Economic Notes of the Department of Commerce, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, no. 269, of March 15, 1934, called "Soviet Potash—for the Collective and State Farms", Pravada, January 12, 1934.

Fifth. Russian Potash on the World Market—Competition to German-French Syndicate, being an extract from an article in Vossische Zeitung, Berlin, February 2, 1934.

Sixth. Developing Spanish Potash, Operation of the Catalonian Concessions, from Chemical Industries of December 1933.

Seventh. Potash Production by Potash Ibericas, S. A., from the American Fertilizer of February 24, 1934.

Eighth. Table of potash exports from Spain during 1933.

Ninth. Spanish imports and exports of potash during 1933.

Tenth. Statistics—exports of potash from Barcelona during January and February 1934.

Eleventh. Potash Imports Into the United States (total imports), taken from World Trade Notes on Chemicals and Allied Products, volume 8, no. 9, of February 24, 1934, by Department of Commerce, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter referred to by the Senator from New Mexico will be printed in the RECORD.

(See exhibits following Mr. HATCH's address.)

Mr. HATCH. Finally, Mr. President, let me say I hold no brief for the companies producing potash. They are amply able to fight their own battles. I am interested, as a citizen of New Mexico, in letting the public know that we have in

New Mexico potash deposits sufficient to supply the needs of America in times of peace and in times of war.

The importation of potash, with the encouragement and assistance of the Department here in Washington, could very injuriously affect those citizens of New Mexico who are interested in this great industry.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I was wondering whether, under the present scale of tariff, the potash industry in this country is not pretty badly crippled. It is crippled now, as I understand; is it not?

Mr. HATCH. It can be; yes.

Mr. LONG. Is it now?

Mr. HATCH. It is; and its condition is certain to become worse than it now is. Potash is on the free list. There is no tariff on potash.

Mr. LONG. I wish to say to the Senator from New Mexico that whenever the question comes up for consideration in the Senate, I shall be very glad to vote to put a protective tariff on potash.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the Senator. I hope he may have that opportunity.

Mr. President, I trust the Department in Washington, or any other agency of the Government, for that matter, will not take any ill-advised or hasty action which may destroy or injuriously affect this new industry, which is of vast importance to all the people of the United States.

THREE AND A QUARTER CENTURIES OF THE POTASH INDUSTRY IN AMERICA

(By H. I. Smith, Chief Mining Division, United States Geological Survey)

SUCCESSFUL EXPLORATION BY UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY RESULTS IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF ENTERPRISES ABLE TO COMPETE FOR DOMESTIC MARKET

The year 1933 may be appropriately celebrated as the three hundred and twenty-fifth year of an endeavor to produce in America potash for domestic needs, for it is recorded (Krepp, T. J.: "Vicissitudes of the American Potash Industry", Journal Economic and Business History, August 1931) that in 1608 the London Co. included, with its colonists, Poles and Germans "to produce soap ashes and other chemicals."

The early American potash industry was dependent upon wood ashes, and potash was made from wood ashes at Piscataqua, N.H., as early as 1631 and in Maine a few years later. South Carolina in 1707 subsidized the production and exportation of potash, but on account of the low potash content of the trees in the South Atlantic States her hopes were doomed to disappointment. Massachusetts in 1735 enacted measures to encourage potash production, and in 1741 granted a limited monopoly. This was followed by a monopoly in Rhode Island in 1753.

As early as 1750 American potash was found in English markets, and it was soon given encouragement by being entered duty free, largely through the efforts of Thomas Stephens, a producer of potash in the Colonies, who was awarded a grant of £3,000 "for his experience in introducing the manufacture of potash in the British plantation in America."

So little potash was produced during the Revolutionary War period, in spite of the great abundance of trees suitable for its manufacture, that at one time Massachusetts advertised a bounty of £100 a ton for potash manufactured in the United States, and potash was accepted in lieu of taxes.

During this time the manufacture of potash was understood by a relatively small group of men, and the products reaching England from different parts of the world ranged from poorly processed wood ashes to high-quality salts. Moreover, the price fluctuated greatly, at times stimulating and at times stifling production. The chief periods of export from America during Colonial times were between 1752 and 1757 and between 1764 and 1773, when the annual value of the exported salts was about $250,000.

From the Revolutionary War until after the Civil War the value of the American potash exports increased greatly, and, except for a few years, ranged in total annual value from $500,000 to $2,000,000 and in price from about $100 to $200 a ton. According to the census of 1850, production of potash was America's most thriving chemical industry. At that time 569 plants were reported producing potash from wood ashes. Curiously enough, France, from which the United States now imports considerable potash, was then our best customer.

YIELDS FROM WOOD

According to C. E. Moore, in the report of the Twelfth Census, 1900, the amount of potash obtainable from different kinds of trees varies considerably. The yield from chestnut was only 2 pounds from 5 tons of wood, but pine yielded 8, maple 18, and elm 39 pounds. American production was stimulated by the movement of the population into areas having forests that furnished high yields of potash, such as those south of the St. Lawrence River and the Great Lakes, and continued to thrive until the end of the Civil War, when there was a great decline, attributable not so much to the cutting off of the timber as to the perfecting of the Le Blanc process for making soda ash and the substitution of sodium salts for potash in making soap for world trade as well as domestic trade. As late as 1900, 67 plants reported a production of 1,782 tons of K_2O from this source, declining until the World War, when it was again revived.

The American potash industry based on wood ashes did not have its prime importance in export trade, important as that may have been during the days when there was little to sell abroad and much to buy, but from early Colonial days its service to the American people in the manufacture of soap, chemicals, explosives, glass, dyes, and other materials was of far greater value. Some people still remember when the ash man used to drive through the streets of the towns of the Great Lakes States shouting "Soap for ashes!" and trading a cake of soap for 2 bushels of ashes.

The second stage in the demand for potash began with the discovery of potash by analysis of brine from a well started in 1839 near Stassfurt, Germany, while exploring for salt; also from the discovery of potash salts in a nearby shaft in 1857, and the determination in 1858 that the salts were valuable as a fertilizer soon after Liebig had published his research on that subject. Mineral potash was first utilized in 1860, when Dr. Frank established a factory near the Stassfurt shaft for the production of potash from these salts.

At first, as the crop production from virgin American soils declined, new fields were cleared and new territory was settled. This procedure could not be continued indefinitely, however, and in time potash became an agricultural necessity. As a fertilizer, wood ashes were largely incidental, and until the present time the United States has depended largely on German potash for agriculture.

SEARCH FOR NEW SOURCES

The search for new sources of potash in America has been a long and persevering task, particularly since 1910, when Germany, to maintain its prices and its monopoly, passed certain restrictive laws that in effect required American purchasers to surrender advantageous contracts. This action aroused the American Congress, and consequently in 1911 an act was passed providing funds to search for domestic sources of potash and to perfect processes of extraction of potash from various types of materials. This act provided the basis for the systematic search by the Geological Survey and other Government agencies that has been in progress ever since. The Geological Survey has sought mainly for suitable supplies of natural soluble potassium salts. The search has now culminated in the finding of adequate reserves of soluble mineral potash and the beginning of a potash industry in this country capable of competing with the foreign producers. Total expenditure by the Geological Survey since 1910 and the Bureau of Mines since 1926 in the search for potash has been about $750,000. This sum is less than the value of the first full year's production from a mine recently developed in New Mexico as an outgrowth of the congressional act mentioned in the foregoing.

When Germany placed an embargo on potash, January 30, 1915, investigations of domestic sources of potash were fortunately well under way. Potash had been discovered in brines of deep wells drilled in Texas; in the western lakes of Nebraska; in Albert Lake, Oreg.; Searles, Minn., and Owens Lakes, Calif.; and in marsh lands in Nevada, Texas, and California. Studies had been made of deposits of leucite in Wyoming, alunite in Utah, greensands in New Jersey, and feldspar in different States, salt deposits from East to West, and potash available in dust from cement mills. Studies had also been made by other agencies of organic substances such as sugar-beet wastes, kelp, wood ashes, distillery wastes, and wool scourings.

By 1915 wood ashes had definitely ended their 3 centuries of dominance as a source of potash in America, and had been supplanted by brines; but the production of potash from brines will soon be superseded by production from soluble mineral potash salts.

Aided by the information already gathered by the Geological Survey, the American consumers of potash readily turned to known sources to supply their needs. The recovery of potash from any of these sources was slow to get under way. However, stimulated by prices 5 to 10 times those of pre-war years, American producers supplied a notable amount of potash until imports again became available.

As might have been expected, many promotional schemes were organized to capitalize the potash shortage during the war period, though without chances of permanent success. As early as 1915 potash was produced from Nebraska brines, Utah alunite, California cement-plant dusts, California kelp, and wood ashes from several States.

WAR-TIME PRODUCTION SUMMARIZED

The futility of attempting to supply American potash needs from organic substances and from mineral industrial wastes is well illustrated in our war experience. With few exceptions, all plants utilizing these sources ceased operating when or before the price of potash dropped to $200 a ton.

Investigations of marshes and dry lakes as a source of potash were well worth while, inasmuch as most of our potash used during the war was produced from such places.

In 1918 potash was produced in 21 States and Puerto Rico by 128 plants, which yielded 54,803 tons of K_2O, the greatest amount ever produced in America up to that time. Nebraska furnished 53 percent of the total; California, 34 percent; Utah, 7 percent, and the other 18 States and Puerto Rico, 6 percent. Brines were the principal source of potash, being utilized by 27 plants, of which 19 were in Nebraska. These plants produced 24,330 tons of potash, or 73 percent of the total American production. Kelp supplied 9 percent; molasses distillery waste, 6 percent; alunite, 5 percent; cement and blast-furnace dusts, beet-sugar water, wood ashes, wool washings, and other sources, 7 percent. The total output in 1918 represented about 22 percent of our normal annual consumption. Of the 128 producers, 51 reported potash from wood ashes, but they produced only 673 tons, or less than 8 producers obtained from Steffens water from beet-sugar refineries. The average yield per plant from wood ashes was only 13 tons, as compared with an average of 1,471 tons for the 27 plants producing from brines. Alunite, with 655 tons per plant for the 4 plants, showed the second highest average yield.

SUBSURFACE EXPLORATION

Subsurface exploration for soluble potash salts and brine deposits was begun by the Geological Survey in 1911, near Fallon, Nev., in what was formerly Lake Lahontan. By the end of the drilling program in 1917 it had drilled at Timber Lake, Silver Peak Marsh, Columbus Marsh, Black Rock, and Smoke Creek Desert, Nev., and at the south end of Death Valley, Calif.

Examinations were made also of samples from wells drilled in Deep Springs Valley near Muroc station, and at Cadiz Lake, Calif., and in Railroad and Dixie Valleys and at Ash Meadows, Nev. Numerous salt deposits, particularly in the eastern half of the United States, were also investigated.

The occurrence of potash in surface brines in the trans-Pecos area, Texas, was mentioned in 1904 (Richardson, G. B., U.S. Geological Survey Bulletin 260, pp. 578, 1904), and one of the salt deposits to gain early attention was the Permian salt basin, in Texas and New Mexico, one of the very large salt deposits of the world. Attention was drawn to the subsurface possibilities of this basin by the Survey in 1910, in the first volume of Mineral Resources that contained a chapter on potash. Two years later, potash was reported in the brines of the well at Spur, Tex., by J. A. Udden. The search for potash in oil-well cuttings, brines, and core tests in this basin has been continuous since that time. Many are familiar with the reports by Survey geologists, White, Steiger, Hoots, Darton, Lang, Mansfield, and Schaller, on the progressive steps in the investigations that preceded the present developments.

After several years of intensive study, representatives of the Geological Survey, in cooperation with the University of Texas, selected a site near Cliffside, Tex., to drill for potash. This site was in that part of the basin showing the best indications for potash up to that time. The test hole, completed at a depth of 1,703 feet, late in 1917, was disappointing. In the meantime the E. J. Longyear Co. drilled a core test hole for private interests near Carlsbad, N.Mex., near the western edge of the salt basin and a few miles southwest of where the United States Potash Co. later discovered potash. No potash minerals were found, but a location a few miles farther east would have been exceedingly valuable in 1917.

The first soluble mineral potash salt identified from deposits in the United States was polyhalite. This identification was made by R. K. Bailey, of the Geological Survey, February 17, 1921, in samples from the Bryant well, near Midland, Tex. In 1924 a sample of drill cuttings from the Crescent Eagle well, east of Green River, Utah., was turned over to the Geological Survey by A. G. Burnett and identified by R. K. Bailey as carnallite. This was the first time an occurrence of this mineral had been reported from American sources. A month later a sample from Texas that had been privately identified as sylvite was sent in by D. C. Barton, and this identification was confirmed in the Geological Survey. Early in 1925 a sample from a greater depth in the Crescent Eagle well was examined and found to contain sylvite. Only a few months later potash was found in a well drilled by the Snowden-McSweeney Oil Co. on a Government oil and gas permit held by V. H. McNutt. An abundance of polyhalite and a small quantity of sylvite were identified by Bailey in cuttings from this well. Previous to drilling this hole neither of these minerals had been reported from New Mexico sources. The discoveries in Texas and Utah did little to invite core drilling, but the discovery in New Mexico, in beds less than 2,000 feet deep, stimulated intensive exploration by diamond drilling.

The first core test hole drilled by Snowden-McSweeney for potash was started April 14, 1926. In June the Federal Potash Exploration Act was approved, and late in July the first Government drilling locations were made in New Mexico.

RESULTS OF DRILLING

As a result of drilling to date, the area in which some potash minerals have been found within the Permian basin constitutes about 40,000 square miles (Mansfield, G. R., and Lang, W. B.: Government Potash Exploration in Texas and New Mexico. A.I.M.E. Technical Publication 212, 1929). In this one core-test hole has been drilled for about each 500 square miles. The area considered most promising for potash minerals other than polyhalite covers about 3,000 square miles, in which one core-test hole has been drilled for each 50 square miles. In 100 square miles of this area one hole has been drilled to each 2 square miles, and 33 square miles has been proved to contain as much as 14 percent of K_2O in the form of sylvite in beds 4 feet or more in thickness. This area of 33 square miles, small as it may seem, is more than half the size of the area under development for potash in France. Only a few square miles contain salts that can be sold without enrichment in competition with imported manure salts.

The zones of enrichment are numerous and vary in richness and thickness. The term "beds" has been used to designate zones where the potash salts are concentrated, and I have distinguished 40 such beds that have been cut by the drill in the proved area, half of which are above the anhydrite in the sylvite zone.

The sylvite zone at the shaft contains a section of 82 feet and another of 58 feet that average about 9 percent K_2O. The bottom 10 feet ranges from 25 to 30 percent of K_2O over the area, which is now being mined.

Considering that more than $1,000,000 has been spent by Government and private agencies in core drilling for potash in the Permian salt basin of New Mexico and Texas, and that the cuttings from many other wells have been examined, any proposed new prospecting for potash must be considered highly speculative, even with the definite information now available.

The most attractive deposits of sylvite, carnallite, polyhalite, and langbeinite so far found in the Permian basin lie within the 100 square miles of prospected land east of Carlsbad. The sylvite deposits that are over 4 feet thick and contain over 14 percent of K_2O provide a reserve estimated at more than 100,000,000 tons of K_2O. Carnallite is not considered of present value except as a source of salts for drilling solution. The best showing of carnallite is the bed which I have designated "no. 17" and which is cut by the United States Potash Co.'s shaft. Langbeinite is found in the lower sylvite zone, but except in two or three localities is of low grade.

Polyhalite is the most abundant of the potash minerals, both in number of beds and in extent of deposits. However, polyhalite in a single bed over 4 feet thick and containing over 12 percent of K_2O has not been proved to be continuous over a very large area. One reason for this is that the development of polyhalite has not yet been seriously considered, and as some of the most promising polyhalite deposits lie some distance below the lower sylvite zone, and only a few holes have been cored deeply enough to test these lower beds, more prospecting is needed before any area can be considered proved sufficiently to open a mine solely for polyhalite. The polyhalite beds vary in thickness and in the amount of anhydrite present. Within short distances a rich polyhalite bed may change to one with a high percentage of anhydrite, and for this reason closer drilling may be needed than has been required for sylvite before reliable estimates of reserves of polyhalite can be made. There can be little doubt of the adequacy of reserves of polyhalite to meet requirements when a demand is developed for this mineral. One of the best polyhalite beds so far found was cut at a depth of 1,250 feet in a private core. It is 9 feet thick and averages 13.5 percent of K_2O.

COMPOSITION OF POTASH MINERALS FOUND IN NEW MEXICO AREA

(According to Dana)

Polyhalite	$K_2SO_4.MgSO.2CaSo_4+2H_2O$ 28.9% K_2SO_4 15.6% K_2O
Langbeinite	$K_2SO_4.2MgSO_4$ 42.1% K_2SO_4
Sylvite	KCl 52.4% K
Carnallite	$KCl.MgCl_2+6H_2O$ 26.8% KCl

With the known reserves in New Mexico and the reserves in Searles Lake it is doubtful if the other potash resources exploited during the World War will again assume commercial importance unless the potash should become a component or byproduct salt.

The technic of core drilling in the Permian salt beds developed as drilling progressed. Diamond, bort, and stellite bits were used. A 2½-inch, double-core barrel containing special features for a minimum circulation on the cut core was worked out in the early drilling for the Snowden-McSweeney Co. and has been used with modifications in drilling since that time. The drilling solution likewise was improved progressively. Longyear tried oil and then salt brines as a circulating solution. The solution used in later drilling in New Mexico consisted of a saturated solution of sodium and magnesium chloride. The importance of constant control to see that the solution was kept at full strength was not always appreciated. Late in 1930 potassium chloride was added, and in 1931, in place of purchasing high-priced potassium and sodium chloride, the salts from the United States Potash Co.'s mine were used to make a saturated solution, to which magnesium chloride was added. This was further improved by requiring the drillers to preheat the solution prior to circulation. Mud has even been added in new solutions in the belief that etching of the cores would thereby be reduced. Dependence for good core is now placed on close control of the saturation of the solution.

GAS AND WATER ENCOUNTERED IN SHAFT SINKING

The no. 1 shaft of the United States Potash Co. is 20 feet 4 inches by 5 feet 6 inches inside of the timber. It is divided into four compartments and is 1,062 feet deep. It was sunk 80 feet below the mine workings to provide an ore pocket and opportunity for skip loading. It was started in December 1929, and the first shipment of potash was made in January 1930.

In sinking, air-hammer machines with nonrotating chisel bits, similar to those used in tearing up street paving, were used.

These hammers were found to work satisfactorily in the soft formations and eliminated the necessity of shooting, which greatly reduced the shattering effect on the shaft wall and permitted excavating within shaft dimensions. About 50 gallons of water a minute was struck in the upper formations, and a water tunnel was driven nearly around the shaft and a sump and pump were placed in it.

Gas high in nitrogen, with appreciable quantities of methane and hydrogen, and under heavy pressure was encountered when certain polyhalite beds were cut, but the pressure was soon dissipated after the round was shot. This gas was flammable when mixed with air, but by fortunate circumstance and skillful handling no injuries occurred. The presence of hydrogen, which is found also in European potash mines, though not in coal mines, is an interesting feature.

The shaft was lined with Port Orford cedar. The air compartment was first separated from the hoisting compartments with wood, but this was later changed to sheet-metal lining. On completion of shaft 2, the shaft is to be fireproofed.

Shaft 2, about 2,000 feet south of shaft 1, is 15 feet 10 inches by 5 feet 6 inches inside of timbers and has three compartments. It was sunk to a depth of 955 feet since July 1932, and was connected to the main south entries from the no. 1 shaft on June 14. The limitation of the number of men permitted in the mine at one time prior to the completion of a second means of escape will be removed and the mine permitted to operate at full capacity as soon as the necessary changes are made in the ventilation. Prior to reaching the water sands in this shaft, two holes were drilled about 15 feet north and south of the shaft site and grouted, in an attempt to test and partly seal the water-bearing strata, and when the shaft was sunk to a depth of 183 feet, two series of holes were drilled to complete cementing off the water. In sealing the water in the formation 253 tons of mud, 2½ tons of excelsior and cotton hulls, and 4,600 sacks of cement were pumped into the formation. The shaft was then sunk through the water-bearing formation and a 65-foot section of concrete lining was put in from 230 to 295 feet. This concrete lining ranged in thickness from 36 inches at the bottom to a minimum of 12 inches at higher levels.

The third shaft in the field is being sunk by the Potash Co. of America. This shaft was started February 11, 1933. Unless delayed in sealing out the water, this company should also begin production this year, and thus become the second large enterprise depending entirely on potash for its output and the third potential source for large tonnage in the United States.

PRODUCTION CAPACITY EQUAL TO DEMAND

Potash deposits in New Mexico lie relatively flat and in such manner that they can be readily mined by the room-and-pillar system. The crude salts are of a grade suitable for market after grinding as 25 to 30 percent manure salts. To meet any emergency the United States Potash Co. stored about 30,000 tons in the open during the summer of 1932, to be ground and shipped or refined as occasion demanded. The capacity of the mine is ample to meet any anticipated demand. The refinery, 16 miles from the mine, has been operated at a capacity considerably over 100 tons daily, and the product is meeting the requirements of the chemical as well as the fertilizer trade.

With the completion of the shaft of the Potash Co. of America, New Mexico has a better opportunity than others to hold the production unless unfavorable freight rates, taxes, and royalties should stimulate development elsewhere. The royalties under State leases are usually 5 percent, and the State receives 37½ percent of the royalties collected by the Government.

The importance of the potash deposits to the railroads is indicated by the fact that the product from the United States Potash Co.'s mine during July, August, and September 1932 was handled by 33 different railroads on its way to chemical or fertilizer factories. Shippers by water have likewise been benefited.

The market trend with respect to the grade of salts imported prior to 1932 is reflected in the decline of imports of kainite and manure salts. Imports of kainite dropped from over 600,000 tons in 1910 and 1911 to 113,938 tons in 1932. Manure salts reached its peak in 1928, with 453,242 tons; sulphate in 1930, with 96,608 tons; muriate in 1931, with 306,047 tons. These maximum figures may be compared with total imports for fertilizer of 287,929 tons for 1932, which is only slightly more than twice the American production of 143,120 tons and less imports than for any other year since 1921.

The capacity of the Searles Lake refinery, in California, may be increased 50 percent on the completion of construction now suspended. As only a few months' time is required to construct new refineries or add additional units, American producers are in a position to contract up to the full American demands for potassium chloride salts, except for low-grade salts that have a value less than the mining costs and freight to market. The American sulphate salts in their natural state are at the border line of value between freight cost and selling price and are possibly of too low grade to complete with imported salts without lower freight rates or some enrichment.

No effort has been made by American producers to enter the sulphate market, so that European producers still have no competition in the field of the sulphate and the low-grade salts.

The fact that the price of potash in American markets after the World War did not increase in proportion to the cost of other commodities caused a large saving to the American consumer. But the question arises whether the low prices resulted from the long-established policy of a certain group in Germany who believe in low prices and increased production, or whether they have been maintained low to discourage development in America, Russia, Poland, Spain, and the Dead Sea. The fact that there was no premium on potash immediately after the World War and that those producing here were forced to cease operations before having a chance to adjust their operations gradually to a rapidly falling price may have some significance. New operations certainly were discouraged by this fall in price.

The present American situation is encouraging in that our resources are sufficiently large to eliminate all fear of a lack of supply of potash of a grade sufficiently high to meet any price that may be set abroad, short of dumping, and that the American farmer will get a higher potash content in his mixed fertilizers without a proportionately increased cost.

SULPHUR NEAR POTASH BEDS IN NEW MEXICO

We still lack potassium sulphate, but this is no problem, as natural sulphur deposits are reported to have been found close to the New Mexico potash development. Sulphuric acid is available at El Paso. Hydrogen sulphide gas in large quantities is being burned in the air at the Hobbs oil field, a short distance to the east. Sulphur is available along the Gulf coast. Some one of these sources will be used when it is advisable to convert the potassium chloride to sulphate. Polyhalite is found over widespread areas and can be supplied to the sulphate market without refining, or, according to the Bureau of Mines, it can be treated in a reducing flame to yield potassium sulphide containing 77 percent of K_2O, the cost of freight being thus greatly reduced. Polyhalite, either raw or enriched, can supply the necessary sulphate and magnesium salts when it becomes economical to do so.

American exports of potash salts increased from 15,532 tons in 1929 to 31,291 tons in 1931. The exports went largely from California and may reasonably be expected to increase in the Pacific markets.

In conclusion, potash is now a world commodity, like nitrate and phosphates, and its production is no longer under the control of a single nation.

POTASH AS AN INTERNATIONAL COMMODITY IN 1932—A PAPER PRESENTED AT THE EIGHTY-SIXTH MEETING OF THE AMERICAN CHEMICAL SOCIETY, CHICAGO, SEPTEMBER 10–15, 1933

(By J. W. Turrentine, fertilizer and fixed nitrogen investigations. Bureau of Chemistry and Soils, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D.C.)

A discussion of potash as an international commodity would naturally concern itself principally with that potash derived from the refineries of the German-French Cartel since that group still controls 81 percent of the world's potash output. Interest lies, however, not so much in the performance of that well-entrenched and highly efficient organization as in the efforts of other groups in various parts of the world to acquire a share of this business. The advantages possessed by the German-French Cartel represented by excellent deposits, experienced staffs, economical chemical processes yielding valuable byproducts, cheap water transportation virtually from the mine to the foreign port of entry, constructive world-wide educational propaganda, and above all, sympathetic governmental solicitude, represent a combination of favorable circumstances, natural and designed, not easily matched. Such odds arouse the spectator's interest while leading him perhaps to place undue emphasis on any gains registered by the less-favored contestants. There can be no question of the great service rendered the agricultural world by the German potash producers in educating the farmer in the profitable use of potash fertilizers and providing him with abundant supplies at prices both reasonable and stable. The business volume developed is a measure of that service—but service carries no immunity against competition.

The delivery charge on commodities in international trade in the absence of protective tariffs represent their most vulnerable point of attack as offering a margin to cover possibly higher production cost in a more restricted market. Delivery charges on potash salts can be reduced by raising the potash content. But this has its limitations. Further reductions are to be accomplished by the enlightened cooperation of transportation interests, volunteered or enforced. Nationalism as expressed by self-continence in essential commodities, augmented by pressure to create new industry wherewith to combat unemployment, adds impetus to the contest. We therefore find in various localities of the world consistent efforts being made to participate in the potash trade with results that are rather surprising, considering the unequal odds involved. The problem is much easier and more logical where only a domestic market is the goal, but to invade a foreign market so long preempted and efficiently served, calls for increased assurance.

While 81 percent of the world's potash output is ascribed to the German-French Cartel, this position in international trade appears somewhat less impregnable when it is recalled that 76 percent of the German and 50 percent of the French output are currently consumed in their respective domestic markets. Their exports represent 66 percent of the world trade in potash conducted outside of those two countries.

America continues to be the leading purchaser of foreign potash and is the principal battle ground on which the relative strength of competitors will be tested; already there have been received at our ports deliveries of potash from Spain, Chile, and Palestine, too small, however, to do more than indicate the mental trend of the contestants.

The year 1932 witnessed unprecedented changes in relative values. In that year potash imports dropped to the low level of only 292,000 short tons of fertilizer salts, equivalent to 96,000 tons K_2O and valued at $5,900,000 as compared with 1929's imports of 783,000 short tons of salts, equivalent to 300,000 tons K_2O and valued at $18,000,000.

In the same year (1932) sales of domestic potash amounted to 121,000 tons of salts, equivalent to 56,000 tons K_2O, to be compared with 1929 sales of 101,000 tons of salts, equivalent to 58,000 tons K_2O. Thus, within a 4-year period, while there has been a decline of 68 percent in imports, the decline in domestic sales has been only 2 percent; and the ratio of domestic sales to the total quantity of fertilizer potash consumed has advanced from 16 percent in 1929 to 37 percent in 1932.

Sweeping conclusions are not properly to be drawn from this year's record admittedly abnormal with a 50-percent reduction in fertilizer sales. The question might properly be asked, however, why this reduced potash consumption has been made at the expense of the imported rather than the domestic commodity. Whether this is fundamental and permanent, or casual and temporary, can only be determined when fertilizer consumption returns to its normal level.

That the domestic industry is now in a position to greatly expand its output is common knowledge. The mines of the United States Potash Co. near Carlsbad, N.Mex., can produce high-grade muriate to the capacity of its refinery, which is reported to be 36,000 tons per year ,ad in addition thereto can supply 25-percent manure salts to the further capacity of its two shafts. The American Potash & Chemical Co. at Trona, Calif., had expanded its refining capacity to 150,000 tons of 98-percent muriate just prior to the recession in volume of the fertilizer trade. There is accordingly an apparent capacity to produce, represented by these two refineries alone, a quantity of potash approximating 38 percent of our average potash requirements during the past 10 years.

Capacity to produce must be differentiated, however, from capacity to market as inherent in the latter are the various factors, known and unknown, to be proven as to their importance only by the course of events. With a second production unit imminent in the New Mexico field, that of the Potash Co. of America, a lively contest for a larger share of the American market is in prospect.

There is probably not a potash-production unit of importance in the world today that is operating at capacity. The wholesale closing down of operating shafts that has taken place in Germany in years past proves the fallacy of overemphasizing such figures, however gratifying they may be to those of us who have sought to foster the domestic industry, and furthermore conveys the warning, not lightly to be ignored, of the consequences of overdevelopment beyond the capacity of an accessible market. To broach the subject of overproduction with 63 percent of the domestic market still supplied from foreign sources would appear illogical; but should it eventuate that the accessible market is to be definitely circumscribed by a delivery charge, certainly an overproduction could be developed within that circle regardless of whether the American market as a whole is being supplied or not. The farmer will continue to buy his potash where he can obtain it at the lowest price. Achievements to date having been accomplished without favor of protective tariff, that expedient will scarcely be invoked to affect the balance. The answer will be rendered in terms of relative production costs and delivery charges, with concentration of salts affecting the latter. With deposits and skill in mechanization and chemistry inferior to none within our possession, the issue relates to delivery charges as the determining factor.

It must not be forgotten that the German-French producers stand as a unit in defense of their existing markets. Those who would dispute their prerogative, accordingly, have nothing to lose from unity of action as contrasted with individual and unorganized effort.

GERMANY

As a consequence of overexpansion the German industry has long been the subject of state control designed to preserve invested capital and profits without price increases that would jeopardize markets. The results as a whole have been favorable, although the farmers of the world have long been taxed to make good the unwise investments of the earlier potash producers.

The advantages of German state control were illustrated during the year under review. With the potash industry confronted by a 32-percent decline in business in the preceding year, the Reich Government, in collaboration with the Potash Syndicate, established a credit guaranty whereby, to protect and foster fertilizer sales, dealers were granted prior liens upon farmers' produce; there was also established a fund of 90,000,000 marks, to which the Government subscribed 57 percent and the interested fertilizer syndicates the balance, to refund losses from fertilizer sales limited to 25 percent of total deliveries. In consequence there was a decline of only 5 percent in domestic business volume as compared with the much more formidable percentages of preceding years.

The 1932 business volume of the German Potash Syndicate, of 847,000 tons K_2O (derived from approximately 6,300,000 tons of the mined salts), represented a decline from sales of 964,000 tons in 1931, there being a 27-percent decline in exports in addition to the moderate decline in domestic business.

Exports of 684,000 tons of salts marked a recession from the 932,000 tons exported in 1931. Of these, manure salts (of 18–42 percent K_2O) constituted 67 percent, while the higher grades (muriate, sulfate, and sulfate of potash-magnesia) represented 33 percent; of the former, the United States received 24 percent and of the latter 31 percent, a total of 177,000 tons of salts. As a mark of the wide distribution of German exports it may be noted that the balance of 500,000 tons of salts was divided among 40 other political units, from Iceland to Australia.

An item of interest worthy of passing note is Germany's growing trade in potassium nitrate, in 1931 amounting to 36,000 tons, 9,000 tons of which was purchased by the United States, the balance being distributed among many other countries.

FRANCE

The French, through their alliance with the German producers, possessing a fixed ratio of foreign sales of potash, are affected similarly by conditions in the export market, particularly in the United States. They lack, however, quite so large and stable a home market such as is possessed by the Germans, that market absorbing only 50 percent of output as contrasted to the 76 percent enjoyed by their ally. The advantages of a home market are appreciated, however, as shown by consistent efforts directed toward its development, efforts that have resulted in the expansion of that market from 46,000 tons K_2O in 1919, the year in which the Alsatian mines were sequestered, to the current 200,000 tons.

Thus during the year under review French production was reduced to 304,000 tons K_2O from the 367,000 tons in 1931, a recession of 17 percent in production compared with that year and of 40 percent compared with the peak output of 1930. Exports declined to 322,000 tons of potash salts from the 1931 level of 476,000 tons, a loss of 32 percent. Constituting this total were 235,000 tons of low-grade and 87,000 tons of high-grade salts, principally muriate; 55,000 tons were consigned to the United States. This latter figure, when compared with the 1929 shipment of 326,000 to the United States, represents a reduction of 83 percent.

SPAIN

Spain in 1932 advanced to fourth place among the potash-producing countries, with her output of 410,000 tons of mined salts, equivalent to 55,000 tons K_2O, challenging the position of the United States as third among producers. This represents a 95-percent increase (K_2O basis) as compared with the preceding year. Spain is frankly testing the export market, selling abroad 38,000 tons K_2O while disposing of only 15,000 tons in the domestic market. The product is the muriate, mostly high grade. With her deposits distributed among Spanish, Belgian, French, and German interests, it remains for the future to disclose what share of the international trade in potash she will be able to grasp and whether natural advantages represented by good deposits and proximity to ports will equal the close cooperation of the opposing interests.

POLAND

Poland, since regaining her national status, has ambitiously attempted the exploitation of her potash properties, secured from Austria, to supply the domestic market while participating in the foreign. The contest has witnessed her decline from a production of 352,000 tons of the mined salts in 1929 to 142,000 tons (equivalent to 23,000 tons K_2O) in 1932. Confronted by the formidable competition of the nearby German producers, selling 110,000 tons of salts in Poland's home market (1929) while effectively contesting her foreign trade, a truce was declared whereby Poland secured her domestic market uninvaded and 4 percent of the foreign, only to find the home market shrunken to 82,000 tons of salts (13,000 tons K_2O), with a foreign trade amounting to only 60,000 tons of salts. In recognition of the potentialities and the essential nature of the home market, in 1929 consuming the equivalent of 79,000 tons K_2O, price reductions amounting to 23 percent have been granted. To the agricultural depression has been ascribed the reason for the reduced consumption of potash in Poland. But it may be noted that this decline has followed the withdrawal of the highly effective German selling agency from that field, a fact that may have more significance than a mere coincidence, it being occasionally intimated that Germany sells her competitors' potash as well as her own. It would appear that until Poland has rehabilitated her domestic market her position in international trade will be one of little relative significance.

RUSSIA

Russia may be tentatively described as the unknown quantity in the international potash situation. While emphasis is being placed on supplying domestic needs estimated in very large tonnages, trial shipments have already appeared at foreign ports. Remarkable progress has been registered in the development of deposits, concededly enormous in extent and of very good quality, against odds that appear quite formidable—isolation with respect to markets and rigorous climatic conditions affecting transportation. With the elimination of the criterion of profits as conventionally figured by us, there is no basis left on which to estimate the potentialities of a potash industry exploited under the communistic system where nationalistic aspirations, not private profits, are the motivating impulses. Despite natural handicaps, two mines are in operation and a third is nearing completion, with a full complement of refining and power plants and other accessories. A railroad has been completed and two others projected and large-scale developments of the Kama River to provide water transportation have been advanced. There seems to be no occas-sion to doubt that these deposits will be developed as the source of potash for Russian agriculture with an output of formidable proportions, but on what basis they are to be ascribed a future position of importance in the international trade in potash is not apparent at the present time.

PALESTINE

The Palestine potash project has received publicity possibly somewhat out of line with its importance as a contestant for international trade. Plans for the year contemplate an output of 10,000 tons of potash salts, of which 7,000 tons will be in the form of 80 percent muriate. Produced as a byproduct in the extraction of bromides from the Dead Sea brine, its output will be proportionately limited. Offerings have been made on the American market, but later withdrawn. German shipments to the Orient in 1932 aggregating 20,000 tons of high-grade salts, presumably passed through the Suez Canal, indicating a more logical market for the Dead Sea potash than the United States, a statement that applies likewise to the Spanish product.

Summarizing the potash activities of 1932, there is revealed a total world production of approximately 1,330,000 tons, K_2O basis, a recession from 2,000,000 tons produced in 1930. The 81 percent of this total, which represented the German-French contribution, is a decline from 91 percent, which was their share in the preceding year.

A recession of only 35 percent by which the world potash industry has declined in recent years is moderate when compared with the performance of other industries and reflects the substantial stability of the potash business. It has been subjected to a severe test and has proven its worth. The whole world is now giving thought to agricultural rehabilitation as the foundation on which to rebuild prosperity. There is no escape from fertilizers as an essential of scientifically constructed or reconstructed agriculture as an instrument for increasing both scope of activities and profits. Amply demonstrated on all major crops, although being applied in this country to only a too small percentage of the total, this principle is subject to enormous expansion, particularly so as we seem now to be breaking loose from some of our earlier inhibitions. National planning for land utilization, involving diversification with intensive methods, depends on soil fertility, its restoration and maintenance as its foundation. Fertilizers are destined to play an increasingly important role, thereby progressively expanding the market for potash from both existing and prospective sources.

POTASH IN INTERNATIONAL BARTER

In certain respects the Government program of international trade agreements resembles a gigantic plan of barter. International trade has always been regarded, theoretically at least, as essentially an exchange of goods. This theory falls down when confronted with the fact that certain nations have gained most of their prosperity from their export trade. Of course, one of the parties in every swapping of possessions usually comes out ahead in the actual value of the articles exchanged; although the other may have got something intangible which, to him, was more desirable. This factor of the intangible is a large one in the international swapping of goods. It is always the needier of the two parties that can be most benefited by the intangible gain, although it is not always that the results of the exchange are thus shared.

It would seem that certain advocates in this country of the reciprocal-trade program are not of the opinion that the United States should seek the tangible benefits in international exchanges of goods. This is a Nation rich in resources and in the products of industry. Its needs are relatively few. Theoretically, then, the intangible advantages of an exchange of goods are of little value to the United States in comparison with the usefulness of cash export markets. Nevertheless, the Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce has said:

"Barring some unexpected development, our merchandise balance, in international trade, must sooner or later be readjusted by something like a half a billion dollars per year to create what might be described as a healthy condition in our international trade."

Exports of merchandise from the United States in 1933 exceeded imports by $225,000,000. To make the $500,000,000 readjustment in the international merchandise balance it would be necessary that this country import goods to the value of $275,000,000 more than that of its exports. That may be good politics. It may be good theoretical economics, serving to offset the value of intangible or invisible exports which are of limited, if any, benefit, even in the actual balancing of international payments. But is it good business? There is something of value in the spending of money in travel abroad. There is little of value for the United States or for any substantial group of its people in international financing. Why go on a spending spree in foreign markets to bring about a theoretical balance of payments? Is not American industry entitled to make a net profit in international trade?

Some talk there is in certain quarters that Russia desires greatly to sell or trade potash into the United States. Russia is a nation rich in natural resources and becoming "well fixed" in terms of manufactures. Intangible advantages in an exchange of goods are not attractive to Russia. That nation wants cash, or its equivalent, credit—on long terms. Russia cannot sell potash, or trade it, in other countries and at the same time make any material progress in its plan of agricultural sufficiency. Available data indicate that Russia will be able to produce from 3,000,000 to 5,000,000 tons of potash salts annually within 2 or 3 years. Other data from similar sources show that the Russian agricultural plan will require more than that annual supply of potash salts. The agricultural plan might be deferred if Russia should be able to trade its potash for cotton and grains, or should see a future advantage in building up credit by selling potash at a price below that now prevailing in the world markets. In either case, the future of Russia alone would be benefited.

Potash salts are now cheaper in the markets of the United States than they were just prior to the World War and doubtless will get still cheaper. The production of potash salts in the United States is a new, but rapidly growing, enterprise. It is a nationally essential enterprise. American farmers and their political friends should not forget the high prices of potash in the war years. They should not be ignorant of the fact that only by means of domestic production of potash salts can a recurrence of those high prices be avoided. Russian potash at a price however low would afford only a temporary advantage to American agriculture, the period of which would be limited by the desires of the Soviet with reference to its agricultural program. The American potash industry is not yet sufficient for domestic needs. Its growth should not be stunted or stopped to gain any temporary advantage in price. Reciprocal trade with Russia, or with any other country, to the extent that it may be at all practicable, must not be carried on at the cost of the life of an essential American industry.

RUSSIAN ECONOMIC NOTES

[From the Department of Commerce, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Mar. 15, 1934]

SOVIET POTASH—FOR THE COLLECTIVE AND STATE FARMS

PRAVDA, January 12, 1934.—The Soviet Union possesses the largest potash deposits in the world, and with the help of an army of workers, engineers, and technicians has constructed and put in operation a potash plant with first-class technical and chemical equipment. Potash is the most essential element for increasing the agricultural production of the country and for freeing Russia from dependence on potash chemicals of all kinds, such as Bertolet salts, potassic saltpeter, caustic potash, and others, for these can all be produced from Soviet potash salts.

The first potash mine was built with complete mechanical equipment, and is expected to turn out 4,500 tons a day, with a present daily production of 2,200 tons, to be increased soon to 3,000. The latter figure has already been reached, the production in December having been 62,000 tons, and for some days in that month as high as 3,000. A complete underground town is being built at a depth of 250 meters. There are 13 kilometers of tunnels and passages, with electrified railroad lines, cranes, scrapers, and other mechanical appliances. At this depth there is a station for the cars, and a mechanical workshop. Self-dumping cars discharge the salts into bunkers after being hauled to position by an endless chain. The miners' community lives and works underground, served by electric trains running in passages cut through the blue-white sylvinite deposits.

The potash mines at Solikamsk are being worked by a whole series of different plants: The salts mined are ground in a crusher, then transferred for concentration to the chemical plant, which is constructed to handle 3,500 tons of salts a day, and to turn out 600 to 650 tons of 85-percent KCl.

At the present time the plant is treating 2,000 to 2,200 tons a day, the record for December being 48,500 tons.

For the potash workers 1933 was a year of energetic assimilation of new technique required. The young workers were afraid of the huge plants which they were expected to manage, finding that their school preparation was far from sufficient for practical running of the machines. Practice, however, has greatly increased the skill and productivity of the underground workers, and as the organization of labor improved, standards have been raised. The enthusiasm and increasing efficiency of the workers and engineers in the potash mines are a guarantee that this enterprise will be a model one.

Near the mines a new town has been constructed, in which 12,000 workers and their families live. There is a school with a 7-year course, day nurseries, dispensaries, a bathhouse, and shops; a club, kindergarten, hospital, and other buildings are under construction. There is still a shortage of dwelling space, however, and also of electric light. In 1933 large truck gardens were started, and vegetables produced locally took the place of those brought from outside.

Thirty kilometers from Solikamsk, near Beresniki, a second potash mine is being opened up, for production on the same scale as the first. This will be completed during the second 5-year plan. It is being built by Soviet engineers and workers without the benefit of foreign technical leadership and advice. The first shaft of the new mine has been driven, through the deep frozen surface layer, to the salt strata, the first of which is 4 meters thick at a depth of 245 meters, the salt here being of considerably higher quality than in the first mine.

At the first mine equipment is being installed for a carnallite-magnesium combine, one of the undertakings of the second 5-year plan, to produce light-weight metals. Experiments have shown it to be possible to produce magnesium, which will be turned out in quantity within the next year or two.

There was a time when Russia was entirely dependent on foreign countries for its potash salts, and wood ashes were the only domestic source of potash and were collected and saved for this purpose. Now Soviet Russia possesses deposits several times larger than the Stassfurt, over an area estimated at 1,500 square kilometers.

These deposits are of the greatest interest to the peasants working the collective and State farms; it has been calculated that every ton of potash fertilizer adds 4 to 6 tons of sugar to sugar beets, 35 to 40 tons of tubers to potatoes, 83 tons of feed turnips, 24 tons of hay or perennial grass, 75 tons of cabbages, 10 dry tons of makhorka, etc. Experiments already made have demonstrated that this increase in products is readily possible. The facts should be brought to the attention of the machine-tractor stations and the collective farms.

RUSSIAN POTASH ON THE WORLD MARKET COMPETITION TO GERMAN-FRENCH SYNDICATE

Moscow, February 8, 1934.—The first shipment of 450 tons potash salts from the potash plant at Solikamsk has found its way to the world market. The first soviet potash went from Amsterdam to Japan, which is of interest if one considers the present political aspect. Holland and Belgium are supposed to have great interests in the Russian export. A party from Denmark visited the mines on the Upper Kama last summer.

Shafts nos. 1 and 2 of the richest potash deposit in the world are now working. The deposit at Solikamsk has been estimated at 15,000,000,000 tons of pure K_2O. The deposit is only 200 to 250 meters below the surface. At present the mine can technically deliver 1,000,000 tons crude salt containing 20 percent pure salt. The concentration plant is likewise in full swing.

At Beresniki, 30 kilometers to the south, a further plant is under construction for the same output, and one shaft has already been constructed. The same geological structure prevails here as at Solikamsk. The two shafts at Solikamsk have been put down by German experts, who employed the method of freezing. At Beresniki the same method is to be used, but this work was done by the soviet engineers.

Production at Beresniki for 1935 is expected to be 1,500,000 tons, which quantity seems to be feasible. Output at the Solikamsk mine will likewise be increased to the same quantity. The output of 12,000,000 tons per year (approximately equal to German production in 1928–29) is expected to be reached at the end of the second 5-year plan. Production in 1933 was 600,000 tons. There are great transport difficulties to be overcome.

Potash will serve as a means of obtaining foreign exchange. The appearance of a further competitor on the world market becomes seriously for the German-French potash monopoly, the more so as other competitors (Spain, Dead Sea) are also coming forth with their product.

Other potash deposits have been discovered on the north coast of the Caspian Sea and Turkmenistan. These deposits are favorably situated for the cotton district of Central Asia. At present, however, the competition of Solikamsk and Beresniki is of importance.

DEVELOPING SPANISH POTASH—OPERATION OF THE CATALONIAN CONCESSIONS

Amid the wide area of the potash deposits in Catalonia, Spain, the concession operated by the Potasas Ibericas S.A. is in the neighborhood of the town of Sallent, 45 miles from Barcelona, on the banks of the river Llobregat. The potash formation exists throughout the area covered by the concession, and the following information, gained when the first borings were made in 1930 and 1931, was confirmed during the sinking of the shafts and the operating of the potash deposits.

The depths at which the beds occur are comparatively high and vary from 820 to 1,300 feet. The upper part of the formation contains several seams of carnallite, at least two of which are from 7 to 15 feet thick and can be very easily mined. They contain an average percentage of 14.5 of K_2O. The lower part contains two seams of sylvinite, one of which is 13 feet thick and of an average percentage of 26 of K_2O. The other is thinner (5 feet) but exceptionally rich, containing 38 percent to 40 percent K_2O. This seam contains strata of pure sylvinite (56 percent K_2O), which is easily separated by selective mining. The above seams are of such extent that, with a daily removal of 1,200 tons, production is assured for five centuries.

For the present the Potasas Ibericas Co. contemplates working only the sylvinite seams, which are the easiest to enrich and which should suffice for more than 100 years. They contain a very small proportion of impurities, and the chief seams show on analysis less than 1 percent of clay.

The sinking of no. 1 shaft began in July 1931 and was finished in July of the following year; it is 985 feet deep and 14½ feet in diameter, and is equipped with a 142-foot tipple of massive concrete construction and 800-horsepower electric winding gear. Elevation is carried out by cages carrying 5,000 pounds net weight, the installation guaranteeing the raising of 150 tons per hour. Preparations have been made for the future substitution of skip elevation, which would increase production to 300 tons per hour. No. 2 shaft is being sunk, and will be 1,100 feet deep.

Since operations were commenced in October 1932 more than 3 miles of galleries have been completed. From 12 to 16 stopes are being operated simultaneously, and this number can be easily increased.

At the pit head automatic equipment sends the potash salts into the grinding and grading plants, a concrete building, six stories high. Simple lay-out between grinding and grading permits of the production of the various qualities of potash salts efficiently graded.

The warehouse, parabolic in shape, is a large concrete building 97 feet wide, 65 feet high, and 400 feet long. On leaving the grading plant the potash salts are sent through an underground passage, and by means of an elevator to a conveyor operating the full length of the warehouse, where they are sorted according to test. This warehouse has a capacity of 25,000 tons, and a scraping device removes the stored potash from the warehouse and distributes it onto conveyors, whence it is tipped directly into railway wagons.

Actual mining began on October 12, 1932, i.e., 15 months after the ground had first been broken for the sinking of no. 1 shaft. Production, which started at 300 tons per day, reached 500 tons in December 1932, and now approximates to 1,000 tons per day.

During the first period Potasas Ibericas S.A., profiting by the high average content of K_2O in the natural product, was able to produce all the commercial qualities by sorting without resorting to any special treatment of the sylvinite. In order, however, to increase its production of high-grade salts, the company is at present building a refinery equipped to treat 50 tons of ore per hour. This will be in operation early in August 1934. A plant for mixing and bagging is being constructed to complete the equipment.

The second shaft, which is also 14½ feet in diameter, will be finished by the beginning of December next. It will be used primarily for ventilation purposes and to facilitate the lowering of timber and other materials, thus relieving no. 1 shaft and enabling increased production to be carried out in the latter.

The installation of Potasas Ibericas S.A. has been designed with great care and has many technical novelties. The concrete buildings, especially the tipple and the warehouse, are of bold and original conception and are wisely designed.

The mine is connected by a private siding with the railway leading to the port of Barcelona. Negotiations with the authorities, now pending will give the company a private wharf on the dock of Morrot. This dock, situated at the entrance of the port, has free access, and, as its depth of water is 31½ feet, it will accommodate the largest steamers. As soon as the concession is granted, Potasas Ibericas will build on this wharf a warehouse equipped with the latest modern improvements, permitting the handling of potash and the loading of steamers in minimum time. At present the company uses the services of an important stevedoring organization in Barcelona, which provides several sheds at the Expana wharf. The capacity of these warehouses is 10,000 tons. POTASH PRODUCTION

By Potasas Ibericas, S.A.

Potasas Ibericas, S.A., operates mining concessions situated in the potash field of Catalonia (Spain), 45 miles from Barcelona, in the neighborhood of the town of Sallent. A series of borings made in 1930 and 1931 gave information which was confirmed during the sinking of the shafts and during later operations.

The potassic formation exists throughout the total area of the concession. The depth at which the beds occur varies from 820 feet to 1,300 feet. The formation is as follows:

(a) The upper part contains several seams of carnallite. At least two of these are from 7 to 15 feet thick and can be very easily mined. They contain an average of 14.5 percent K_2O.

(b) The lower part contains two seams of sylvinite, one of which has an average content of 26 percent K_2O and is 13 feet thick. The other is thinner (5 feet) but exceptionally rich, testing 38 percent to 40 percent K_2O. This seam contains strata of pure sylvinite, 56 percent K_2O, which is easy to separate by selective mining.

The above seams represent such reserves that with a daily output of 1,200 tons production is assured for 5 centuries. For the present Potasas Ibericas, S.A., contemplates working only the sylvinite seams, the sylvinite being a richer and easier form of potash salt to enrich. These reserves will suffice for more than 100 years.

PRODUCTION FACILITIES

The sinking of no. 1 shaft was begun in July 1931 and was finished in July 1932. The shaft is 985 feet deep and 14½ feet in diameter. It is equipped with a 142-foot tipple of massive concrete construction and an 800-horsepower electric winding gear. No. 2 shaft is now being sunk and will be 1,100 feet deep.

The Potasas Ibericas, S.A., concessions embrace a potash deposit of regular formation composed of thick pure layers and mining is thus particularly easy.

Rational utilization of efficient mechanical equipment, electric cutters and rock drills, scrapers, etc., the lighting of galleries and stopes by electric projectors permit operation and mine transportation under the best conditions.

At the pit head automatic equipment carries the potash salts into the grinding and grading plant, a concrete building, six stories high. A simple layout from the grinding to the grading permits the various qualities of potash salts to be efficiently graded.

The warehouse, parabolic in form, is a large concrete building, 97 feet wide, 65 feet high, 400 feet long, with a capacity of 25,000 tons. A scraping device removes the stored potash from the warehouse and distributes it on conveyors that unload direct into railroad cars.

MINING PROGRESS

Mining began on October 12, 1932, only 15 months after the first ground had been broken for the sinking of no. 1 shaft. Production, which started at 300 tons per day, reached 500 tons per day in December 1932 and now approximates to 1,000 tons per day. The development of the underground work and management of long mechanically equipped stopes permit easy and rapid increase of production.

During the first period Potasas Ibericas, S.A. profiting by the high average content of K_2O in its natural ore, could produce all the commercial qualities by sorting, without resorting to any special treatment of the sylvinite. In order, however, to improve its mining conditions and increase its production of high-grade salts, the company is at present building a refinery equipped to treat 50 tons of ore per hour. The refinery will be in operation early in July 1934. A plant for mixing and bagging is being constructed to complete the equipment.

A second shaft, 14½ feet in diameter, was sunk, being finished by December 1933. It will be used primarily for ventilation purposes and to facilitate lowering timber and materials. It thus relieves no. 1 shaft and will enable increased production there.

The installation of Potasas Ibericas has been designed with great care and discloses unusual technical innovation. The concrete buildings, in particular, and the tipple and the warehouse are of bold and original conception and are judiciously planned. United States industry has contributed materially to the installation in furnishing various items of equipment.

Although the town of Sallent and the neighborhood of Manresa, Sempedor, San Fructuoso, Balsareny, Berga, etc., provide good facilities for housing employees and workmen, Potasas Ibericas has undertaken the construction of a garden city, built according to the Catalonian style and customs, where the employees are housed. The buildings are located round a large mansion of ancient construction, surrounded by parks. A garden is provided for every tenant adjacent to his dwelling.

SHIPPING ARRANGEMENTS

The mine is connected by a private siding with the railway leading to the port of Barcelona. Negotiations with the authorities, now pending, will give Potasas Ibericas, S.A., a private wharf at the entrance of the port, with free access and a depth of water of 31½ feet, which will accommodate the largest steamers.

As soon as the concession is granted Potasas Ibericas will build on this wharf a warehouse equipped with the latest modern improvements, permitting the handling of potash and the loading of steamers in minimum time. At present Potasas Ibericas, S.A., use the services of an important stevedoring organization in Barcelona, which provides several sheds at the Espana Wharf.

Potasas Ibericas has organized a transportation department to facilitate a regular supply of potash for the various stocks which Potasas Ibericas maintains for various countries.

To give service to American buyers Potasas Ibericas, S.A., is accumulating at several ports on the Atlantic coast stocks of the various qualities of potash salts used in the United States and is making shipments from Barcelona to the United States on the United States ships.

The company is represented in the United States by the International Selling Corporation, with offices at 70 Pine Street, New York City. By means of the efficient warehouse service and the frequent sailings between Barcelona and the United States ports, orders can be filled promptly.

The potash salts supplied by Potasas Ibericas since operations commenced in 1932 have met with universally favorable reception on account of the regular percentage and good friable condition. Potash which has been stored for more than 6 months in a country with high humidity was found to be entirely free running on arrival at its ultimate destination.

THE POTASH INDUSTRY

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in the remarks made by me on April 14 concerning the development of potash in New Mexico, I sought to place before the Senate available information concerning this very important new industry. Since

[1] Importations to the United States expressed in short tons are:

	Short tons
January	18,855
February	19,462
Total	38,317

that time, I have obtained some additional information which I believe will be helpful in a study of the potash situation. Therefore, supplementing those remarks, I desire to have published in the RECORD the following statements and articles which have been called to my attention:

First. A statement just issued by the Bureau of Mines on the production of potash during 1933. This was issued on April 20 by the Mineral Statistics Division of the Bureau.

Second. An editorial entitled "Bargaining Tariffs", in which potash is mentioned, from the March 1934 issue of the Mining Congress Journal, a monthly publication of the American Mining Congress.

Third. Special Circular No. 382 of the Chemical Division of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the United States Department of Commerce. This circular is entitled "Spanish Potash in 1933", and is written by Consul General Claude I. Dawson, stationed at Barcelona. It is the most thorough statement regarding Spanish potash, which at the present time is the most dangerous competing commodity that has yet appeared.

Fourth. An article from the Oil and Colour Trades Journal of March 2, 1934, telling of the conference between the Franco-German cartel and the producers in Spain. From this article, it would seem that the owners of the Spanish mines have now been induced to operate in conjunction with the Franco-German Potash Trust.

If this is true, it would be very easy for the Franco-German and Spanish operators to get together and divide the world potash market, including America. This article shows that the American potash producers can encounter a very strong organization of foreign operators whose apparent design would be to keep as much of the American market as possible. With cheap wages and governmental subsidies, such an organization would be in a position to work great injury to the potash industry in America.

In this connection I would also mention that in my former remarks, in answer to an inquiry propounded by the Senator from Louisiana, it was indicated that the potash industry in America was at the present time in bad condition. I desire now to explain that I am informed the potash producers in America in 1933 had a profitable year, and if dumping is not permitted, 1934 should likewise be profitable. The industry does not fear legitimate competition, but it is my information there is grave fear of what may result to the potash industry of America if wholesale dumping of potash from foreign countries is permitted in the United States.

It has been suggested that information concerning the uses of potash would be interesting in this discussion. Time does not permit any extended remarks in this connection, but I will suggest that a report was made by Dr. Oswald Schreiner on "potash hunger" shortly after the war. It is very interesting, and among other things says that the effect of the shortage of potash during the war years was shown in a number of agricultural crops. The crops studied were the potato and cotton crops, but the foliage reactions were also shown in crops such as tobacco, sweetpotatoes, buckwheat, beans, and a number of other crops. In the pamphlet on Potash Development in southeastern New Mexico, by H. I. Smith, it is said:

> The value of potash as a fertilizer is not alone in the increase in crop production, but in the increase in secondary products, such as meat, butter, and sugar, and the better quality and consequent increased sale value of tobacco, vegetables, and other products from properly fertilized lands. Increased use of potash therefore depends upon the recognition of its value as measured by increased and beneficiated crops.

One of the companies operating in my State recently prepared a statement concerning the uses of potash. In order that the information therein contained may be available, I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD as part of these remarks.

Inasmuch as it is desired to print some copies of the comments made by me the other day, I ask consent to make some minor changes in my original remarks, I also ask unanimous consent that the articles mentioned today be printed in the RECORD immediately following the exhibits in my remarks of April 14, and that the remarks made today be printed in the permanent edition of the RECORD as a part of my comments on April 14.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERTON in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Finally, I should like to say that any statement I may have made about the departments in Washington not being conversant with the potash industry in America should not be construed as referring to the Geological Survey, the Bureau of Mines, or the Department of the Interior, and especially the General Land Office. These departments have all been keenly alive to the development of potash in the United States and are thoroughly conversant today with all matters connected with the industry. These departments have been very helpful in assembling the information used by me. Mrs. Funk, of the General Land Office, has been very gracious in assisting me in getting information concerning the potash industry. Being greatly interested in New Mexico, she also is very much interested in everything pertaining to potash.

It is my desire that the Members of Congress and all the officials of our Government may become familiar with the development of the potash industry in New Mexico. I am sure the study will be helpful and interesting.

I ask to have printed in the RECORD the data mentioned by me in opening my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATISTICAL AND ECONOMIC SURVEYS, MINERAL STATISTICS DIVISION

POTASH INDUSTRY IN 1933—ADVANCE FINAL SUMMARY

To supply the mineral industry promptly with data on potash production and markets during the past year, the following information is furnished by the United States Bureau of Mines.

Potash produced in the United States in 1933 amounted to 333,110 short tons of potassium salts, equivalent to 143,378 short tons of potash (K_2O), an increase of 133 percent in gross weight and of 131 percent in K_2O content over 1932 (143,120 tons gross weight, and 61,990 tons K_2O).

The sales of 325,481 tons of potash salts with a potash content of 139,067 tons in 1933, were 2 and 3 percent, respectively, less than the production, and increased 168 percent for potash salts and 150 percent for K_2O content over 1932 (121,390 tons salts, 55,620 tons K_2O). The value of the potash salts sold was $5,296,793, an increase of 152 percent over 1932 ($2,102,590). The average unit value was $16.27 in 1933, compared with $17.32 in 1932. About 47,000 tons of potassium salts with an available content of 21,000 tons of K_2O remained in producers' stocks on December 31, 1933.

Increased output of crude and refined salts at Carlsbad, N.Mex., accounted for much of the large increase of production and marked the second year of shipments from this locality. The other sources of potash salts were salines from Searles Lake at Trona, Calif., molasses distillery waste at Baltimore, Md., and dust from cement kilns near Hagerstown, Md. Small quantities of alunite were shipped from Marysvale, Utah, chiefly for experimental use as fertilizer material. The available potash (K_2O) content of the salts sold in 1933 ranged from 23 percent to 62.5 percent.

The potash salts imported for consumption into the United States in 1933, according to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, amounted to 479,430 short tons, with an estimated equivalent of 165,124 short tons of potash. This represented an increase of 45 percent in gross weight over the imports for 1932 (330,964 tons). Eighty-nine percent of the gross imports were used chiefly in fertilizers, and this product—425,571 short tons (K_2O equivalent approximately 142,360 short tons), valued at $8,351,428—increased 48 percent in gross weight and 46 percent in value over 1932 (287,929 tons gross weight, 96,170 tons approximate equivalent in K_2O, valued at $5,711,347).

BARGAINING TARIFFS

There has been some uncertainty in the minds of industry as to just how far the President would go when it came to revision of tariffs. After his message to Congress on March 2, little of speculation remains. He asks authority to vary tariff rates in the negotiation of reciprocal trade treaties and intimates that there are industries in this country lacking proper economic base for continued existence. The authority is requested for a 3-year period and the bill (immediately introduced) provides for a 50-percent variance in existing tariffs and that no commodities will be added to or taken from the free list.

Again we ask: What industries are to be sacrificed?

The mining industry in many of its units is utterly dependent upon protection for its existence. Among the base industries now protected are lead, zinc, tungsten, quicksilver, potash. Potash for instance, is one of our youngest industries and already is faced with the Russian menace for its market. The Government has appropriated $500,000 for potash exploration and since 1926 has been developing an industry. In 1933 and 1934 the royalties and taxes paid into the Federal Treasury for this industry will return this appropriation. Are we to permit foreign producers to wreck this highly strategic industry?

Certainly in involving the products of the mining industry in bargaining tariffs, the President must give consideration to national emergency industries and not forget the peasant and coolie labor which is the competition of these industries. Unless a lot of common sense is utilized, mine products are in jeopardy of sacrifice to the greedy agricultural group. It is high time that mining men made themselves heard, felt, and seen.

SPANISH POTASH IN 1933

Consul General Claude I. Dawson, Barcelona

Spain has assumed a prominent position in the world potash trade. Whereas in 1929 its exports were equivalent to only 2 percent of the bulk tonnage exported by Germany, the subsequent steady rise for 4 years in Spanish trade, concurrent with a decline in German export shipments, changed the ratio from 50 to 1 to 4 to 1.

PROSPECTING DEVELOPMENTS—CONCESSIONS

Potash was discovered in Spain during 1912 as a result of exploring the extent of the rock-salt deposits of Cardona in the mine Rumanie in the district of Suria. A shaft 70 meters deep was sunk and a gallery cut 30 meters into the deposit. Bore holes were also put down by the owners of the concession, Senors Macary and Viader, who at the same time increased their registered holding to some 15,000 hectares.

As soon as the discovery became known a German organization entered the field and by the close of 1913 had applied for concessions covering 80,000 hectares, extending in a wide strip some 70 kilometers long from near Vich, in the Province of Barcelona, into the Province of Lerida, near Calaf.

The excitement continued until during 1914; the Spanish Government decreed, on October 1, that no new concessions should be granted until the deposit had been more carefully explored under the auspices of the Instituto Geologico.

The boring of the Sociedad Macary y Viader continued, and three other recognized concessionaires were active in investigating their holdings. The most active of these was La Fodina, which concentrated its drilling near Boxadors and near Senus.

By this time it had become evident that the deposits were of sufficient extent and quality to assure Spain's independence as far as its potash requirements were concerned.

American and German interests investigated the field but took no action, partly because of the outbreak of the war. In spite of this obstacle the Solvay interests succeeded in acquiring the concession of the Sociedad Macary y Viader and has since that time been the dominating company in Spain. Other companies, notably the La Fodina and the Industria y Comercio, continued work during 1915 putting down shafts, but without preliminary bore-hole reconnaissance.

The work of the Solvay Co. continued during 1916, when it spent 1,500,000 pesetas, and preparations to spend 40,000,000 more made. The war caused the suspension of all activity during 1917 except that of the Solvay Co. at Suria, and the investigations in progress at Cardona. The year 1918 saw the allotment of 800,000 pesetas for the completion of the investigations of the Instituto Geologico. Solvay also continued its bore holes to a depth of 1,000 meters, and began its first permanent shaft as well as projected its railway from Manresa. This railway was completed in 1919.

In 1920, the company Minas de Potasa de Suria, S.A., was organized to acquire from the Solvay Co. its Suria interests. The construction of buildings and plant was prosecuted actively, and late in the year the shaft finally reached the ore body.

Of the other companies, La Sociedad Fodina, S.A., and La Sociedad La Minera were still in existence, but the only company actively at work was the Sociedad General de Industria y Comercio. Its mine at Cardona had offered great problems because of the influx of water, but these were finally overcome. This mine, together with the Minas de Potasa de Suria, S.A., were the only ones to actively survive the post-war depression. It was not until 1929 that the Potasas Ibericas, S.A., financed by French interests, secured a concession in the vicinity of Sallent. Its actual production, however, did not begin until 1932.

During the period immediately prior to the depression, American interests again entered the field but abandoned their operations during 1930–31.

The companies La Fodina, S.A., renewed the investigation of its mine Alpha, near San Mateo de Bages; and La Minera, S.A., did the same with its mine Sallent, near Balsareny and Sallent. These operations were, however, suspended as the result of the depression. La Minera, S.A., still maintains a nominal office at the residence of its president in Barcelona.

The mines at present in operation are those of the Minas de Potasa de Suria, S.A., those of the Sociedad General de Industria y Commercio, which is now controlled by the Sociedad Union Espanola de Explosivos, and those of the Potasas Ibericas, S.A. Sixty-three other mines have been operated at various times. Of these, 42 are in the Barcelona district and 15 in the Lerida district.

FEATURES OF THE DEPOSITS

The Spanish potash deposits are located chiefly in the Province of Barcelona, although extensions of the potash zone extend into the adjacent Province of Lerida. The general belt extends from near Vich southwest to the Lerida border, a distance of about 70 kilometers. The breadth of the zone is approximately 40 kilometers. Outcrops of potash minerals exist, but none of these are of importance and the deposits as a whole lie beneath an overburden of marl and sandstone, and in some cases rock salt. The potash deposits are irregular in shape. In some cases they are in strata 70 to 80 meters thick, but in others they have been proved by bore holes to a depth of 1,000 meters. The potash is usually associated with rock salt.

The predominating potash salts are carnallite and sylvinite, which in most of the deposits occurs in approximately equal quantities. In addition, small amounts of kainite are also found.

MINES IN OPERATION DURING 1933

Minas de Potasa de Suria, S.A., is the oldest and the largest of the producing mines. Its mine is located at Suria, to which the company constructed a railway from Manresa and is reported to have invested 20,000,000 pesetas in equipment, housing, etc. Its shaft is now down about 300 meters, and its deposit has been proved by bore holes to a depth of 1,500 meters. It is now producing at the rate of approximately 150,000 tons of carnallite and sylvinite per annum. Its mine average of K_2O in 1932 was 10 percent. It is exporting only carnallite and keeps in reserve approximately 35,000 tons for use in Spain under the terms of its concession. The sylvinite in this mine is about equal in quantity to carnallite but it is being stored, because, it is stated, the potassium content is so much above the requirements for normal potash salts that sales would be considered uneconomical without payment of a premium for the higher-grade salts. Recently strikes have interfered with the operation of this mine, and at present prices the management insists that the margin of profit is negligible. Its refinery produces important quantities of potassium chloride and potassium sulphate.

This company is still controlled to the extent of approximately 90 percent of its capital by the Belgian Solvay interests. It does all its selling through the Potasas Reunidas, S.A., Campoamor 20, Madrid, which is in turn controlled by the N. V. Potash Export Maatschappij, of Amsterdam, Netherlands.

Sociedad Industria, Comercio y Mineria, was organized in 1932 to assume the operation of the mine at Cardona belonging to the Union Espanola de Explosivos. It should not be confused with the older and now defunct company the Sociedad General de Industria y Comercio. The new company is merely a subsidiary of the Union Espanola do Explosivos.

The mine of this company is located near Cardona. The salts as mined in 1932 had an average K_2O content of 16.5 percent. It exports as a crude mineral the sylvinite, which in its mine contains only 20–22 percent K_2O. The carnallite runs only about 12 percent and is not suitable therefore for export. This company also possesses a refinery which produces muriate of potash analyzing from 40 to 62.7 percent K_2O and sulphate of potash. The annual production at present is about 80,000 tons of sylvinite.

Potasas Ibericas, S.A. was organized in Spain in 1929 to develop a deposit near Sallent. The control of the company is French, it being a subsidiary of Mineria y Metaux, of Paris. This company is at present the largest shipper of Spanish potash to the United States. Its original capital (2,000,000 pesetas) was increased in 1931 to 10,000,000, and in July 1932 to 13,250,000 pesetas.

This company is as yet not in possession of a refinery and does not attempt to use its carnallite, which runs about 12 percent K_2O. Its mine average of K_2O in 1932 was 18 percent. Nearly all of the production of 100,000 tons annually is exported, chiefly to the United States. The exceptionally high-grade deposits has made it possible to deliver salts from 15 to 50 percent K_2O without treatment other than sorting and crushing. A refinery with a capacity of 50 tons of ore hourly is expected to be in operation during July 1934.

PRODUCTION—HOME CONSUMPTION

Spanish potash production and consumption for the 3 years ended 1932 are shown in the following table:

[In metric tons]

	Production		Sales, K_2O content	Apparent Spanish consumption (K_2O)
	Commercial salts	K_2O content		Domestic	Imports	Total
1930	286,436	28,039	26,127	15,175	12,323	27,498
1931	250,629	28,116	30,299	11,250	8,346	19,596
1932	409,888	54,811	52,717	14,944	8,889	23,833

Most of the domestic consumption is for fertilizer, and both the Union Espanola de Explosivos and the Minas de Suria produce a range of fertilizers in which potash is an important constituent. The Minas de Suria are bound by their concession to provide for the domestic potash needs of Spain before making any provision for export, and regularly reserve 35,000 tons for this purpose.

Both the sulphate and the chloride are used in fertilizer preparations, but the sulphate is still almost entirely imported, although the Union Espanola de Explosivos is producing some. Potasas Ibericas, S.A., states that it is exporting virtually its entire output.

UPWARD TREND OF EXPORTS

Exports, which had averaged less than 25,000 tons annually during 1929–1931, rose to 66,000 tons in 1932, and almost 200,000 tons in 1933. The sharp upward trend was due largely to the entrance of Potasas Ibericos in world trade.

Exports of potash salts from Spain, 1928–33

[In metric tons]

Exported to→	1928	1929	1930	1931	1932	1933
United States	9,980	21,591	18,372	22,438	10,635	51,855
Sweden					23,270	7,580
United Kingdom	1,013	3,002	2,540	1,489	8,855	5,561
Japan	1,518				5,172	14,427
Netherlands			260	1,219	3,900	83,883
Denmark					4,400
Italy	2,557				2,331	3,069
Norway					3,680	7,143
Germany	118	38		300	1,245	75
Colombia					1,220
Chile					400
Belgium	70				752	11,470
China				198
Argentina			1,353
Philippines	1,006
France		65				3,583
Other countries	46	84	10	5	129	9,410
Total quantity	16,258	24,780	22,536	25,649	65,989	198,656
Total value (thousands of gold pesetas)	3,089	5,204	4,733	3,747	10,149	19,896

The decline in values is due primarily to the negotiating of the 1933 contracts at the low level of the depression in general commodity prices that characterized the close of 1932. The mines reported that profits are impossible at these levels, as labor and other costs are rising. An increase in values per unit is anticipated for 1934.

It will be seen from the statistics that notable changes have taken place during the past few years in the relative purchases of the different countries. The United States has consistently continued to be among the most important buyers, but in 1932 lost first place to Sweden and during 1933 to Netherlands. The steadily mounting purchases of Japan are also recorded.

SPAIN TO JOIN FRANCO-GERMAN POTASH AGREEMENT?

Reuters Trade Service reports that negotiations have opened at Nice between representatives of the Franco-German Potash Entente and representatives of the Spanish potash producers for the conclusion of an agreement between the two parties. Up to the present, continues the news agency, only one of the Spanish potash mines has joined the Franco-German organization, and this company only owns something over a fifth of the 112,000 hectares for which concessions have been granted in Spain. Moreover, at present no grouping of the Spanish mines has taken place, which will tend to render negotiations difficult. Not until 1925 was the exploitations of the Catalan potash deposits seriously taken in hand. The stratum now being worked consists, at a depth varying from 275 to 450 meters, of several layers of carnallite with an average pure potash content of 14.5 percent, but principally of layers of sylvinite (20 to 24 percent pure potash, but reaching in some parts 40 percent, with a thickness of 1 to 4 meters). It is probably not an exaggeration to estimate the production capacity of the Spanish potash mines at nearly 200,000 tons of pure potash a year for the 32,578 hectares already being worked on the concessions granted. In 1933 the output was 95,000 tons, against 65,000 for 1932. The following tables give the output of pure potash (K_2O) for the principal countries:

	1933	1932
	Tons	Tons
Germany	900,000	847,000
France	320,000	306,000
United States	110,000	56,000
Spain	95,000	65,000
Poland	30,000	33,000
Other countries (Palestine, Russia)	35,000	7,000
Total	1,490,000	1,314,000

It will be remembered that the Polish potash mines joined the Franco-German Entente in March 1932. By this agreement the Polish mines obtained exclusive rights for the Polish home market, as far as their production was able to meet requirements, and a quota of 4 percent in sales by members of the entente in countries other than reserved countries. It remains to be seen whether it will be as easy to secure the participation of the Spanish mines.

USES OF POTASH

Without an adequate supply of potash in American soils we could not have:

Thin-skinned, heavy, and juicy oranges and grapefruit or sweet cantelopes for breakfast.

Meaty, highly colored tomatoes, crisp lettuce or celery, or firm, sweet watermelons for lunch.

Tender, not stringy, root crops and other vegetables of high quality for dinner.

An evening smoke of mild, free-burning tobacco.

A lawn in summer green with healthy clover.

Two years after our importation of potash was stopped by the World War symptoms of potash hunger appeared generally in potato fields. In that short time the available potash supply was so depleted that yields and the percentage of marketable potatoes were greatly reduced. The quality of seed potato stocks was greatly impaired, with even greater indirect damage.

Sweetpotatoes that formerly grew smooth and chunky became long and stringy and rotted in storage.

Diseases caused by lack of sufficient potash took a heavy toll in tobacco and cotton fields, lowering the market grades and commercial value.

The vigor and health of perishable vegetables and fruits from the commercial producing areas were so reduced that losses in shipping were very serious.

This experience showed the depleted condition of our soils. At present farm crops are removing seven times as much potash as is being restored.

Potash is to plant life what transportation is to industry—the vital force. The plant takes in raw materials, minerals and water from the soil. In the leaves, the factory of the plant, with the energy from sunlight and by a process not duplicated by man, these raw materials are converted into food necessary for all human and animal life.

Not only is potash absolutely essential in this process, but the food substances made in the leaves could not be transported, or more properly translocated, without potash to properly make the fruit of the plant, whether it is the kernel of grain, the root or tuber in the ground, the fruit of the vine or tree, or the cotton in the boll.

With insufficient potash some results are chaffy corn, shriveled grain, lower market grades; low yields, off-grade potatoes; weak seed stock; long stringy sweetpotatoes that keep poorly in storage; thin-walled, rough, poorly colored tomatoes; root crops, poorly shaped and tasteless and stringy; citrus fruits, thick skinned and tasteless and juiceless.

The present need is not for greater production of farm crops but for higher quality, more for the consumers' dollars and more dollars for fewer acres for the farmer. Potash is the quality or health-giving plant-food element. Vigor, health, and the full utilization of the other plant-food elements is the part potash has to play.

It was only 2 years after the importation of potash was stopped by the World War that signs of potash starvation appeared in the large potato-growing districts. Rust, a potash-starvation disease, caused widespread damage to cotton. Tobacco diseases appeared in the fields, driving home the lesson how depleted the older farming soils were for potash.

The Indians showed the Pilgrims how to use wood ashes for potash. The wood-ash piles of the forests cleared by our pioneer forefathers once supplied the world with potash. The forests are gone; the soils are fast becoming depleted of their natural fertility. The discovery of potash in the United States means that we can be independent in the matter of our food supply.

Potash or potassium is an essential element in the production of chemicals that touch our everyday life, for—

Potassium alum is used for photography, the manufacture of paper, water purification, and in dyeing.

Potassium bromide is very essential in the manufacture of photographic film and papers; also used in medicine.

Potassium chlorate is essential to the making of all matches and fireworks, but especially safety matches.

Potassium carbonate, called pearl ash, is used in making glass and soaps.

Potassium ferricyanide makes possible the use of blueprints.

Potassium nitrate, or saltpeter, makes up 75 percent of the ingredients used in making gunpowder, used for blasting and mining purposes, and gives the red color to corn beef and ham.

Potassium permanganate has an extensive use as an oxidizing agent in laboratories and in the industries, and is widely used for disinfecting purposes.

Potassium perchlorate is used in making Javel Water, a household necessity for removal of stains.

Potassium iodide is extensively used in medicine.

So, in addition to being one of the three essential elements necessary for plant growth, food, flowers, cotton, and tobacco, potash or potassium is essential for industrial purposes that are indispensable for the satisfaction of everyday needs.

CONSIDERATION OF DISTRICT BILLS

Mr. THOMPSON obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield.

Mr. KING. I spoke to the able Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], the leader of the minority, in regard to a number of rather unimportant bills reported unanimously by the Senate District Committee a few days ago, all of which were recommended by the District Commissioners, and the Senator stated he had no objection to my asking unanimous consent to have them considered at any time I could get the floor. The ranking member of the committee on the Republican side, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], is here and knows about these bills and the fact that it was understood that we were to consider them and have them passed as soon as possible.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, for the present consideration of certain bills affecting the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REINTERMENT IN CONTAGIOUS-DISEASE CASES

Mr. KING. I send to the desk Senate bill 450, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 450) to empower the health officer of the District of Columbia to authorize the opening of graves, and the disinterment and reinterment of dead bodies, in cases where death has been caused by certain contagious diseases, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 93 of title 5 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia is hereby amended by adding thereto the following proviso: "Provided, That the health officer of the District of Columbia may, in his discretion, authorize the opening, under sanitary precautions, of any such grave and the disinterment and reinterment in the same grave or other suitable burial ground, of the dead body of any person who has died of any of the contagious diseases enumerated above."

DISPOSITION OF UNCLAIMED PROPERTY

Mr. KING. I send to the desk Senate bill 3013 and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3013) to amend sections 416 and 417 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 416 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia be amended by striking out the word "fifty" where it occurs in said section and inserting in lieu thereof the words "one hundred."

SEC. 2. That section 417 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 417. All property, except perishable property and animals, that shall remain in the custody of the property clerk for the period of 6 months, with the exception of motor vehicles, which shall be held for a period of 3 months, without any lawful claimant thereto after having been three times advertised in some daily newspaper of general circulation published in the District of Columbia, shall be sold at public auction, and the proceeds of such sale shall be paid into the policemen's fund; and all money that shall remain in his hands for said period of 6 months shall be so advertised, and, if no lawful claimant appear, shall be likewise paid into the policemen's fund."

CHANGE OF NAME OF FOUR-AND-A-HALF STREET SW.

Mr. KING. I send to the desk Senate bill 3257 and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 3257) to change the designation of Four-and-a-half Street SW. to Fourth Street was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the street designated as "Four-and-a-half Street", running south from the center of the Mall to P Street south, be, and the same is hereby, changed to Fourth Street, thereby giving this street for its entire length from Pennsylvania Avenue northwest to P Street south the designation of Fourth Street.

DISTRICT HARBOR REGULATIONS

Mr. KING. I send to the desk Senate bill 2714, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. The bill merely gives the Commissioners authority to pass necessary regulations for the control of the harbor front.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2714) to amend section 895 of the Code of Law of the District of Columbia was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, vested with authority to make harbor regulations for the entire waterfront of the city within the District of Columbia, to alter and amend the same from time to time as they may find necessary, and to fix penalties for the violation of such regulations which, however, shall not exceed fines of $500 or imprisonment over 6 months, or both: Provided, That whenever these regulations affect navigable waters, channels, and anchorage areas or other interests of the United States, such regulations shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War: And provided further, That whenever said regulations affect the waterfront within the District of Columbia under the jurisdiction of the Director of National Parks, Buildings, and Reservations, or affect the interests and rights of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, such regulations shall be subject to prior approval of the respective agencies.

FEES OF RECORDER OF DEEDS

Mr. KING. I send to the desk Senate bill 2641, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2641) to provide fees to be charged by the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That section 552 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia", approved March 3, 1901, as amended (D.C. Code, title 10, sec. 14, authorized by the act of May 29, 1928, and the joint resolution of Mar. 2, 1929), be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"On and after July 1, 1934, the fees prescribed herein, and all other fees in connection with the office of the Recorder of Deeds of the District of Columbia, shall be subject to change, from time to time, by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the said fees to be fixed by the said Commissioners with reference to the reasonable cost of the service rendered as the said Commissioners may determine. Also on and after said date the Recorder of Deeds of the District of Columbia and all employees in the office of the recorder shall be appointed by, and be under the administrative control of, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and all appropriations for salaries and other expenses of the said office shall be expended and accounted for in like manner as other appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia. It shall be the duty of the Auditor of the District of Columbia to audit the accounts of the recorder of deeds covering fees and emoluments received, and to make periodic reports thereof in writing to the Commissioners of the said District."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I may say that the fees of the recorder are so inadequate that there is a great deficit, and the purpose of the bill is to increase the fees. I may say, also, that all the bills for which I am now asking consideration are recommended by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator be good enough to state the purposes of the various bills when he presents them?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, ordinarily I should not think it wise to allow bills to go through in this way, but I know the background of the Senator from Utah. He has always objected to the immediate passage of anything which needs consideration, and for that reason I shall not interpose any objection, because I am of the opinion that he would not recommend anything that ought not to go through.

Mr. KING. The District Committee recommended the passage of this bill. There is present the former chairman of the committee, now the ranking member of the committee on the other side of the Chamber, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], and he and I unite in this request.

Mr. FESS. The Senator from Utah recognizes that the present procedure is generally considered a very unwise one.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, these are local measures, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia approve them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BOARD OF PUBLIC WELFARE

Mr. KING. I send to the desk Senate bill 3289, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3289) to transfer the powers of the Board of Public Welfare to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the purposes of the respective bills?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, with reference to the pending bill, S. 3289, the president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia has written me the following letter, which explains the matter much better than any words of mine could do:

COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, April 4, 1934.

Senator WILLIAM H. KING,
Chairman Senate Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR KING: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to submit herewith draft of a bill entitled, "A bill to transfer the powers of the Board of Public Welfare to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

This bill was prepared by the corporation counsel, at the request of the Commissioners, and the purpose of it is to transfer to the Commissioners all the powers and authorities now exercised by the Board of Public Welfare.

At the present time the Board of Public Welfare is an independent body having supervision over the workhouse at Occoquan, Va., the reformatory at Lorton, Va., the Washington Asylum and Jail, the National Training School for Girls in the District of Columbia and at Muirkirk, Md., the Gallinger Municipal Hospital, the Tuberculosis Hospital, the Home for the Aged and Infirm, the Municipal Lodging House, the Industrial Home School, the Industrial Home School for Colored Children, and the District Training School in Anne Arundel County, Md. Under existing law the supervision of the Board over these institutions, as well as the exercise of certain other powers and authorities vested in the Board, is free from the control of the Commissioners. The employees of the Board may be appointed by the Commissioners, upon the nomination of the Board, and may be discharged by the Commissioners only upon the recommendation of the Board. The Commissioners being responsible for the general welfare of the District of Columbia, their powers should equal their responsibility. It is, therefore, essential that the duties of the Board should be vested in the Commissioners.

The proposed bill is drafted to accomplish this purpose.

The Commissioners recommend early action on the bill.

Very sincerely yours,

M. C. HAZEN,
President Board of Commissioners.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all of the powers, authority, property, duties, and obligations heretofore vested in or imposed upon the Board of Public Welfare for the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, transferred to, vested in, and imposed upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. All employees of the Board of Public Welfare, including the Director of Public Welfare, shall become the employees of the Commissioners for such time as their services may be deemed necessary, and shall perform the duties imposed and exercise the powers conferred upon them by existing law and perform such other duties and exercise such other powers as the Commissioners may direct. Such employees may be discharged and new employees may be appointed by the Commissioners without recommendation or nomination of the Board. The unexpended balance of all appropriations heretofore and hereafter made for such Board, or to be disbursed by it, shall become available for the use of and disbursement by the Commissioners.

SEC. 2. Hereafter the duties of the Board of Public Welfare shall be to study from time to time the social and environmental conditions of the District of Columbia and to report to the Commissioners the results of its studies with its recommendations to further safeguard the interests and well-being of the children of the District of Columbia and to diminish and ameliorate poverty and disease and to lessen crime. Said Board shall perform such other duties, make such other recommendations, and exercise such power and authority as to subjects relating to the public welfare of the District of Columbia as the Commissioners may direct.

GOVERNMENT FINANCING

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, before we reached the final vote on the tax bill yesterday I had intended to submit a few observations, and deferred doing so only because of the desire of the Senate to reach final conclusion without further delay. The desire I had to speak at that time has been intensified somewhat by the report in the press this morning with reference to the financing of the Government's obligations by the Treasury.

The item I wish to discuss has to do with the success of the conversion of the fourth Liberty bonds. It will be recalled that about 3 months ago the Secretary of the Treasury announced a call of about $1,900,000,000 of the fourth Liberty Loan bonds. The response was not wholly satisfactory. Some 10 days ago only about $900,000,000 of that amount had been subscribed. Later the balance was taken up, and this morning we find this statement in the press:

> Of approximately $1,000,000,000 in fourth Liberties called for this month, exchange subscriptions came to $797,000,000. At the lower rate of interest this means an annual saving of nearly $8,000,000.

Then, further on, the statement proceeds as follows, this being a comment of the writer of the dispatch with a Washington date line, and not a statement of the Treasury officials:

> The Treasury did not say whether some of the $2,810,000,000 profit on dollar devaluation might be employed to retire the new call of bonds, nor were there replies to queries about the possibility that President Roosevelt might employ his power to retire interest-bearing securities with non-interest-bearing money.

That is a significant statement. The aggregate of the fourth Liberties now outstanding is $4,300,000,000. At 4¼-percent interest they cost the Government nearly $200,000,000 a year.

The President in his Budget message referred to the need for money this year, and said:

> In order to make clear to the Congress what our borrowing problem is for the next 6 months, permit me to remind you that we shall have to borrow approximately $6,000,000,000 of new money and in addition $4,000,000,000 to meet maturities of a like amount.

That is a statement of the immediate needs for financing. When the President made that statement in his Budget message it was rather shocking to those who had not refreshed their memories as to the maturing obligations that such an enormous amount as $10,000,000,000 would be needed in the next 6 months.

To date there has not been any obvious evidence that causes any great concern about the ability of the Government to meet these obligations. The further we go, and the nearer to the time of maturity we approach, the greater becomes our concern. The first evidence of our concern is that the Treasury seems to be compelled to avoid long-term commitments, and therefore is compelled to resort to short-term notes. So long as we confine ourselves to short-term financing, there ought not to be any serious difficulty in maintaining the credit of the Government if we stay within the limits of our ability. Just what is our ability is the problem.

Naturally there is one rather unfortunate injury to come from limiting the short-term notes. The liquid assets of banks lying idle will freely flow into short-term notes, even at a reasonably low rate because, first, thereby money not otherwise in use is employed; second, there is no commitment for a long term; and, third, there is really no jeopardy so far as ability to meet the obligations is concerned.

There is no doubt, with the equalization fund of $2,000,000,000 in the Treasury, that short-term notes can be kept at or above par; but when it comes to entering upon a long-term issue of Government securities it is quite obvious there is no market. The fact that there is no market is a condition that ought to concern us all. That condition is due to the enormous calls upon the Treasury. When we come to satisfy those calls there are only two ways in which it can be done: One is by taxation, and that must cover a long period of time, and the other is by borrowing.

It is obvious that we cannot meet these obligations by taxation, notwithstanding the fact that we are using a fine-tooth comb to find every available source of new revenue. There is no more striking illustration of that than what we have just done in the revenue act which we passed yesterday. The mail of every Senator is flooded with protests against further taxation. Every Senator, I believe, is answering inquiries about as I answer them—that the needs of the Treasury are such that there is no chance for lower taxes, there is no chance to eliminate taxes, and about all that can be done is to find new sources of revenue. Our concern is not to use that method which will reduce the revenue rather than increase it. So those who are writing urging us to reduce taxation and those who are writing urging against new taxation might as well discontinue their efforts.

One thing about which we ought to be greatly concerned is the selection of the best form of taxes, so as to avoid doing more injury than good.

The House sent over to us a bill calling for $280,000,000 of additional revenue. The Finance Committee, after long-continued hearings and after considerable debate, reported a bill designed to raise $330,000,000 of additional revenue, increasing by $50,000,000 the amount estimated to be raised by the House bill. Upon the floor of this body the Senate rewrote that bill, which, it struck me, was a very serious thing, in that a committee so well-established as the Finance Committee of the Senate was not able to prevent the Senate itself from rewriting the bill. The Senate took a $300,000,000 bill and made it a $480,000,000 bill—not quite double, but nearly double, the amount the House bill would have raised. The significant thing was not so much the additional taxes as the change of philosophy of the taxation; and here on the floor of the Senate, largely by means of amendments emanating from Senators who are not members of the Finance Committee, the bill was almost entirely rewritten.

Our danger in legislating at times like these is that we fix our eyes upon the things that ought to be corrected; we are dazzled by the glaring misfeasance, and we are apt to go too far in our legislation. I think that was true in the National Securities Act. We sought to end certain abuses in the securities business, and, with our eyes dazzled by the conduct of certain groups in banking realms, in order to correct that misfeasance we took action which is apt to break down the whole structure. None of us want to do that, but it is almost inevitable when we legislate in times of excitement.

I think the same thing might be said in reference to the Stock Exchange Act, and certainly it is true in reference to taxation. In times such as the present, when we need money, we are apt to abandon fundamentally sound principles and accept theories that never have been worked out, in the hope of raising largely increased revenues. We are apt, however, to decrease the revenue by that course. In other words, our legislation has a tendency to break down the very ability we are hoping to build up.

Mr. President, no substantial recovery is possible in this or any other country that does not keep within the realms of sound finance, whether it be taxation or whether it be borrowing and creating obligations.

If we cannot meet our maturing obligations by taxation—and we know we cannot—then we must resort to borrowing. We have reached the point where we cannot borrow on long-term obligations. Therefore we are limited to short-term obligations. If we do not succeed in our short-term borrowings, there is not a man alive who can tell what will happen.

The success or lack of success of the Treasury in the past few weeks in long-term borrowings is ominous. These obligations, in the language of the President, are coming due. If we find ourselves unable to borrow in order to meet them, that will be an announcement of bankruptcy; and the moment we are unable to maintain the Federal Government's record of credit, so that its obligations can be sold at par or above par, that moment we have reached the danger point.

Mr. President, few people have taken the time to analyze our financial structure. The very backbone of it is the Federal Reserve System. The Federal Reserve System has not a large capital. Its purchases are very largely of Liberty bonds. It would not take a very great discount of Liberty bonds to embarrass the Federal Reserve System. I know that I am touching a very sensitive nerve here. If there is a margin of discount growing out of the failure of the Government to meet its obligations, it will immediately react upon the largest holder of these obligations, the Federal Reserve System. A margin of from 10 to 12 points would be sufficient not only to undermine but to put in deadly jeopardy the Federal Reserve System of the country.

I do not know how other people may look at the matter; but with the continuing increase of Government obligations, which aggregate, this year, over seven and a half billion dollars more than we are taking in, if we fail to meet any one of them by our inability to finance them there will be immediately a break in the credit of the Government, and it will be faced with a recognition of the breakdown of its credit, or will have to meet the emergency by the issuance of greenbacks.

I am speaking in the presence of men who without doubt know that unless there is a change in the current, the President will be compelled to resort to the issuance of greenbacks before the year is over. When we start on that path we shall be on the way that Germany took, because when once we begin printing paper as noninterest-bearing money to pay the Government's expenses we shall have started on a road the end of which we cannot see.

That is why I am impressed with this message and why I wonder whether or not the President will resort to the authority he already has to pay Government obligations in non-interest-bearing money, which means in greenbacks. I do not know how this matter appears to my colleagues, but, in my judgment, the situation is a most serious one. Last night we passed the revenue bill under the pressure of those who desire to change the policy of our taxing method, in the belief that they can gain larger revenues by attacking measures and practices which heretofore have always been regarded as legitimate. I do not know what the consequences of our action will be.

We have made it impossible, by the action of the Senate, for any profitable corporation to invest any of its reserves in the stock of any other corporation. To me that was a silly proposal; and in the end, instead of increasing the taxes, it will decrease the taxes. That, however, is not the worst feature of our action. It is clogging the very channels of corporate prosperity.

Mr. President, while we are increasing every hour the burdens of the Government, we are also increasing the burdens of the taxpayers; and while we are dependent upon the taxpayer to relieve the burdens of the Government, in the degree that we are increasing the burdens we are decreasing his ability to meet them; and not only that, but we are in a stage of enacting penalizing legislation. We pass legislation here which virtually clogs all the channels of corporate investment upon which a productive industry must depend. I mean by that that no local industry can depend wholly upon borrowing from banks, because most of them are in the red and no bank will loan to any industry that is in the red. We are increasing the burdens, decreasing the ability to meet the burdens, and at the same time clogging the channels of recovery.

There is not any one call that is so loud and so commanding as the call to reduce the expenses of the Government.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I desire to say that we are constantly increasing the indebtedness of the country at a rate that is bewildering. We are constantly decreasing the ability of business to meet these obligations. We are not only crippling business but we are blocking the channels of recovery. We are making it impossible to meet our obligations by taxes. We are making it very difficult to meet them by borrowing.

The long-term channel is closed already, notably because nobody is going to risk a long-term obligation of the Government under present circumstances. The short-term bond is the only thing remaining; and if the obligations of the Government become so great that we cannot meet them by the short-term method, then resort to greenbacks will be necessary. I state as my judgment that before the year closes we shall have launched on that inflation policy, as there will be no other way to take. I deplore the prospect, but it is obvious to anyone who examines the figures that that will be the consummation.

THE PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO MAKE REPRESENTATION IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES DEPEND ON CITIZENSHIP INSTEAD OF POPULATION

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I wish to discuss Senate Joint Resolution 10, introduced by me. This joint resolution makes representation in the House of Representatives depend not on mere population, as at present, but upon citizenship. It has come to be known as the "stop-alien representation" amendment.

In all probability, because the proposed amendment would affect only the make-up and membership of the House, the Senate will not act until the House shall have acted. However, the principle involved was discussed when an attempt was made to insert such a provision in the Apportionment Act of 1929. There are special reasons why prompt submission of the amendment is necessary. It is none too soon for the Members of this body to have in mind the vital interests involved.

I believe one or two resolutions looking to this end were introduced in previous Congresses by men not now Members of the Senate. Several resolutions were first introduced in the House, and later introduced here.

All those who have promoted this proposal in the House have finally agreed upon a single resolution, House Joint Resolution 36, introduced by Mr. TARVER, of Georgia. In addition to the fact of this agreement, this particular joint resolution, identical with Senate Joint Resolution 10, is the particular measure which was favorably reported by the decisive vote of about two to one by the House Judiciary Committee in the Seventy-first and Seventy-second Congresses.

The main difference between Senate Joint Resolution 10, which has this precedent of approval by the House committee, and most of those which were withdrawn in its favor, is that it is single, separate, and self-contained. These other resolutions proposed to accomplish the same result by amending the fourteenth amendment. The objection to that was that it needlessly introduced a totally irrelevant issue—the Negro question. The Supreme Court of the United States has upheld as constitutional all of the election laws adopted by the Southern States, but that does not prevent the adherents and defenders of alien representation from attempting to inject a fictitious Negro issue in the amendment in order to kill any proposal to abolish alien representation.

This was actually done in the House in connection with the adoption of the Apportionment Act. While I believe the inclusion of a provision of this kind into the apportionment law was unconstitutional, being in effect an effort to amend the Constitution by statute, nevertheless the effort proved interesting and valuable. It unmasked the tactics of the opposition. However, these opponents thereby prevented the final adoption of this principle, although it had passed the House in Committee of the Whole by the really remarkable vote of 183 to 123, in spite of the doubt of its constitutionality. Such a doubt decisively defeated a similar proposal on this side of the Capitol.

It must be admitted that any opening up of the fourteenth amendment does open up its whole content; otherwise this simple proposal to make representation in Congress depend on citizenship would inevitably be lost sight of in the unnecessary rancor that would be stirred up.

Therefore, it can be understood in advance that any attempt to accomplish this purpose by that means represents either lack of appreciation of the dangers involved in it, or inconsiderate insistence upon some personal point of view regardless of consequences, or is an expression of hostility to the proposal.

I felt that this explanation was necessary in order to make the situation clear to all members of this body who have not paid special attention to this question.

The basic fact involved in this whole question is that the balance of power in some of the most vital functions of the Government of the United States today rests not with representatives of citizens of the United States, but with a comparatively small number of representatives of unnaturalized foreigners. Whenever the margin in the other House is close, this alien population may vote control of the Government away from the representatives of a majority of the citizenship.

To avoid such a serious contingency is the purpose, and the only purpose, of Senate Joint Resolution 10, which, leaving out the former preamble and giving only that part which, upon adoption, will be printed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, provides:

Article XX. Aliens shall be excluded from the count of the whole number of persons in each State in apportioning Representatives among the several States according to their respective numbers.

Mr. President, in what I have to say I have drawn freely from the material made available by earlier studies of a former Member of Congress from my own State, the Honorable Homer Hoch, who has discussed this question at length on more than one occasion before the Committee on the Judiciary of the other branch of the Congress.

Let me say that the word "alien" is no term of reproach. It is merely the legal term for an unnaturalized foreigner who is still a citizen of another nation, and owes his allegiance to another government.

When the Constitution was drafted, not only was there no such thing as the stirring up of the peasantry of Europe by great steamboat companies in order that they might make profits by bringing people to the United States, but the steamboat itself had not been invented.

The men who laid the foundation of this Nation never conceived the possibility of immigration either so great or of such a character that it would be difficult to assimilate. A large proportion of those who started the new Republic on its way had themselves come from across the water. They came to become citizens. Most of them spoke a common language. Most of them were accustomed to the institutions which furnished the historic foundation and the cultural background for whatever was revolutionary in this New World venture.

One of the fondest boasts of admirers of the Constitution is of the flexibility which has made it possible to adapt it to new conditions. And I wish to make clear that there is ample precedent already established within the United States for the simple adjustment which is necessary to correct an injustice and remove a very real peril.

The largest State in the Union, which has the largest city and which contains by far more aliens than any other State, has for 37 years refused to tolerate this absurd and dangerous possibility of alien control in its State affairs. The Constitution of the State of New York adopted in 1894 contained in its apportionment section a simple provision excluding aliens from the count of the State population for representation in the State legislature. There has been no serious objection to this on the ground that it was an attack upon aliens, or that it worked injustice to aliens, or that it raised any racial or religious issue. Of course, it is obvious that there is no partisan issue involved in it.

That this provision in the Constitution of the State of New York has stood unchallenged for a full generation and throughout the period of greatest immigration proves there is no serious objection to the principle. Whatever objections are now raised to the application of this principle to Congress by amendment of the Constitution of the United States are afterthoughts prompted by political expediency or by special interests. They have no root in the basic values which ought to be our sole concern in settling a question that should be disposed of early and promptly.

However, New York is not the only State. Maine, Massachusetts, North Carolina, Tennessee, my own State of Kansas, Idaho, and California have substantially the same provision excluding aliens, or at least a provision which is equal to the exclusion of aliens from the count for representation in the State legislature.

As the New England States, the Middle Atlantic States, the deeper South, the border States, the Central West, the far West, and the Pacific coast are all represented in this list, it is definitely and conclusively established that the principle of representation of citizens only is recognized by the people of every section of this country. This fact is further established by the 183 votes cast for this proposition the first time it ever came to a vote in the lower House, and then in a form of dubious constitutionality.

The friends of aliens have accepted the exclusion of alien representation, of which New York is the most noteworthy example, as just, proper, and a perfectly natural thing. Radical forces find their best soil in the cities. The unnaturalized foreigner who dwells among us need only exercise his privilege of becoming a citizen of the United States to be welcome to enjoy the full benefits of citizenship. Virtually one half the population of New York City consists of aliens who do not care enough about the land in which they live to become naturalized citizens. Yet under a contingency not foreseen by the makers of our Constitution these aliens may some day decide who shall be President of the United States. In voting power alone in the House these aliens have given New York six and a half times the strength of Kansas in legislation affecting the welfare of the people of New York home State.

Mr. President, all that is involved in Senate Joint Resolution 10 is the simple question of citizenship and allegiance. No matter where one was born, if he has embraced the open opportunity under the generous and liberal laws of the United States to become a citizen, he is entitled to representation, as a matter of right, on exactly the same basis as those who were born here. Everybody knows that many people who have come from other lands are today better Americans at heart than thousands who were born in this country.

Having established a basis both in precedent and reason for the correction of this part of the Constitution, let us now consider just what has been the status for 20 years, and is still true of this Congress.

The last apportionment prior to the one automatically effective the 4th of March 1931 was made following the census of 1910. The congressional ratio was one Representative for something over 211,000 of population, with due regard to the fact that every State, no matter how small its population, was entitled to at least one Representative.

There was no apportionment following the 1920 census, but dividing the number of aliens shown by that census—something over 7,400,000—by the last congressional ratio, which, though not exactly accurate, is approximate, we find that there were some 34 Representatives in the Seventy-second Congress, and in eight or nine Congresses preceding, who represented no one but these millions of unnaturalized foreigners.

There is no need for me to argue that 34 Members of Congress made a balance of power in the House of Representatives, in face of the fact that the minority party organized the House on the strength of a majority of four and a plurality of five in the Seventy-second Congress.

Alien representation in the United States does not stop with mere representation in the legislative body, as it does in the States. The 34 Representatives, representing these unnaturalized foreigners, give these New York aliens, under the Constitution of the United States, 34 representatives in the electoral college. Within the recollection of all the Members of this body, a Presidential election has been decided by a much smaller number than 34. Charles Evans Hughes, now Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, was defeated for President in 1916 by President Woodrow Wilson by the electoral vote of the single State of California, which then did not have the equal of half of 34 electoral votes.

There is still another respect in which alien representation means more in Congress than in State legislatures. Roughly speaking, there are two delegates to the national convention of each major party for each electoral vote. That means that the 34 electoral votes which these unnaturalized foreigners have because of their 34 Representatives in Congress also give them 68 delegates to both the Republican national convention and the Democratic national convention. Anybody who knows anything about politics knows that a much smaller margin than 68 frequently swings a convention to or away from some outstanding candidate.

Alien representation alone in this and preceding Congresses has given New York, which has had the most aliens, seven extra Representatives—six from New York City.

As Tammany controls New York City, this means that Tammany controls these additional Congressmen along with the rest of the Tammany Representatives. The same thing is true, in proportion, with the Tammany sort of city political organizations in the other big cities with large alien concentration. The presence of these representatives of aliens in the Congress of the United States may easily constitute a turning point in United States history, as we have seen.

Mr. President, the representation of aliens in Congress may determine a Presidential election in this country, entirely apart from their voting weight in the electoral college, due to any additional electors who owe their existence as such solely to the padded congressional representation.

The Constitution requires the vote of a majority of the electoral college to elect a President. If there should again be three candidates for President, and the third candidate should receive any considerable number of electoral votes, it might easily happen that no candidate would have a majority. This would automatically throw the election of President into the House of Representatives. In that case each State would have one vote, and that vote necessarily would be determined by a majority vote in the caucus of the House membership from that State.

This is not a partisan question. I take it that any honest, fair-minded, sportsmanlike Democrat desires that Democratic victories shall be based upon representation only of citizens of the United States.

An idea of how this alien representation operates was furnished by the editor of the National Methodist Press in an article published throughout the Nation in the Christian Advocate, the official organ of the Methodist Episcopal Church. As pointed out by this national editor of the great religious journal, at the election at which one New York Tammany Representative was first sent to the House of Representatives in one district in New York there was cast a total of 7,900 votes for the congressional candidates of the three largest parties. This editor contrasted that with a Kansas district at which more than 76,000 votes were cast at the same election, showing that one voter in this New York district got nearly 10 times as much representation as one voter in a district of my own State of Kansas. Yet New York newspapers have had the nerve to talk about rural control of Congress, and have seriously stated again and again that rural sections have several times as much representation in Congress in proportion as city sections. Any such statement is based either upon ignorance, which is not excusable in such molders of public opinion as our great newspapers, or else it is prompted by a desire to deceive in order to serve the selfish interests of the cities.

The congressional representation given to each State is worked out according to a mathematical formula. Each State has as many districts as the congressional ratio goes into its population, and nothing fairer than the major fraction method of assignment of left-over Representatives has yet been devised. As nearly as is humanly possible, provision is made nationally for every resident of the entire United States, regardless of the State in which he lives, or whether he resides in city or country, to have equal representation.

A citizen of New York City, even though he be a part of the Tammany machine, has just as much right to be represented in Congress, so long as our Constitution stands, as either a farm owner or a farm hand in the State of Kansas. But he has no right to any more representation than the Kansas farmer merely because a lot of aliens have settled in New York City.

The present situation, which the New York newspapers and the newspapers of other big cities conveniently ignore or seek to conceal, is that a million citizens of the United States, native and naturalized, today have more representation than a million United States citizens in Kansas or a million citizens of the United States in up-State New York. These citizens of New York City have this padded representation solely through counting for representation in Congress about a million and a quarter unnaturalized foreigners in New York City. This is the thing the proposed amendment would stop, and it ought to be stopped. No newspaper can expect to make intelligent citizens believe that stopping it would be wrong or unjust to somebody.

Mr. President, I believe that every patriotic Democrat and every patriotic Republican will gladly take the position that he does not desire any advantage that is not fundamentally sound or morally just.

One objection that has been urged to the proposed amendment is that with the limitation upon immigration the number of aliens would soon become negligible and that the amendment would be useless. If that were true, it would be entitled to serious consideration; but it does not stand up in face of the facts. As contrasted with something over 7,400,000 aliens reported by the 1920 census, the 1930 census, covering the period through which this drastic limitation on immigration has been in force, is nearly 6,300,000, or, to be exact, 6,282,504, as shown by the complete figures given out for the first time by the Census Bureau on December 23, 1931.

It is true that this includes those who have taken out their first papers, which is proper, just as intelligent, American-born high-school graduates of 20 years of age still cannot be included in lists of voters. There is no assurance that any particular person will complete the process of naturalization, which alone makes him a citizen, and he is indisputably an alien until he actually becomes a citizen. This also includes those who are unknown, which again is correct, because every foreign-born person must be presumed to be still an alien until it is established that he is a citizen.

It is obvious that with a smaller number of aliens, and with a larger congressional ratio, the number being decreased approximately 15 percent, and the congressional ratio increased approximately 33 percent, there will be fewer Representatives of aliens in Congress, and therefore in the electoral college and the nominating conventions. The division of the larger congressional ratio of something like 280,000 into the 6,282,504 alien total gives something over 22 Representatives in Congress. This, of course, is not absolutely exact, because there are many human factors involved. It is as close an approximation as can be made, for experience indicates that the fractions equalize each other.

There is another factor, Mr. President, which the opposition has conveniently kept out of sight, namely that although the number of actual Representatives of unnaturalized foreigners in Congress was smaller in the Seventy-third Congress than it was in the preceding Congress, and has been for nearly 20 years, the injustice will be greater, because hereafter alien representation will be at the expense of citizen representation, instead of merely being in addition to the representation of citizens.

The point is very simple. Heretofore, to avoid the unpleasantness involved in reducing the representation of any State, it has been the custom to find a ratio which would take care of the increase of population in the States which had grown, but not take any Representative away from any State which had not grown or kept pace with the general growth. Then the size of the House has been increased by whatever number might be necessary to accomplish this purpose.

By this process the size of the House was steadily increased, decade after decade, until the present total of 435 was reached. This was so generally recognized as the limit for practical convenience that one of the first things to be settled in connection with the new apportionment was that there should be no increase.

Congress failed to make an apportionment after the 1920 census. The population increased in the 20 years following the previous apportionment from 92,000,000 to 122,000,000, in round figures, or an increase of approximately one third—roughly speaking, the increase being one quarter of the present population.

This meant that it would take 108 Representatives out of a total of 435 to represent the increase alone. As the membership was not increased, constituencies for the 108 had to be found by shifting Representatives from the sections which had stood still or even lost in population to the sections which had grown. Obviously, since the increase was virtually entirely in the cities, this involved a tremendous loss of representation from the rural, American-minded, citizen-populated sections, covering not merely the farm districts but the hamlets, little villages, and smaller cities in the agricultural counties. This loss of representation to them was shifted as an increase of political power to the cities—mainly the big cities, with their alien influence, and frequently their complete alien domination.

The first fruit, and the only immediately visible result capable of proof by official figures, was the shift of 27 congressional districts from 21 States over to 11 other States, as made in the apportionment which became automatically effective March 4, 1931, under the Apportionment Law of 1929. However, this really represents only the smallest part of the shift, the biggest movement being inside of State lines, having no bearing upon the congressional reapportionment, and entirely outside the jurisdiction of the Census Bureau or of Congress itself.

Although, as I have indicated, the increase in population, with the necessary shift in representation because of it, calls for the shifting of 108 Representatives in Congress from rural districts to city districts, or at least from rural control or rural emphasis in spirit over to city control and domination only one quarter of this 108 is represented by the shift from certain States to certain other States. All the rest of the shift is entirely within State lines.

It is impossible for anybody to make any dogmatic statement, and prove it, respecting the exact size and character of this shift within State lines or the degree of city domination which has been substituted for a given degree of rural influence. However, in 1910 the rural and village population was almost 60 percent of the total population, with only a little over 40 percent in the urban sections. By 1930 that proportion had almost been reversed. Accordingly, it is evident that there has been a shift, in whole or in part, affecting virtually all of the remaining 81 districts.

Mr. President, the big thing that stands out in all of this—a fact which never existed before in this connection—is that for the first time in the history of the country representation has been taken away from American-citizen constituencies in the rural sections to enable the big cities to retain an unjustly swollen representation by counting their unnaturalized foreign populations.

I am not and never have been one of those who seek to stir up prejudice and feeling as between different sections within the citizenship of the United States. However, every resident of the rural United States, whether a native-born American or a naturalized citizen, has a right to insist—and it is my duty as the representative of such constituencies to insist with all the earnestness I can summon—that representation shall not be taken away from citizens of the United States to continue the absurdity and the peril involved in representation of an unnaturalized foreign element. It is unquestionable that this element is exploited and is illegally voted in State and local elections by the corrupt political gangs of the great cities.

We cannot help ourselves or avert the peril to the Nation involved in the possibility of the decision of national elections by illegal voting of unnaturalized foreigners at the polls manned by henchmen of corrupt city political organizations. But we can at least prevent the voting of aliens, through representatives controlled by such organizations, in the Congress of the United States when the census figures give us an accurate check and a means of self-defense.

Mr. President, the present system does violence to the whole idea of representative government. The basic democratic idea, as worked out in highly practical operation exemplifying the old New England town meeting, was that all of the people qualified for a voice in the government came together and settled the pending issues immediately and directly. That became too cumbersome as the population grew, so the system of representation in States and the National Government, as well as in the smaller units, grew up.

Always, however, the idea has been that the representative voted in Congress, for example, in place of all of the voters of his district who would have voted if it had been feasible to get them together for that purpose. Obviously it is ridiculous that there should be voting representatives of those who cannot vote at the polls or could not vote in a popular mass meeting, if such a thing could be called. Yet that is precisely the condition which exists in this country under the present system of voting representation of unnaturalized foreigners who cannot legally vote at the polls in any State in this country.

I am making that last statement advisedly. As brought out in the hearings before the House Judiciary Committee by the Representative from my State in the Seventieth Congress, Mr. Hoch, and reprinted in the hearings before the same committee in the Seventy-first Congress, the last State in the Union to permit an alien to vote upon taking out first papers or announcing an intention of becoming a citizen of the United States and complying with the State laws respecting residence, and so forth, has withdrawn that privilege by amendment of the State constitution.

As pointed out by Mr. Hoch, there were, as recently as 1917, seven States—Arkansas, Indiana, my own State of Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, South Dakota, and Texas—in which an alien might vote, though a mere declaration of intention did not make him a citizen. Every one of those States has since 1917 changed its State constitution, so that there is no State in the Union today where an alien can legally vote until after he has been fully naturalized and met the other conditions of suffrage in the State.

The proposed amendment, therefore, is in harmony with the clearly defined trend throughout the States of the Union as indicated by the list I gave of the eight States which prevent representation of aliens in the State legislature, and by the six additional States, Kansas being the only one on both lists, which have so recently changed their constitutions to prevent aliens voting at the polls within the State.

As not one of the 48 States now permits alien voting at the polls, the time is fully ripe to put an end to the anachronism of alien-voting representation in Congress and the electoral college.

It is highly important that the single point involved in this amendment be kept free from confusion with totally different and irrelevant issues.

I have previously referred to the effort made in the House to inject the Negro issue in connection with the attempt to incorporate this principle in the apportionment statute. However, as that question is already fully covered by an amendment to the Constitution, there can be no possible point in attempting to adopt another amendment on it, or to inject that issue into the consideration of another amendment respecting an entirely different subject matter. There is nothing involved in the proposed amendment to stop alien representation which even touches the Negro issue at all, because, with very few exceptions, representing largely persons from the West Indies, an inconsiderable factor in the total, the Negroes, having been born here, are citizens of the United States.

I am perfectly willing to face any legitimate issue that involves protecting the rights of the colored man, but I naturally and legitimately protest against any effort, hostile in purpose, and without regard to the real interests of the Negro race, to tangle that question up with the perfectly plain and simple one of who shall be represented in determining the policy of the Government of the United States—citizens of the United States or citizens of some other country.

This amendment likewise has nothing whatever to do with the question of who shall come to this country and how many shall come, for it does not touch the immigration laws. The questions raised by them are entitled to be settled on their own merits. Nor does the proposal to stop representation of aliens have the slightest thing to do with the question of the conditions under which aliens may become citizens, for the proposed amendment has nothing whatever to do with the naturalization laws. Frankly, I recognize the desirability of awakening the public to the proper aspects of Americanism and a scrutiny of the naturalization laws, and particularly of their administration.

For example, take a case like that reported in the New York papers early in 1928. In the county of the Bronx, the third most populous of the five counties entirely within New York City, 10,000 aliens were naturalized in 2 weeks, a thousand a day, herded into court in four squads of 250 each, and perfunctorily lectured and turned loose to vote for Tammany candidates. That ought to be looked into. Nobody can seriously believe that all of these 10,000 fully complied with the provisions of the naturalization laws.

The proposed amendment would not take away any right from any alien who is resident in this country. His most important right is that of becoming a citizen. Until he has been here long enough to qualify, if he desires, and certainly in case he does not so desire, his stay here is entirely a matter of permission, subject to the regulations this Government sees fit to impose in protecting the interests of its own citizens.

Mr. President, the opposition to this amendment is hard put to it to find plausible objections. One objection which is urged with a vehemence that reminds me of that Fourth of July waving of the flag which has now largely taken the place of the old "waving the bloody shirt", is that "the aliens pay taxes and therefore are entitled to representation, because to withhold representation is taxation without representation", and these perfervid orators fight the Revolution all over again.

I do not intend to dignify with overmuch attention this flimsy claim, and yet I cannot afford to pass it by without some mention, lest those who offer it be encouraged to believe they have said something sensible. The alien, in return for his taxes, gets police protection for himself, his family, and his property. He has a chance to work or do business in this country. He has an opportunity to share in the prosperity that has characterized virtually our entire national existence and is again on its way back. He has also a chance to become a citizen unless he belongs to that small class who are barred for recognized and established reasons of national policy.

Further, the alien is free from imperative obligation to bear arms. It is true that many aliens served in the World War, some of them as volunteers, and an appreciative Nation recognized this and made it easier for them to become citizens. However, according to figures from the War Department, brought out in the debate on this question 3 years ago, of nearly a million aliens of draft age the majority claimed and obtained exemption. They remained here in safety, taking, and holding after the war, the positions of multiplied tens of thousands of our young citizens, native and naturalized, who went to the front and risked making the supreme sacrifice.

However, the fact which, in my judgment, is conclusive on this question of taxation and representation as applied to this issue is this. Even the citizens of the United States who live in our two Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and of course are taxed, have no representation in Congress, simply because those Territories are not States. If a citizen of the United States who, for example, has helped develop the wealth of Alaska, braving the discomforts and even the dangers of that rigorous climate and rough country to increase the wealth of the Nation, and who is taxed in proportion as his efforts have been rewarded by success, can thus be denied a vote in Congress through a duly elected representative, how can it be seriously maintained that citizens of any of the nations of Europe should be entitled to voting representation in our Congress?

If citizens of the United States living in the District of Columbia have no vote in Congress because they have no vote at the polls, then certainly there is no reason why a million and a quarter unnaturalized foreigners resident in New York, with no legal vote at the polls, should have voting representation in Congress.

Objections against the fairness and soundness of the proposed amendment need only be fully explained to fall of their own weight.

Mr. President, one objection is that the aliens will become naturalized until there are no more aliens here and the proposed amendment will then be worthless and have no meaning, since the need for it will have ceased. If this were true, it would be important; but unfortunately for these objectors, the facts are against them.

In the first place, under our laws the Asiatics of entirely different races are not entitled to become naturalized and become citizens, and there are enough of them to make this an element entitled to consideration.

Then, in addition, there are many aliens here illegally. They are all criminals, in the sense that they have violated our immigration laws; and many of them are actual criminals of the sort that would not be admitted through the Nation's front door, even though there were no restrictions upon immigration except the obvious ones designed to protect the Nation against criminals, defectives, and those calculated to become public charges.

In debates in Congress 3 years ago estimates were given on the floor of one House or the other that there were at that time 3,000,000 aliens in this country illegally. The Government has since arrested 20 to 30 persons connected with the management of a single racketeer ring for alien smuggling. According to published reports, this ring had brought in thousands of aliens and cleaned up $100,000,000 in the process. Whether or not these estimates are excessive, Supreme Court Justice Dike, of Brooklyn, in greater New York, has estimated, as published in the press, that there are at least 2,000,000 alien criminals in this country.

While, of course, there has been some fraud in naturalization by means of forgery of essential papers, the Government is increasingly detecting and stopping this. The majority of these aliens bootlegged across the borders will not dare attempt naturalization for fear of discovery of their illegal entry and deportation.

In this connection there is the possibility that the census count of 6,282,504 aliens does not cover the full number that are here. Human nature being what it is, it is entirely probable that a considerable proportion of those aliens who entered this country illegally carefully avoided being enumerated in the census, and were protected by their compatriots for fear the information or their unwillingness to give the information desired might lead to proceedings which would send them back.

Of course, if they were not counted they do not figure in the basis of representation. However, 10 years from now, after they shall have become bolder, while still probably not daring to attempt naturalization, they are likely to be enumerated and in future apportionments to be represented, although they are here in violation of our laws.

Then, too, Tammany has the most perfect system of exploiting aliens which has been developed in this country. Tammany has every incentive to naturalize every possible alien in order to vote him and so perpetuate Tammanyism; and yet, according to the last State census of New York, there were still more than a million unnaturalized foreigners in New York City. So it becomes apparent that, aside from those who are disqualified, there are many aliens in the country who have no intention of becoming citizens.

However, the principle involved is a fundamental and vital one; and this amendment is just and righteous and will be imperatively called for so long as a citizen constituency large enough to make up a single district in a single State is deprived of representation in order to allow the big cities to retain an indefensibly padded representation by counting the citizens of other nations.

Mr. President, I venture the prediction that when the American people fully comprehend this situation they will make a vigorous demand for a prompt correction of the situation under which New York and other great cities are able to capitalize politically their not merely unassimilated but their also unnaturalized foreign population.

To this extent I frankly admit that one of the purposes of this amendment is to help crush alien power in United States politics. Anything that is alien has no right to be political in this country. I believe the time has come when we should put a premium on United States citizenship. It is evident that we cannot put a premium on citizenship by cheapening it.
